COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

AFTERNOON SESSION—2 P M.

Chairman WALSH. You may proceed now, Mr. Weinstock.

TESTIMONY OF MR. EDWARD L. DOYLE—Continued.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you ready, Mr. Doyle?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you tell the commission what were the conditions of the coal camps of Louisville, Lafayette, Superior, and Marshall, as to being inclosed before the strike.

Mr. DOYLE. You mean as a private property inclosed?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. Why, they were not closed, as I understand it. I believe in Lafayette it is within the corporate limits of the town, but it has been since inclosed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But before the strike it was not inclosed?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were men permitted to buy where they desired before the strike?

Mr. DOYLE. In the northern field?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. I think so. We had that article in the agreement, the operators agreed in writing to permit the men to buy, while they had a contract with the mine.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were the towns located on company property?

Mr. DOYLE. Not Lafayette nor Louisville; I think not Superior; Marshall may have been; Erie was not; Puritan, I believe, is. Frederick, I think, is an independent town.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were the men permitted a checkweighman in those districts?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; where the organization—while they had a contract.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What were the wages paid in above camps?

Mr. DOYLE. Three-ten per day for company men, that is, the day workers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. Eleven cents, I believe, per foot, for machine runner and helper, divided 5 cents for the helper, and 6 for the runner; and a tonnage price from 34½, if I remember correctly, to 43½ for machine-mined coal, and I believe 62 to 68½ cents for pick-mined coal per ton.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were those standard wages, Mr. Doyle?

Mr. DOYLE. They are what we consider the—the basic point was Louisville, Colo., where they received 39½ cents per ton for machine-mined coal; there were several mines that paid less than that. One of them was 3 cents, and two or more, anyhow two, 5 cents less than that per ton.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. These, then, were the maximum wages?

Mr. DOYLE. As compared with other places in Colorado, I do not know what the tonnage price was in the various mines; I don't think there was any uniformity about it in the southern field; there may have been; but I personally never have worked down there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You do not know any other field in Colorado where the wages were higher than these places?

Mr. DOYLE. I had heard it said a number of times that it was higher in southern Colorado. They paid 55 cents for loading coal, the way it is told, that they paid 55 cents per ton for loading coal, to the miner, that after they had paid all overhead costs and the coal on the car, that it has cost them only 55 cents; so you can imagine for yourself the size of the ton.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can you tell us how many accidents they have had in the mines of these camps in the last 10 years?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I could not. I think that could be had from the records of the State mine inspector.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But you have no record?

Mr. DOYLE. I have no figures put up on that. I have some figures here on accidents just prior to and since the strike, and also some figures pertaining to injuries in the last report of the State mine inspector; but for particular camps, I have none.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, now, is it or not a fact that the strike in the northern part of the State has compelled companies to build towns which are inclosed towns?

Mr. DOYLE. I think not. I think that that was the procedure taken by the companies for the purpose of simply separating themselves from the men who were the residents of those towns, as a rebuke, as a punishment to those men who were citizens and who owned property in those towns, for daring to have the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, does it seem reasonable, Mr. Doyle, that intelligent business men will go to a very great expense if there is no occasion for it?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, that has always been one of the problems in my mind, to understand why these men, whom I believe otherwise intelligent, should be so unreasonable and use such little reason in business affairs simply because they were perhaps controlled by their prejudices.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it, then, that you want this commission to believe that these mine owners in the north went to a needless and great expenditure simply out of a feeling of prejudice to some?

Mr. DOYLE. Prejudice, I think, is about the main reason. Perhaps there is a little greed in that, and maybe a little ignorance, but they could have accomplished the same results without having done so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Tell us what opportunity would there be for greed to gain anything by that, to go to an expense, a needless expense.

Mr. DOYLE. Ignorance of the fact that organized labor is more profitable in the long run than unorganized labor. And being so prejudiced and narrow-minded that they did not intend to keep up with organized labor, or permit it to establish itself in this State, or let those men, if we call them that, control themselves. That is my judgment of the matter in this matter of a strike—and spending lots of money, and, in fact, I believe far more money than all the demands of the miners ever made against them would have amounted to in a number of years. For instance, Mr. Shumway testified before the legislative investigating committee that they normally employed a thousand men in those mines operated by their companies in the northern field, and that in a period of 12 months they had imported and employed—he didn't say imported all of them—but they had employed eight thousand seven hundred and some odd more men, changing the force nearly nine times in 12 months. I think it was all this waste of money, while other men who were not permitted to work were idle, and are still idle.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand that it cost them more to inclose these towns, a great deal more than the cost would have been if they had accepted the terms of the union?

Mr. DOYLE. Not exactly the building of the fence; I don't mean that, but the expense of opposing the organization—that is, of the arming of the guards, the importing of men, the building of houses, the buying of machine guns, the hiring of detective agencies, and all of those things that go to fight an organization of labor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What need was there for the mine owners to put fences around the mines, to buy guns and ammunition, and to employ guards? What need was there to go to all those expenses?

Mr. DOYLE. I think there was no need for it. As I stated here Saturday, the miners are misrepresented by the public—by those who oppose them—the statements getting out on the theory that they are the people who wish to destroy property; the statement given to the public by the owners that it is for protection of property. While the facts are that these miners did not destroy the property, do not want to destroy property, have sense enough to know that they need that property, especially if they have their homes in that particular community. I believe that all of that arming, etc., is as much for intimidation of the strikers as it is for anything else. I believe that the fences built around the company's property was not so much to protect the property, and to keep the men from getting to it that might destroy it, as it was to keep the man inside the property from getting out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Had there been any actual violations committed in that territory before the town was fenced in?

Mr. DOYLE. I think not. I am not positive; I speak more of Lafayette, having that in mind, but as testified here, I have been away from Lafayette from the fore part of April until sometime in August; and when I had returned this structure was built around the Simpson mine in Lafayette.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There had been no—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). No violations that I know of.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But there is no question but that there had been no acts of violence committed in that district before the towns were fenced?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I never heard of any. I don't recollect them. But I did not say that was not the cause, because the operators that were there. The mine so fixed—Lafayette was fixed or put in great shape so far as mining methods go for a shutdown, or for working of work that could be done very easily by the less experienced men; which indicated to us all there that there was no doubt but what there was premeditation on the part of the companies that they were going to wipe out the organization in that field.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have the American miners left those particular camps?

Mr. DOYLE. No; there are a good many of them there yet.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have a census, have you, of the miners?

Mr. DOYLE. We have a list of members of our organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And approximately, how many members are there there?

Mr. DOYLE. I could give it to you from those figures submitted this morning; I don't know right offhand.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Approximately?

Mr. DOYLE. I should judge perhaps 1,200 miners in those.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, how many of those miners, approximately—of course, you can't give the exact number—how many of those were natives and how many foreigners?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know. The northern field has been mostly American-speaking people, or people who have been here long enough to become Americanized; not a very large percentage of people who have recently come to this country.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That statement you gave us this morning, Mr. Doyle, gives the men out on strike in the northern coal field?

Mr. DOYLE. No; that statement this morning includes striking and working in union mines and under union conditions—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Have you any figures showing how many are on strike?

Mr. DOYLE. Those can be had. We have the actual number we are paying relief to, which is reported week by week; and application is made by the local organization to the district organization for exemption on those that are themselves off, for other reasons, and those paying the per capita, as well as those who by the laws of the organization are permitted to vote, plus the payment on those that report they are working under union conditions and as having paid their dues. So the figures could all be given.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can you tell us what you know about the shooting of the Hecla Heights?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know anything about it other than what I had on the telephone that night, or conversations with the district attorney.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the first place, will you tell us where the Hecla Heights is located?

Mr. DOYLE. Louisville, Colo.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the northern part?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. When did this shooting take place?

Mr. DOYLE. I could give you the date, but I don't want to go into the discussing of it because I am charged with conspiracy to murder in the particular matter.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I will not ask you any particular questions that would in any way embarrass you; but you can certainly tell us the date.

Mr. DOYLE. I will try and look my notes over [referring to a memorandum]. April 27, 1914.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That was this past April?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was that before or after, Mr. Doyle, that the fences were put around these properties?

Mr. DOYLE. Those fences, I understand, were built in 1910.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. 1910. Now, how many people were killed in this Hecla Heights trouble?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You don't know?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were the militiamen in Louisville when the trouble started in the northern coal field?

Mr. DOYLE. That I don't know, either. Let's see if I have anything that will tell me that. I think they went up here—up north—on the 28th of April. I have a note here to that effect—1914.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This shooting occurred there on the 27th?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That would make it the day after the shooting?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was there any trouble after the militia arrived?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't remember of there being any.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would your record there show?

Mr. DOYLE. No. I keep a diary, when anything occurs to me and I am handy enough to mark it down, I generally do so for my own convenience; because I know conspiracies have been arranged that a man who is fighting coal operators and big powers, who is not careful to keep track of where he goes and if he had forgot the place where he had been at a certain time and a crime was committed, and if he couldn't tell where he was he would certainly be apt to be accused of that. And for that reason I try to keep notes, for a man who has as much to do with it as I have has to; and I might be able to learn.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know whether it was common talk among the strikers in the northern field that they would get the militiamen when they returned?

Mr. DOYLE. I never heard of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have heard nobody talk along those lines?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know that the strikers in that part of the State say to the Regular soldiers that they have not given up their arms and that they intend to use them in handling the militiamen when they return to the field?

Mr. DOYLE. I have never heard the statement.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Never heard the statement?

Mr. DOYLE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know what the production of coal has been in the northern field during the strike?

Mr. DOYLE. I think in the northern field that the last figures I saw were about 71 per cent of normal as compared with the same period of time for the year previous to the strike—to the best of my recollection.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is the best of your knowledge and belief; there has been a decrease of 29 per cent in the production?

Mr. DOYLE. Or a failure on the part of the companies to increase it to normal production on account of the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you believe that as a result of the strike, conditions in the northern fields have been bettered by creating the inclosed camps inside of the stockade?

Mr. DOYLE. That would be a question. Now, I would want a little clearer; that is, do you mean to ask me that while the strike was on or after the strike is over as it is now and things have become settled?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, take the conditions as they existed immediately after the strike was called off—I mean, before the strike was called off?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, I think that the conditions are worse in the stockades—"bull pens" we often refer to them as—than they were before the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the strike took place when?

Mr. DOYLE. April 1, 1910.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. 1910—that is about four and a half years ago?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, then, what has the worker in the north gained by virtue of the strike?

Mr. DOYLE. The north itself has not gained by the strike. They have sacrificed to even up, and the south has been the gainer.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What has the worker in the south gained by the strike?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, we did not gain the demands we made at Trinidad, but there is one certain thing, and that, I think, is proved by the correspondence that this commission has had introduced before it, between the C. F. & I. officials here and Rockefeller and others—that the condition that obtained in Colorado previous to the strike will never again obtain in that field; that is, that the operators will have a little bit more regard how they treat the men. The bully policemen or mine guards will not be as vicious as they were. The operators have learned that the miners can and will strike, and know that there is a limit to what they will endure of abuse and oppression put upon them. And though the strike has been called off, the spirit of the men will never permit again such impositions to be heaped upon them as heretofore. You know the men will not stand what they stood before. And then again the company knowing that the men can and will strike will put them in the attitude—at least if they will not do it openly, in their contract drawing to be a little more humane, and to treat their men a little more decently; and the result will be that conditions will be better in those fields, in my opinion, than they have ever been heretofore.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your point, then, is your benefits, whatever they may be, that have been derived by the workers are indirect rather than direct?

Mr. DOYLE. They are indirect for some reasons. If all of the publicity that has come out in regard to this matter right now, if that had been brought out six months ago, the end of the strike would have been called before. There is no doubt but that the language of the letter from Mr. Welborn to Mr. Rockefeller and others shows that they were in a state of mind of not knowing what to do, and not in touch with public opinion, and if the exposures brought out by that correspondence were known in the community, it would have put the operators in such a hole that they would have been compelled to recognize their deficiency, even though they were such a power. And I think that the public eye is focused on the State of Colorado, and although the operators refused to accept the proposition of President Wilson—in spite of that the union officials came here and called off the strike; and the sympathy of the world is with the strikers, and I think the operators know that, but will not admit it; and I believe that the grievances of the miners will receive more consideration, and, I believe, if they do not, that there is a public that has had enough of this matter and feel sure that it will have proper consideration by this commission appointed by President Wilson. Then, too, I do not think the coal companies want to go through anything more like this and will do something to be decent to the men.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are one of those that believes, in the last analysis, it is public opinion that counts?

Mr. DOYLE. I think public opinion ought to be considered, and I think if the public could get the full facts on both sides in any controversy it would be settled before there was any strike. I think that the public is entitled to consideration, for that reason that our organization begged and pleaded for a conference before the strike, in order to avert a strike—which was refused; and I think that if such a conference was had the strike would have been averted, if for no reason than for the sake of the public.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are one, then, who is of the opinion that the public sentiment is the last factor that tells?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; I think it is a decided factor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). If, however, an organization of labor had everything in its favor to win, if the public were against them, justly or not, the organization would fail.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The statement has been made, I heard it many times, and you have doubtless, that no lockout can succeed, no strike can succeed, unless public sentiment and public opinion are behind them.

Mr. DOYLE. Well, it can not succeed perhaps in the degree it ought to, but it depends upon the size of the lockout and strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I refer to a large strike, of course.

Mr. DOYLE. If it were a little, insignificant strike, it may be settled, perhaps, contrary to public opinion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. We are speaking of great strikes that command national attention.

Mr. DOYLE. I think strikes are usually settled by public opinion, when they reach such a stage as this one has. I think, after the strike has been called off, the public are with the miners, and were before it was called, and will be more after calling it off.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then if these strikes in the north—in the northern field—that have failed and in the south were called off, would that not indicate that public sentiment was not behind the strike?

Mr. DOYLE. Not necessarily. Public opinion may be based upon something that was not correct. And while it may be that it caused the end of the strike, at the same time it would not indicate that the principles for which the strike was called were not correct, or that the demands were not reasonable or right. It depends upon the information the public had and what it formed opinion on.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Surely. There has never been a strike in this country where the public had a better opportunity to get information on both sides in regard to the strike because of the many investigations that have been made and the great amount of publicity given to the world.

Mr. DOYLE. That is a matter that brings up the question of financial strength, and we have no one with the possession of vast funds like Rockefeller who can put a hundred million dollars aside to create entertainment and to create a monument for himself, no matter how he got it. We know that they have more means to reach the reading public than the striking miners, who can only spare a few dollars from his monthly earnings. We can not spend the money to spare addresses and to hire literary men and men of highest talent in the country to take charge of our publicity and put it before the country in attractive form whether it is true or not, and we have to fight against that. For instance, "Peace reigns in the State of Colorado, and a strike is called regardless of the justice of it"; the people hear of the strike and think of the disturbed conditions that it caused, but do not think of the conditions that existed because of which the strike should be called; and then again when it comes to a matter of publicity, those in the union who have to do with it are those who have come up through hard knocks and who have no education, and they have to compete against those who are schooled until they are men 20 and 25 years old, and perhaps old enough to be the father of the workman or the official of the labor union when they left college. We have this disadvantage, that they have everything in their favor. We may have the right of a thing, but we may lack the command of language to tell what we feel and know, and we have not the money to buy the services of those to put that in convincing language and circulate it before the world.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In your testimony this morning, Mr. Doyle, your statement, as I now recall it, was that so far as article 4 of the proposed agreement between the mine owners and the mine union was concerned—that article which provides that the employer has to deduct from the wage of every worker a certain amount to be turned over to the union—your testimony, as I remember it, was to the effect that that was optional with the employer, that it was not imperative that he must accept that specific specification; did I understand you correctly?

Mr. DOYLE. I believe, in answer to that, I stated that we have contracts and have had contracts with operators in the country and even in this State that did not contain that clause.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And I gathered further that it was voluntary on the part of the employer either to accept or reject, and that some of the employers preferred it.

Mr. DOYLE. I believe I stated that after getting them into conference we endeavored to show that it was to their advantage to have it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But if you failed in satisfying them, then they need not accept it; that was the impression I got. If I am wrong, I wish you would please correct me.

Mr. DOYLE. If you were to come to me and wanted to make a deal for a certain amount of grain in the field before it was cut, you would not start right off the reel and say to me that you would give me a certain amount, but you would begin to dicker with me to make the best possible terms. That is the way with it. We go into conference and we tell them that the check-off system is best for us, and best for them, and we ask for it for the reason that it is best for all concerned—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. My reason in asking that question is to get at the facts. Here in this publication issued by the coal-mine managers, series 1, entitled "Facts Concerning the Struggle in Colorado for Industrial Freedom," on page 66, this appears [reading]:

" WHY COLORADO WAS ATTACKED.

" COLORADO MINERS ARE THE BEST PAID IN THE COUNTRY.

" 'Recognition' of the United Mine Workers of America means, in effect, that every man in the mine must be a member of the union. Every mine is required to pay the union dues and assessments first out of the man's pay.

" In brief, 'recognition' of this union means submission to this system of 'checking off' union dues, fines, and assessments before any man can be paid the wages he has earned.

" These assessments may be made by the union's officers at any time and for any purpose. For example, out of the wages of miners in other sections of the country than Colorado had to be 'checked off' the funds to meet the expense incident to stirring up the strike in Colorado."

Now, according to this statement there is no option on the part of the employer, but he must submit to that proposition.

Mr. DOYLE. That is not correct. The operators have maintained the attitude they would not meet the representatives of the miners' union, because if they even met them at a dinner or anywhere else, or come close enough to them to find out they were actually human beings and stood on two feet, that would be a recognition of the union. Now, it came out in that pamphlet that the union makes collection of dues and assessments through their officers. Now, if that statement is correct, is the other correct? They can't both be correct—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let us confine ourselves to the point at issue, and not wander off, Mr. Doyle. You heard me read this article?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Please be good enough to say whether or not that is a correct statement on the part of the operators?

Mr. DOYLE. It is not correct.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You deny the statement that the employer, when he enters into an agreement with the union, must deduct from the wages of every man in his employ a portion of their wages for that purpose and turn it over to the union?

Mr. DOYLE. That depends. There is recognition of different degrees. You may recognize the union and check off its dues, and so forth, and you may recognize the union and not check it off. You may recognize it to a certain degree. It is a question of degree.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If I, as a miner, may recognize the union and check it off, if I may do it, that is very different from saying I must do it, because "must" leaves no option; "must" is mandatory; "may" is optional. Now, I understand you to say that this statement published here is not a correct statement?

Mr. DOYLE. It is not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That the employer is not compelled to deduct; he may have the choice of deducting?

Mr. DOYLE. That depends upon the contract. If he contracts in a conference and agrees to deduct, he does so. If he makes a contract that does not include that article, he does not deduct.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Exactly. Can you put in evidence a contract or mention a contract where the employer is not obligated to do that?

Mr. DOYLE. Have I not told you that the contract—that contracts formerly existed to that effect?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you give us the name of any employer operating under a contract with the union who is not compelled to deduct these sums from the wages of the men?

Mr. DOYLE. I think one contract of that kind exists in West Virginia now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am speaking of Colorado.

Mr. DOYLE. I did not say there were any at this time in Colorado. I said that one formerly existed in Colorado.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But, so far as you know, there is no contract in Colorado now existing where an employer does not deduct from the wages of the men and turn it over to the union?

Mr. DOYLE. Working under contract with the union?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. None except one little place in Weld County, where the dues have not been deducted for months. There will be others.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I presume you have looked over this pamphlet?

Mr. DOYLE. I have seen it, but I don't know that I have read it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have read some of the publications issued by the employers?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; I have read some on the street cars as I would get time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you want this commission to accept all the printed publications, printed by the employers, at their face value, that have been submitted to this commission?

Mr. DOYLE. I would want them to weigh well anything—be fair enough to weigh anything they may have published—and if in their conclusions they thought that certain statements, or parts of statements—I do not think they ought to take them as a whole—ought to be believed, to do so, and if their evidence was sufficient to overcome what was published, and it was seen to be not true, they ought to so consider it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You pointed out that this particular statement I just read to you was not correct. Now, do you believe there are other statements contained in these publications that are not correct and should not be accepted?

Mr. DOYLE. There are others that are not correct, but without looking it over I can not tell you just what they are.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are we to understand, Mr. Doyle, that you take the ground that all of the published official statements—and, of course, you are not responsible for unofficial statements—but that all of the official statements published by the union are correct and can be accepted at 100 per cent face value?

Mr. DOYLE. You must not forget which side I am on. I am on the miners' side, and for that reason I am not one of those "holier than thou" people that believe the laboring man can not err. There are no doubt statements in our publicity matter that have been written in there that are but conclusions of the writer or of the person with whom he may have conferred about the matter, and I would say—I would not say that everything the mine workers published was absolutely correct, either grammatically or any other way; but there is no doubt but that if you will take the full volume of stuff published by the operators and the full volume of stuff published by the organization and make comparison letter by letter, paragraph by paragraph and page by page for corroboration as to the truth of the statements, you will find, as compared with their statements, that ours are true in relation of 3 to 1.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, summing up, I am left in this frame of mind by your statement: That we should not accept a document like this at 100 per cent of its face value, but even the mine workers may have made errors in their published statements, and that they ought to be read very carefully and critically likewise?

Mr. DOYLE. We would all be angels if we did not make mistakes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I do not have the facts—I do not have clear in my mind a statement you made this morning when I questioned you about this man Martin. I think he was a militiaman. During the recess I looked up the testimony to refresh my memory. Let me read it to you, and see if you care to comment on it. This is the testimony of Linderfelt. Linderfelt goes on to say:

"Lawrence reported that Pvt. Martin had been wounded—shot in the neck. I asked him where he was. He said they could not carry him back, but they had left him in a small hole, where he was safe, and had put a first-aid bandage on him. Along in the afternoon, late in the afternoon, when the final advance was made in that direction, Pvt. Martin was found with the first-aid bandage torn off, his face beat in with the butts of guns, stamped in, one eye was out of his head, one of the men shoved it back in with his fingers, his body had been riddled with bullets. I think it was the next day I examined the place thoroughly myself and I found where they had stood over him with a Mannlicher 8-millimeter rifle and fired down through his chest, and through his mouth, and pieces of bones and flesh were on the ground where he had lain, with the bullet holes. I dug up the bullets and I found they were the Mannlicher; I found the clip with the empty shells lying beside him."

Do you care to comment on that?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know anything more about the matter than I stated this morning—that I was not down there at the time. If you want me to comment on it, all I can say is that if the statement made in that record is true, I would point, as a comparison, to the 2 women and 11 babies that were taken out of the hole at Ludlow.

Mr. WEINSTOCK. That is not in answer to my question; that is side-stepping it.

Chairman WALSH. You asked him if he cared to comment on it.

Mr. DOYLE. What comment do you want?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The question is, whether, from your own knowledge, you know whether that is a fact or not?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I don't know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So far as you know it may be a fact?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, there is a good chance of it not being a fact. I understand he is dead.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If it is a fact, is it a manly action or not?

Mr. DOYLE. Manly? Can the act of any human butcher be manly? I should say not. It is just as horrible as the killing of anybody under any other circumstances, if he was killed or butchered. No man has a right to kill or butcher another, and no right to chop them up, as they are doing over in Europe now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You deprecate that action on one side as well as on the other side?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; the man is a human being, and has a mother.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have before me, Mr. Doyle, a digest of the brief of the coal mining operators, prepared by their attorneys for the coal-mine operators, and among other things this statement appears—

Mr. DOYLE. What brief is that, in what case?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This is a digest of the brief of the coal-mine operators, prepared by Fred Herrington, Frank E. Gove, J. V. Sickman, George C. Manley, Charles Hayden, and Jesse C. Northcutt, attorneys for the coal-mining companies. I take it that this was before the congressional committee.

Mr. DOYLE. I take it that is what it was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Among other things stated here in this extract or digest is the following [reads]:

“REASONS FOR OPPOSITION OF OPERATORS TO MINE WORKERS' ORGANIZATION.

“(a) Unsatisfactory operation of union contracts in northern Colorado field.

“(b) Unlawful character and unbearable conduct of miners' organization.

“(c) Breaking of contracts—

“1. By striking without conference as required by contract (Bettis case).

“2. By repudiation of promises (Bettis case).”

Now, the one particular point I want to take up at this stage, Mr. Doyle, is the one where the charge is made that the unions are contract breakers. Will you give us your point of view on that?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir. I want to first state that with reference to the case referred to there, called the Bettis case, that I am thoroughly convinced that Mr. Bettis did not sign up a contract with the union in good faith.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you please tell us who Bettis was?

Mr. DOYLE. Bettis operated a mine called the Royal Gorge, near Canon City, Colo.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He was a mine operator?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; I guess he owned the mine. We sent out a letter which, if not already introduced into the record ought to be, to all operators of the State on August 26, 1913, asking for a conference, and if that has not been introduced in evidence I shall be glad to put a copy in, and asking for a conference. At about 9.30 the next morning—that was sent out about noon—I got a phone message from Bettis. I had never met the man before in my life and never had any organization dealings with him, and I don't know whether any of the others had. And he said that he would be very glad to sign up with union, and he signed up a contract on the 7th of the following month, I think it was, shortly after that. He broke the contract afterwards, as we can bring men down here who were in charge and show it. And it leaked out in a way, it was mentioned to us, that Mr. Bettis was in constant communication with Mr. Herrington, of the C. F. & I., just previous to the strike, and reported how the organization was handling men and having meetings and what they were saying in the meetings, and so forth, leading us to believe he was in the service of Herrington. And immediately on signing his contracts he made statements that the union was responsible for the raising of coal in order to get public sentiment against the union. Since then, however, he has leased his mine to others, and it is working under union contract.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you tell the commission how he broke his contract?

Mr. DOYLE. I have not the details, but before the congressional committee that matter came up. I believe that Dave Robb, national organizer, handled that matter and could give a fair statement of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are not familiar with the details?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have in mind—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). Just before you go off that matter of breaking contract, they always state that we break contracts. We have an organizer all over the country in the Eastern States, and you never hear of it there. I have a letter from Ottumwa, Iowa, and I will read it into the record. I have not been able to look up another letter that I wanted to introduce into the record, showing that contracts are not violated, from the president of the operators of the association in the State of Iowa; but this is the only one that I could find; it was written to the secretary of the district. It is as follows [reads]:

WAPELLO COAL CO.,
H. L. WATERMAN, GENERAL MANAGER,
Ottumwa, Iowa, October 6, 1913.

Mr. JOHN GAY,
Sec. Treas. U. M. W. of A., Dist. 13, Albia, Iowa.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your inquiry of the 2d instant as to which, in my experience, is the more beneficial to the mining industry, the employment of union or nonunion labor.

For nearly 30 years I have had charge of mines where from 500 to 700 men were employed, and during the past 13 years have operated under a joint agreement between the operators and the United Mine Workers of America.

While in the earlier years operations under the agreement were often accompanied with more or less friction, much of this has passed away, and under later agreements an honest effort has been made by all parties concerned to live up to both the letter and the spirit of contracts. And while the cost of production has increased through shortened hours and increase in day wages and price of mining, chargeable partly to the very perfect organization of the miners and partly to the advance in the cost of living, still I am satisfied that whatever advances are due to the former cause are more than offset by the greater stability given the industry by avoiding the losses which would inevitably occur through operating with unorganized labor, resulting in shutdowns and strikes.

Yours, truly,

H. L. WATERMAN, Vice President.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many miners did that concern employ?

Mr. DOYLE. He says he has had charge of mines where from 500 to 700 men were employed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have here a clipping from the Coal Age, a publication issued somewhere in the East, under date of December 20, 1913, which contains—I will not read the whole thing, but will just take the heart out of it and you can answer it. It is issued by the Association of Bituminous Coal Operators of Central Pennsylvania, 301 Betz Building, and addressed to Mr. Patrick Gilday, president district No. 2 United Mine Workers of America, Morrisdale mines, Pennsylvania. Dated Philadelphia, December 12, 1913, and it says [reading]:

"DEAR SIR: The executive board of the Association of Bituminous Coal Operators of Central Pennsylvania held a meeting here to-day, approved and directed that the following communication be forwarded to you at once:"

And then it goes on through several whereases, and I will just deal with the one touching on broken contracts—

"Whereas rules 12 and 13 of said agreement provide, 'Should differences arise between the Operators and Mine Workers as to the meaning of the provisions of this agreement, or about matters not specifically mentioned in the agreement, there shall be no suspension of work on account of such differences, but an earnest effort be made to settle such differences immediately;'"

Then it goes on to say further:

"Whereas, notwithstanding the fact that rule No. 15 provides, 'The right to hire and discharge, the management of the mine, and the direction of the working forces are vested exclusively in the operator,' the United Mine Workers of America have absolutely disregarded this rule in that they have at numerous times served notices on substantially every operator belonging to our association that unless all of the employees working for such operator should become members of the union on or before certain dates mentioned in said notices, that they, the Mine Workers, would close or shut down the Operators' respective mines, and in many instances did close the mines for this reason and refused to return to work unless such nonunion employees were discharged. This conduct is in direct violation of your contract and specifically interferes with and abridges the right of the Operator to hire and discharge, of the management of the mine, and of the direction of the working forces; this conduct and violation of contract on part of the Mine Workers, as well as that mentioned in the preceding paragraph, has resulted in more than 100 strikes during the life of our scale agreement; and

"Whereas notwithstanding the fact that the Operators appealed to you as president of the United Mine Workers of America of district No. 2 to enforce and carry out your contract, and your repeated admissions that the Mine Workers were not living up to their contract, but that you, individually, were doing all in your power to compel performance thereof, nevertheless it has been open and notorious that your subofficials, organizers, and like employees have been continuing this line of conduct down to the present date."

Then it goes on to say:

"Be it resolved, therefore, That the Operators enter a vigorous protest and demand of Patrick Gilday, president, and the executive board of the Mine Workers of this district an immediate cessation of the conduct hereinbefore recited and that they strictly enforce on the part of the Mine Workers their covenants contained in said contract, and in event of the failure to cease such conduct within the next 10 days that the president and secretary of the Operators' association shall call a special meeting of the members thereof for the purpose of considering the final dissolution of its association on the specific ground that it is useless to enter into contract obligations with a body that steadfastly refuses to fulfill the same and which no official apparently has power to enforce.

"Yours, truly,

"W. R. ROBERTS, Secretary."

Can you give this commission any information on that?

MR. DOYLE. Do you know whether there is a district 20 check-off clause in there or not?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No.

MR. DOYLE. I am of the opinion, if my memory serves me right, and that is one good argument to show the absolute necessity of a check-off clause in the contract. For instance, those men who violate contracts—I am not maintaining they don't—there are local violations, and the subcontracts referred to there could not be made in conflict with the main contract. Before they had the check-off system, which the operators in that field refused to give, it took the very means out of the hands of the officials of the union whereby they could discipline their members. For instance, in Illinois, when the men refused to work because of a fight between the checkweighman and the top boss, the district secretary came down and said to him, "You go to work or you will be fined and it will be taken out of your wages," and as a result we went to work. With the check-off system we can discipline the men.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know what was the outcome of this controversy?

MR. DOYLE. There has been no strikes in our official papers that has come to my attention since. I remember something about that appearing in the Coal Mining Review, published by an ex-international president of ours, but there has nothing serious happened over it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know whether or not the employers' association did call a special meeting and did or did not dissolve its association?

MR. DOYLE. No; I do not know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know whether or not that association is to-day in existence?

MR. DOYLE. No; I do not. I might add, in connection with that district, that it is practically agreed in all circles that if "Divine Right" Baer were alive to make the next contract he would include the check-off system in the contract.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If who were alive?

MR. DOYLE. "Divine Right" Baer, George F. Baer, who said that certain men were born with the divine right to take care of the interests of the workmen.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. My attention is called to a report printed by the authority of the Colorado State Federation of Labor. This report was published in 1914, and on page 16 of that report is the following [reads]:

"Therefore be it resolved, That this convention call upon Gov. Ammons to immediately turn over to civil authorities the so-called military prisoners, so that they may be placed in communication with their attorneys and friends.

"The convention further demands that Gov. Ammons remove from office Adj. Gen. John C. Chase, Judge Advocate Boughton, Maj. Charles E. Townsend, and Capt. Householder; and, further, that he abolish the illegal military commission; and

"Be it further resolved, That if within five days Gov. Ammons fails to comply with the requests of this convention, representing all of the organized labor of Colorado, the executive board of the Colorado State Federation of Labor is instructed to at once circulate petitions to recall him from office; and

"Be it further resolved, That this convention declare itself in favor of a State-wide strike of every working man and woman in this State as a protest against, and to enforce a demand for the cessation of the abuses of human rights and liberties cited above; and

"Be it further resolved, That the date for the inauguration of this State-wide strike be left in the hands of the executive board of the Colorado State Federation of Labor, who are instructed to issue the call without notice of any kind whatever in their judgment the moment for action has arrived."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did Gov. Ammons remove Gen. Chase and Maj. Boughton and Maj. Townsend and Capt. Householder?

Mr. DOYLE. Not that I know of. Let me ask a question. What is the date of that again? I thought you said 1914.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is the inquiry—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). Is the resolution dated, may I ask? My reason for asking is whether it was this last December's convention. If it was, it is 1913. That is right, 1913. Now, that is printed there in 1914, by the executive act of the board, but it is the proceedings of the convention of December, 1913, 16, 17, 18, 1913, held in December—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Of November?

Mr. DOYLE. December.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. December?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; 1913.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just about a year ago?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; I wondered where it came from in 1914.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes. Well, you say these military officials were not removed by Gov. Ammons?

Mr. DOYLE. No; they were not that I know of. I think they are still holding their positions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, were petitions circulated to recall Gov. Ammons from office?

Mr. DOYLE. Now, I ain't certain of that. I know they were authorized to get them out, but I think they were not circulated.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was there a general strike called?

Mr. DOYLE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There was not?

Mr. DOYLE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the resolutions provided for here were not carried out?

Mr. DOYLE. They put it in the judgment of the board to do it—not to call a general strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Simply the date is in the judgment of the board? It says [reading]:

"Be it further resolved, That this convention declares it is in favor of a State-wide strike of working men and women in this State as a protest against and to enforce a demand for the cessation of abuses of human rights; and

"Be it further resolved, That the date for the inauguration of this State-wide strike be left in the hands of the executive board."

That was the only discretion they had, was to fix the date; but the strike was to go.

Mr. DOYLE. Perhaps they have not fixed the date yet.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, then, evidently the entire resolution to recall Gov. Ammons was not carried out and the resolution to declare the State-wide strike has not yet been carried out?

Mr. DOYLE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have touched upon or referred, Mr. Doyle, several times in your testimony to the many acts—the many wrongful and unlawful acts said to have been committed by the State militia and by the mine guards and those sympathizing with or working under the mine owner. I have here a letter dated Denver, Colo., April 30, 1914, or rather a copy of a letter addressed to the Hon. M. D. Foster, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. I take it that Dr. Foster was the chairman of the congressional committee that conducted the investigation in Colorado?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, this document is signed, as I recall it—I haven't the last page here, but I believe it was signed by very many of the coal operators. Among other things—oh, yes; here they are—by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., and so on; there are 10 or more signatures. Among other things this communication makes this statement [reading]:

"On April 23, Lawson, international board member United Mine Workers of America, and the leader of the strikers, in an interview published throughout the State, asserted that a war of extermination would thenceforth be conducted by the strikers, and Doyle, secretary of the U. M. W. of A., by wire, instructed the officials of local unions to watch for the approach of the militia, which had been again ordered back into the field. The meaning and purpose of such language was obvious."

Is it a fact, Mr. Doyle, that you instructed by wire the officials of the local unions to watch for the approach of the militia?

Mr. DOYLE. That would all depend upon the interpretation placed upon it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, that does not answer my question. I put a straight question to you that is easily answered.

Mr. DOYLE. Well.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you, by wire, instruct the officials of the local unions to watch for the approach of the militia?

Mr. DOYLE. I warned the miners and their families when the militia left here to take all the women and children away from within bullet distance of the train so these fellows would not be able to kill any more as they had been killed before.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you a copy of that wire?

Mr. DOYLE. I think my counsel has it down at the trial down there. It is being brought up, I think, in this trial at Canon, in defense of these people—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Was that wire sent from Denver?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. To Ludlow?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I don't remember just who it was sent to, or the names put on it; but Attorney Hawkins has it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I suppose copies of it were filed in the local telegraph office here?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; I presume so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And could be procured?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; you can get a copy from him down there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the communication goes on to say [reading]:

"Since that time the strikers in armed bands, varying in number from 50 to 400, have attacked the town of Delagua from the hills and killed three men. They have dynamited and burned the buildings and equipment of the Empire, Southwestern, and Green Canyon mines at Aguilar."

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know anything about that personally at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you accept hearsay statements as a fact in this case?

Mr. DOYLE. No; the operators who are responsible for that document have pictured me as a murderer, anarchist—anything but a decent, law-abiding citizen; everything a man can name; and anybody picturing me that way, and I, of course, not agreeing with them that I am such, I couldn't very well agree with that part of the statements made by them. Pardon me, that mentions Lawson and says he said a war of extermination would take place?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. I don't believe Board Member Lawson ever made any such statement. Of course, when he gets on the stand you can find out from him directly. And in connection with all that you said about the State federation of labor and the resolution passed, I have a copy of the resolution that the convention passed at that same convention that I would like to introduce as my record and leave the stenographer have it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is it very long?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; it is about nine pages.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can you give us the substance of it?

Mr. DOYLE. Why, it is outlining the outrages referred to in the other resolution.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is a list of outrages alleged to have been committed by the other side?

Mr. DOYLE. General statements of things that have occurred, as giving reasons and the whereas why the governor could do something to prevent such; and it ends up by telling what they have done—how they let mine guards in the militia and held people incommunicado; and says they were trying to abridge the freedom of speech, and all that stuff, that I think would be interesting; and it calls upon the governor, I believe, to take some action to stop it. At that time the convention made an appointment with the governor, and marched up here to the statehouse and had him appear before the main body, which resulted in his suggesting a committee of investigation be appointed, which was appointed, and whose investigation, a verbatim copy in our office, from which I have made extracts, which I wish to incorporate at a later time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well. You may hand that paper to the reporter to be made a part of the record.

(The resolution referred to appears among exhibits at the end of this subject, under the title "Doyle Exhibit No. 3.")

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"Since that time the strikers, in armed bands varying in number from 50 to 400, have attacked the town of Delagua from the hills and killed three men. They have dynamited and burned the buildings and equipment of the Empire, Southwestern, and Green Canyon mines at Aguilar. They have driven men, women, and children into the Empire mine and sealed the entrance with explosives."

I will stop at every period to give you an opportunity to make comment, if you wish to.

Mr. DOYLE. I have no comment on that. Am I correct that that is the letter to Foster, or a brief?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is a letter to Foster, written by the various coal-mine owners. [Continues reading:]

"After the declaration of a truce agreed to between the governor and Hawkins, attorney for the U. M. W. of A., they drove the postmaster and others away from the Sunnyside mine and took possession of it, as well as the Pictou mine."

Mr. DOYLE. I have no comment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"They dynamited the tippie at the McLaughlin mine and fired many shots into the buildings at Maitland."

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know anything about that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"They forcibly entered the store building at Rockvale and carried away guns and ammunition."

Have you any knowledge of that?

Mr. DOYLE. I haven't any knowledge of any of those things. But if it is a matter of record you want, why not put it all in the record?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, there may be some statements here that you may wish to say something about.

Mr. DOYLE. Very well. If you have the time, I have.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I want to afford you the opportunity—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). Well.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"They attacked the buildings and dwelling houses at the Chandler mine and kept up a merciless fire from the hills for nearly 40 hours, killed one man, and finally took possession of the camp by slipping in a number of men under a white flag."

Mr. DOYLE. I have no comment on it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"They have burned, dynamited, and completely destroyed the McNally mine in Huerfano County, kept up an almost continuous fire from intrenchments for 50 hours upon the Walsen mine, wounded one woman, killed one and wounded four men, and killed a surgeon wearing Red Cross insignia while attending wounded soldier on field."

Mr. DOYLE. No comment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"They viciously attacked the Hecla mine in Boulder County, killed one and wounded three men, and drove all employees and their families to cover for many hours."

Mr. DOYLE. No comment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"They attacked the Forbes mine in Las Animas County with a force of 400 armed men, killed seven miners, including four Japanese, and burned everything in sight, including a stable of 33 mules."

Mr. DOYLE. No comment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading):

"In the prosecution of their campaign of extermination the foregoing are some of the things these men have done during the past few days with the tacit consent, active cooperation, and under the personal direction and control of officers and paid agents of the United Mine Workers of America."

Mr. DOYLE. No comment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is it true, so far as you know as an official of the United Mine Workers, that such things were done with the tacit consent, active cooperation, and under the personal direction and control of officers and paid agents of the Mine Workers of America?

Mr. DOYLE. I think it is a lie of whole cloth.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You saw none of these things with your own eyes?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You did not see the battle at Ludlow?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You tell us though that from statements made to you by the miners at Ludlow, you believe that the military were the aggressors in the matter—that the military were the first to fire?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, I presume you call them military, which was left there, which really would be—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). National guardsmen under the direction—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). Yes; I believe they were the first to fire. I don't see what business they had down there at the homes of the miners of the tent colony if they were not there to fire. If they had been up there working at the mine, probably no trouble would have happened.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You believe that despite the fact that was hearsay and despite the fact that as you explained this morning when it came to members of the union character did not enter; that men of character and men of no character were permitted to join the union; and that if statements were made to you by the miners you would accept them in connection with matters of this kind?

Mr. DOYLE. Before answering, if you will give me the permission, I would ask whether you are a member of the chamber of commerce?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. Would you believe a member of the chamber of commerce who told you something he had seen and heard, and his character was not examined before he became a member of the chamber of commerce?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I would have to know the man before I could know whether or not to believe him as a member of the chamber of commerce. I tell you frankly I would not believe every member of the chamber of commerce.

Mr. DOYLE. Very well.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I will also tell you with absolute frankness that I would not believe every member of a labor organization.

Mr. DOYLE. Well, neither would I. I may have to use my judgment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then I misunderstood your testimony when you made the statement that if a man, a unionist, told you something, you would believe it.

Mr. DOYLE. I made a statement—in making a statement, a man who knew the manifold conditions, industrial conditions, in a strike district and was a party to it and who had some reason to know, and I had some reason to believe he ought to know from the position he was in, certainly I would believe him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would believe him because he was a miner?

Mr. DOYLE. No; because I thought he was telling the truth.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you thought he was telling the truth, you said, because he was a miner?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I thought he was telling the truth not because he was a miner but because being a miner or being a member of the union or in a position to know about the conditions under which he worked, or about the conditions under which he was striking.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Exactly; and if in an affair like the Ludlow difficulty a miner told you something you would believe him?

Mr. DOYLE. That would all depend. If the miner was telling something, and I thought he was in a position to know, I would believe him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then I take it you want to qualify your testimony of, I have forgotten whether it was this morning or Saturday afternoon, where you made the blanket statement that where a miner told you anything about something you would believe it?

Mr. DOYLE. I told you if his position as a miner—if he was in a position to know the condition. I qualified that, but if you want to interpret it to suit yourself I will not object.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you mean to qualify that?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; I did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I thought that was a broad blanket statement, Mr. Doyle, and it made quite an impression on me, and I made a note of it at the time as being a very remarkable statement.

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Somebody gave me a clipping here, Mr. Doyle—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is headed "Walter Drew's view. The attorney for the employers' association protests against the closed shop. Walter Drew, the counsel for a joint committee for a large number of open-shop organizations, who was present at most of the hearings before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, said yesterday that a very large percentage of the strikes of recent years have had for their purpose not the increase of wages or the decrease of hours but the establishment of a closed shop. The objection to the closed shop, Mr. Drew said, lies in the fact the workman holds his job by the power of the union and not by his merit."

Is that correct?

Mr. DOYLE. That is not correct. The closed-shop matter is necessary—I will be as brief in that as I can—just the same as sanitation is necessary in a community to keep health. And in order to keep conditions proper and properly protect the men, the matter of men holding their jobs merely by membership in the union, instead of by their ability to do certain work, or to perform certain work, is not correct. As to the matter of efficiency, there has been so much said, but if you want a statement on that subject I will be glad to make one. If not, I will be glad to let it rest, because you will agree with me, anyhow.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I understand, Mr. Doyle, that you take the position that men are not; that is, conditions are not established whereby men hold their jobs simply because of their union affiliation, regardless of merit?

Mr. DOYLE. Oh, no. I hold that they do not hold their jobs, as I understood that clipping to say, simply because they are members of the organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; that is what the clipping said, that they held their jobs because they happened to be members of the association and not because of merit.

Mr. DOYLE. That is not correct, except where a man is fired for an unjust cause and the arbitration courts provided for in the agreement are appealed to and a decision rendered in favor of the man—if he was fired because of personal prejudice or something of that kind or because he did not belong to the right church or did not vote right or something of that kind, why, then, naturally, he would be defended by that organization; and we consider it a blessing that his rights would be protected, because he would be too weak to fight the employers himself and protect his rights in that respect.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You believe, then, that under the union conditions an employer has the right to exercise the right of dismissing a man who is inefficient?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes. If the man can not perform the work, he certainly has that right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. For my information, Mr. Doyle, will you be good enough to tell me whether in the State of Colorado you have the initiative?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; we have the initiative and referendum.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you have the referendum?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you have the recall?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, charges have been made at various times before this commission and in other directions that the mining laws of Colorado were not enforced. Is that correct, Mr. Doyle?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; that is one of the complaints—about the laws that affect the miners—as I testified to Saturday.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, if the mining laws were not enforced, and with the power at the command of the wage earners, who naturally largely outnumber the employers in the State, why did not the union institute prosecutions?

Mr. DOYLE. Perhaps for the same reason that though the people are at liberty to vote—the citizens in this country—they do not always elect the right man to public office. Many other factors enter into a thing of that kind. We had an eight-hour law passed here, and those interested in having it defeated secured petitions to have it referred and thus prevented it from becoming a law for two years, until it came up at the next election. In the meantime some interests initiated another eight-hour law contrary to this one—really a fake eight-hour law—and had both upon the ballot, one by being referred, and one by being initiated for the next election. As a result both carried. But the real eight-hour law, as passed by the legislature, as I understand it, was decided by the supreme court, upon request of the legislature, that it was the one that should take precedence over the other; and you can readily see the fairness where anybody could pay 10 cents a signature, or something, to people who misrepresented the facts, in presenting the petition, and had the petition to refer signed by telling them it was a petition for an eight-hour law, for instance, or a petition to get one, and then tried to confuse the voters into voting for what they believed they were voting for.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are there any instances on record, Mr. Doyle, where the unions have instituted prosecutions for failure on the part of the mine owners to carry out the mandates of the mining laws?

Mr. DOYLE. No; the union, as such, can not sue.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can not an individual member of the union bring suit?

Mr. DOYLE. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Or prefer charges?

Mr. DOYLE. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Has that been done at any time?

Mr. DOYLE. I know of no individual that has brought charges because of that. We have fought in a number of ways to try to get the right legislation passed, and have used all our influence, but the pressure brought by the coal companies, for instance, in opposition to any legislation affecting them shows that the voters are pretty well dictated to in the coal-mining camps. Now, here I would like to quote, if you will, from the abstract of the votes cast at the primary election held on the 5th day of November, A. D. 1912. This is a document gotten out by the secretary of state, James B. Pearce, in 1913, and it goes on to show here that for the fake eight-hour law that I referred to that was initiated the vote in Huerfano County for the fake eight-hour law was 605 as against 1,268, and the vote in Fremont County 1,331 as against 2,105. And on the house bill that had been referred by petition, the vote favoring that shows that in Boulder County in favor of it there were 3,587 to 1,511 against it; while in the same county in favor of it there were 2,011 votes and 2,650 votes against it. And in Huerfano County for the genuine eight-hour law there were cast only 984 votes for that law and 1,156 votes against it. While the fake law received 679 votes in Las Animas County and 1,370 votes against it, there was cast 1,658 votes for the genuine law and 1,201 against the genuine eight-hour law. It shows it has been manipulated. Take it for the genuine eight-hour law in Pueblo, where the C. F. & I. has its steel plant; there was 4,523 for the genuine law as compared with 1,804 against it; and then the fake eight-hour law received 422 votes in favor of it—for the passage of the fake eight-hour law—and against the fake eight-hour law only 2,623 votes. Now, surely those men would not intentionally go out and deliberately, after studying the proposition, go and vote against the eight-hour law, which was to affect themselves.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why, that is entirely possible, Mr. Doyle. In the State of California we had a universal eight-hour law up before the people at the last election, with the wage earners in a great majority, and that law was completely snowed under, and yet theoretically it was to the interest of the voters to vote in favor of the eight-hour law.

Mr. DOYLE. But you must remember that was a universal eight-hour law, was it not?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. But you must remember the different interests. For instance, the farmer who owns a particular farm or something of that kind naturally would vote against that. But these reforms must come in such shape that they will not frighten the general mass of people. The eight-hour law has operated successfully elsewhere. And, then, there would be—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). While it is to be admitted that your point is correct that the farmer is not going to vote in favor of a universal eight-hour law, yet there are many more farm hands than there are farmers, and hence it would be in the interest of farm laborers to vote in favor of that eight-hour law. Yet it was defeated, seriously defeated.

Mr. DOYLE. How long must a man be in your State before he votes?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I could not answer that offhand.

Mr. DOYLE. If there is a year requirement, are all farm hands, or are half the farm hands, in the same place so they may vote?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I could not answer that, Mr. Doyle.

Mr. DOYLE. I think that would enter into it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That might—probably would. The mine owners claim, through documents that have been presented to this commission, and which I have not at hand at this moment, that the average wage of a miner is $4 a day in their mines. From your knowledge of the facts is that correct, Mr. Doyle?

Mr. DOYLE. In northern Colorado before the strike the average was from $480 to about $560 or $580 per year.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And how about the southern part of the State?

Mr. DOYLE. The southern part of the State was a little better, owing to the fact of having a little better grade of coal; but how much better I have not the figures.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was the average earnings of the average miner, so far as you know, per year?

Mr. DOYLE. About $1.75 a day, I think, taking it the year through.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, the 300 working days of the year?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That would be about $513 a year?

Mr. DOYLE. I think it was $1.71.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. For the purpose of the record, I shall read into it an abstract from the same digest from which I have been quoting of the proof of the coal-mining operators, submitted, I take it, to the congressional investigating committee, as to alleged atrocities said to have been committed by the strikers, and you can, at your option, comment or not, as you choose.

Mr. DOYLE. Well, I might just as well state in the first place that there is no use of making any comment on them; and if you just want it as a matter of record, you may just as well hand it in, because we have got only another hour before adjournment, and I have got a lot of matters here I would like to introduce.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I would rather read it over, for my own information. I have not had time to analyze it or go over it.

Mr. DOYLE. Well, go ahead.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This reads:

"September 23. Coal strike formally declared.

"September 24. Marshal Robert Lee, of Segundo, murdered by strikers. House of miner at Aguilar blown up by dynamite.

"September 25. Strikers held up Hastings hack at Ludlow.

"September 26. Strikers again hold up Hastings hack at Ludlow.

"September 29. William Smith, stable boss at Tabasco, beaten by strikers.

"September 29. Attack on Oakview mine and large number of shots fired into buildings.

"October 3. Powder house at Primrose mine blown up by dynamite.

"October 6. Strikers at Ludlow attack two Greeks, Erik Karis taken prisoner.

"October 7. Automobile of deputy sheriffs and others fired on by strikers on highway between Ludlow and Hastings.

"October 7. Automobile of John Farrish fired on by strikers.

"October 7. Dr. Curry, while traveling on highway near Ludlow, fired on by strikers.

"October 7. John Sherman, merchant, fired on by strikers while traveling on highway in automobile.

"October 8. Strikers fire upon Colorado & Southern train near Ludlow.

"October 9. Mack Powell killed by strikers in battle at Ludlow.

"October 13. Two Delagua women taken prisoners by strikers at Ludlow.

"October 14. Marshal R. E. Corey, of Segundo, beaten by strikers.

"October 17. Forbes mine fired on by strikers.

"October 25. Battle at Ludlow; Deputy Sheriff John Nimmo killed.

"October 26. Battle in Berwind Canyon; Deputy Sheriff Tom Whitney, killed.

"October 28. Deputy coroner and deputy district attorney fired on by strikers near Ludlow.

"October 28. Two children of Mrs. Frank Wootten, one 8 and the other 5, shot by strikers in Berwind.

"November 8. H. H. Smith, mine clerk at the Santa Fe mine, assaulted and beaten by strikers.

"April 10. Troops began leaving Trinidad district, and on the 18th of that month practically all of the troops left save a few guards stationed at Ludlow.

"April 20. Battle between strikers and militia at Ludlow.

"April 22. Empire mine burned; three mine guards killed by strikers in battle; strikers fire on Hastings and Delagua. Skirmish between militia and strikers in Black Hills. Southwestern mining camp captured by strikers.

"April 25. Truce was declared between the striking miners and the militia.

"April 25. While truce was still in force Chandler mining camp captured, buildings looted, and one man killed and one wounded.

"April 28. Lynn depot robbed of ammunition. Battle at Royal mine. Primrose and Rugby camps fired upon by strikers. Thirty people entombed in Empire mine.

"April 28. McNally mine captured; one man killed and a woman wounded.

"April 29. Strikers attack and capture Forbes mine, kill nine employees and burn buildings.

"April 29. Maj. Lester shot and killed near McNally mine in Huerfano County. (The officer mentioned was wearing a Red Cross badge at the time he was shot.)"

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it you do not care to make any comments?

Mr. DOYLE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Has Mr. Grant returned with any of the communications and documents from your office, Mr. Doyle?

Mr. DOYLE. I left him there with the stenographer and my assistant, going over them when I caught the car to come here at a quarter of 2.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You brought none of the records with you?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I left him, as I understood he was to attend to them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Mr. Grant has not yet reported?

Chairman WALSH. He has not reported to me.

Mr. Dower, will you please ascertain whether or not Mr. Grant has returned from the office of the United Mine Workers?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was the policy, Mr. Doyle, of the United Mine Workers, as to the arming of those members at the beginning of the present strike? Was violence foreseen by officers of that union, Mr. Doyle?

Mr. DOYLE. I do not desire to comment on that, giving the reasons given this morning, on advice of counsel.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you desire to comment on this question: "When did the officers of the United Mine Workers first decide to buy arms and ammunition for the men?"

Mr. DOYLE. That is the same as the first.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. "When were the officers of the union first—when did the officers of the union first permit the strikers to carry arms?"

Mr. DOYLE. That is the same as the first.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon has some questions he desires to ask.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. We have the documents, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Did you want to examine—go through those documents first?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It will be all right for you to proceed. We can look over these.

Commissioner LENNON. What is the jurisdiction as to membership claimed by the United Mine Workers? What does it embrace?

Mr. DYLE. You mean in the declared principles of the organization?

Commissioner LENNON. I mean what workmen does it embrace.

Mr. DOYLE. Everyone in and around the mine.

Commissioner LENNON. That would be miners and all the mechanics and helpers that have to do with the production of coal?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Has the United Mine Workers any voice, or anything to do with the employment of any of these people that are eligible to membership in their organization?

Mr. DOYLE. In their employment?

Commissioner LENNON. Have anything to do with their original employment?

Mr. DOYLE. Absolutely not.

Commissioner LENNON. They are employed by the operators?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Then who is it that passes upon the matter of eligibility of miners to membership in your organization, the miners or the operators?

Mr. DOYLE. The coal operators choose all our members.

Commissioner LENNON. And you have no alternative except to take such as are hired by the operators?

Mr. DOYLE. Absolutely not.

Commissioner LENNON. You have been associated in the mining business practically all your life?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. Now, this check-off system. I want to ask you one or two questions as to the check-off system. How old an institution is that in the mining industry—for instance, hospital fees, rent, groceries, buying in company stores, and other matters wherever the miners have given authority to do so, and where they have not given authority to do so what has been the custom in the mining industry?

Mr. DOYLE. The custom of the operators to use the check-off system for their own benefit has been longer in the mining business, so long before I was born that I don't know when it happened. They used it when I was a lad in Spring Valley. They had the check off for everything, rents and water and company store—

Commissioner LENNON. Did they check off for the hospital fee? Let us be specific.

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; in different mining camps, hospital fees, for store, company store, powder, oil, groceries—there was another one I had in mind.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, rents?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; rent, fuel, and water in some places.

Commissioner LENNON. In the matter of check off for dues or assessments or initiation fees, do you require that in the contract without the consent of the individual whose dues are checked off and paid to you?

Mr. DOYLE. The individual signs an order agreeing to that, for the protection of the coal company, when he becomes employed by that particular mine.

Commissioner LENNON. Is the miner or the lack of the checkweighman for the miners in the coal industry, largely the cause of industrial unrest among the miners?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir. Oh, yes. Where there is no union there is usually no checkweighman and the man must take whatever is given to him or else leave the camp.

Commissioner LENNON. In the districts where no union prevails, or in the mines where no union prevails, does the checkweighman prevail to any extent? Are there checkweighmen where there are no organizations of the miners?

Mr. DOYLE. No. No checkweighmen unless there is a union; first, because the man who would dare to take a job as checkweighman would be soon losing his job, by reason of the men who would contribute to his pay being weeded out. There would be no wages for him, and he could not, of course, get a job again with the company, and the men who pay his wages, who pay for the checkweighman, would soon be weeded out.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, can you suggest any way that it would be possible to elect a checkweighman and maintain the checkweighman satisfactory to the miners if they are not organized?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know of a method save the union of the miners.

Commissioner LENNON. There has been more or less charge made as to the breaking of contracts by the miners. Those contracts are made covering districts, are they not?

Mr. DOYLE. Districts or group districts.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you know of any contracts having been broken by the United Mine Workers covering a district where they have a district contract?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir; I do not. I never heard of one.

Commissioner LENNON. The complaints, if there are any, rest upon some local union or part of local union, or something of that kind?

Mr. DOYLE. The individual or group of individuals. Oh, once in awhile a local makes a break, but very seldom, especially where in a field that is organized any length of time.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you happen to know anything about the action of the executive board of the Illinois district in two or three cases that happened in the Danville district where local miners broke their contracts?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I only know that there was a number of cases, but as to what the merits were or what action was taken I am not aware of it.

Commissioner LENNON. In these matters of violence that have been read to you, presented to you to-day, will you state whether or not the officers of the United Mine Workers in Colorado ever authorized any acts of violence?

Mr. DOYLE. They have never authorized any act of violence, and they have always counseled members to live within the law and to conduct themselves in a lawful, peaceful manner.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all I want to ask.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Ballard would like to ask some questions.

Commissioner BALLARD. I understood you to say just now, in answer to a question of Commissioner Lennon, that the coal operators choose all of your members?

Mr. DOYLE. They employ the men and then we take them in as members.

Commissioner BALLARD. Do the coal operators also choose your officers?

Mr. DOYLE. No; not unless they should have a secret spy system. In some particular locals they talked to them as to who should be boosted for these offices and manage to elect them in some way. I think that might happen.

Commissioner BALLARD. Did you ever hear of a secret spy system electing your officers?

Mr. DOYLE. I have seen instructions some time back, I don't know just where, telling them to instruct them to use their influence among the rank and file to see that certain people, a certain character of people, are elected on committees.

Commissioner BALLARD. You don't think the operators, through their secret spy system, elected the union officers that conducted the past strike, do you?

Mr. DOYLE. It don't look very much like they had; they did not in my election.

Commissioner BALLARD. Commissioner Weinstock read to you a resolution about a State-wide strike. I didn't understand you quite. Did you mean that that strike was authorized by the unions, to be put into effect only when certain officers should be instructed to do it?

Mr. DOYLE. In this State federation of labor; yes.

Commissioner BALLARD. They authorized the strike?

Mr. DOYLE. They favored such a strike, but left the setting of the date in the hands of the executive committee.

Commissioner BALLARD. A State-wide strike would be a strike of all the members of the industries of the State in which the coal industry was concerned, too?

Mr. DOYLE. I understand so; that the State-wide strike is State wide.

Commissioner BALLARD. Every industry in the State would go out on strike?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner BALLARD. Do many of those industries have contracts?

Mr. DOYLE. Specific time contracts, I take it.

Commissioner BALLARD. And would a strike break those time contracts?

Mr. DOYLE. No doubt would, if a strike was had.

Commissioner BALLARD. Well authorized. You just said they favored a strike, and then they favored the breaking of time contracts, by that?

Mr. DOYLE. No. In each of the contracts or industries, according to whether craft organization or industrial organization makes its own contracts with its own employer or group of employers.

Commissioner BALLARD. Yes.

Mr. DOYLE. And the matter of a Colorado State Federation of Labor, any parent body which a labor organization will be affiliated with, if they declare in favor of a strike, can not force upon that organization a strike without action on the part of that organization. That is so with the State federation of labor.

Commissioner BALLARD. Then, am I to understand if the State federation chooses to order a general strike, a State-wide strike, that some organizations will obey and some will not, just as they choose to do?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, they could do so. That would all depend upon the circumstances surrounding them, and each organization would have to be consulted about that matter of the strike in the industry itself. That is my understanding.

Commissioner BALLARD. The question of whether they had a time contract might or might not influence their decision?

Mr. DOYLE. That, no doubt, would be considered.

Commissioner BALLARD. I do not want to interfere with Commissioner Weinstock, Mr. Chairman, if he has any more questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have one. I understood you to say—perhaps this morning or perhaps on Saturday, I believe it was on Saturday—that a number of laws had been passed by the legislature in recent years, such laws as the eight-hour law, the checkweighman law, perhaps the cash pay law, and that the operators should make no distinction or prevent union men getting work, and a great many laws of that kind have been passed by the legislature in recent years. Were those laws desired by the operators or desired by the miners?

Mr. DOYLE. It is evident that they were not desired by the operators, or they would have been lived up to.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They were not desired by the operators?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't think so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They were desired by the miners and presented to the legislature in such a way that the legislature passed them in the interest of the miners?

Mr. DOYLE. I would say that, when I say operators, I mean generally speaking, of course. There may be individual operators that would be in favor of laws; no doubt there are some who would be in favor of everything that was right if they didn't have certain strings on them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I mean at the moment these laws favored by the miners themselves.

Mr. DOYLE. I don't think there is any miner but who would rather work 8 hours a day than 12, and who would not rather get paid twice a month than once, or any of the other things that have been proposed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you do say, I understand it, that these laws were passed by the legislature and they were satisfactory and they were largely in the interest of the miner?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know whether they were or not, but they were passed, and conditions would have been better, though, had they been properly lived up to, I am satisfied.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the legislature did pass those laws, and they were more or less satisfactory to the miners. Now, what I was trying to get at was this: That the miners had enough influence with the legislature, all the various legislatures in the past few years, or that such legislators were elected in the States, as would pass laws more or less at least favorable to the miners; that is what I want to get at.

Mr. DOYLE. I can see your point all right. I could see what you were driving at.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The point is the miners have influence enough in politics to get legislatures who will pass laws more or less favorable to the miners?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I don't think it was so much the influence of the miners. I think it is a good deal because they would think, oh, they will pass anyhow, and they will live on paper. They would say, if a man belonged to the organization in southern Colorado, if he had gone down there before the strike, if he would say I am a member of the union, I am going to be a member of the union, the C. F. & I. would say they have no objection to organization,

"We don't care whether you are a member or not, that is none of our business." But you would find water in your place the next morning or be moved to one that did have water in it, or you wouldn't get timber or your rails wouldn't be delivered, or something else, and you would finally pick up your bucket and go home. The individuals really have no protection. I think that the laws themselves were perhaps passed in a great many of them—we have the laws, but when a man comes and gets in the attitude "I am holier than thou," he will find a difference in them.

(Here a short consultation among the commissioners occurred.)

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You made the statement, Mr. Doyle, a little while ago that things were made so unprofitable and uncomfortable for a union man that he very soon took his bucket and walked out?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But the testimony has been submitted to this commission that at the time of the strike there were 12 per cent of the men who were unionized.

Mr. DOYLE. Do you know why?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I don't.

Mr. DOYLE. Of course, they were unionized secretly and the company couldn't find them out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How did the company find out there were 12 per cent?

Mr. DOYLE. That is their guess; they guessed at it. But they claim that their men didn't want the union, but they struck just the same.

Then they made the excuse after they struck that they struck because of intimidation. They said to the governor that if he would give them troops they would agree to go to work. They got the troops, but didn't go back to work. It is only a guess on their part that there was 12 per cent, because if they found 1 per cent or one-half per cent it wouldn't be but a short time until they would have gotten rid of them—unless it might be, I will say, the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.—I think there were some men working in some of their mines in Fremont County who were not discharged. I want to say that to their credit.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Mr. Grant, our representative, reports that your secretary has turned over to him a large volume of correspondence, and that he has not had time to go through and pick out of it such correspondence as is likely to be of interest to us. But he has handed me here the report of receipts of disbursements, under date of October 1, 1914, financial report of the secretary-treasurer of district 15, U. M. W. of A., from August 26, 1913, to March 31, 1914, inclusive. Now, I take it, Mr. Doyle, that you have vouchers for every penny that was expended, have you not?

Mr. DOYLE. No doubt about that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You pay out no money unless you get a receipt?

Mr. DOYLE. They are all audited, and I have receipts.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The records show just how that money was used?

Mr. DOYLE. Everything is accounted for.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But we haven't got those details here; we have only got those totals.

Mr. DOYLE. Exactly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, according to this report, there were total receipts for the southern district from August 26, 1913, to March 31, 1914, inclusive, of $835,285.65; and the total disbursements were $831,785.65; balance on hand, $3,500. Will you please give us how much of this disbursement was for arms and ammunition?

Mr. DOYLE. The record will speak for itself upon that. That would naturally come under the matter I am talking about, advice of counsel, and I don't want to say anything that would in any way be distorted.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, you decline to answer that question?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes. I think other witnesses can testify to it who are not under indictment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you the only official under indictment?

Mr. DOYLE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who are the others under indictment?

Mr. DOYLE. John P. White, William Green, Frank J. Hayes, Edgar Wallace, John R. Lawson, Thomas Scott, myself, William Diamond, and David Robb, and a number of others that I do not recall.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That includes really all the officials here, does it not?

Mr. DOYLE. No. President McLennan is not, that I know of.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you care to answer this question: Were any lump sums paid out to any employees or any officials of your union, with discretion on their part to spend without being obliged to render vouchers?

Mr. DOYLE. I do not care to make any statement in that connection on that matter. But if after this is through, and these other matters are over with, counsel advise me that I can answer, and if the commission will send me a list of questions, or send some person to examine me, I will gladly give whatever information I can.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. At this time, then, you decline to answer the question as to whether lump sums were paid out to officials or to employees to be used as in their discretion was deemed best?

Mr. DOYLE. I want to testify to everything; I shall be very glad to do so. But that is my advice from counsel, and he is very good counsel, and I do not think I would be doing right by him if I was to break faith, and I would perhaps be putting more burdens on him; I don't want to do anything that could be distorted, and for that reason I don't think I should violate his confidence. I wish to say to you I want to give to the commission everything there is, and I will be glad at any later date if he will give me permission to do so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Mr. DOYLE. Do not allow those matters to get out publicly, please.

Commissioner BALLARD. I want to ask one or two questions following Commissioner Weinstock.

Do you believe in the right of private ownership of property?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, I believe in the right of private ownership of property in somewhat modified form. I am a single taxer, and you know what I believe so far as taxes are concerned. But I believe in the government ownership of public utilities; for instance, the street cars being owned by the city, and the water plant, electric light, and things such as that; when they become a public utility, they should be owned and operated by the public. I think these interstate matters ought to be owned by the Government—the railroads, for instance. I believe that telegraph lines and telephone lines, when interstate, should be owned by the Government. I know you will say that private enterprise could not compete with them if they wished to do so. I believe the successful operation on the part of the Government would be possible and there would be no desire on the part of private parties to operate it.

Commissioner BALLARD. Do you include Government ownership of mines and all of that?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes. Mines ought to be under Government ownership, but I am not prepared to say whether Federal or State; but I think Federal would be the better.

Commissioner BALLARD. Well, do you believe in the individual liberty where a man is allowed to go and work where he pleases and when he pleases and in the business that he pleases, you—those you speak of should be owned by the Government?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner BALLARD. You believe in individual liberty?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; I believe in a man exercising his individual liberties.

Commissioner BALLARD. Is a workman free when, in order to work in a mine, he must join the miners' union?

Mr. DOYLE. Just as free as he is when he must comply with the laws and rules and tax regulations, etc., when he becomes a citizen of the community.

Commissioner BALLARD. You consider that the same thing?

Mr. DOYLE. I think that is the same thing. I think this: I think that industrial life has only developed to a certain extent. Suppose you take the social life—speaking now of the new country like the United States—and that we have the same regulations that have proven to be successful to handle this problem of human life, living in industrial centers, etc., that the system under which that is handled, which will make a man live up to the laws, obey the laws whether he wants to or not, make him pay taxes and contribute whether he wishes or not, ought to be applied to industries, and that he ought to be made to live up to certain rules and regulations whether he wishes to or not. That he should be compelled to pay his pro rata to maintain those conditions. If I went to work in a mine of 500 men, and I had been working 10 hours a day, and had established pretty good conditions, no man ought to be allowed, not out of common decency, to come in and work 12 hours, or work under conditions that would force the operators to place upon me those same conditions; or even to refuse to contribute his mite toward the maintenance of those conditions that might have been accomplished because they are for the general happiness of the entire population, the industrial elements that are working there. I believe in that.

Now, I think your question has more to do with the so-called freedom, the right to work for whom, when, what, and where he pleases, that I referred to this morning. I don't think that is a right at all. I don't think that exists. If it does exist, it would be like I said this morning—that they would all be choosing the snap jobs, the short hours, and would really then take from the employer any freedom that he might have.

Commissioner BALLARD. Then, if the State under this condition was to compel union conditions, the State would also fix hours and wages?

Mr. DOYLE. I think that would be covered by the times and circumstances. I am one who believes that as the world progresses certain changes take place, because all things grow up out of the defects, the evils that we never dreamed of before. For instance, our Constitution; I believe that certain changes in that ought to be made, just as amendments were added from time to time. What might be true now, or proper, in my own estimation, would not perhaps hold for all time, because no thing ought to be just because it has been. It ought to be changed in the progress of the world and for the benefit of the whole of humanity and not for the special privilege of any few or class.

Commissioner BALLARD. Would not the question of hours and wages law be of some benefit?

Mr. DOYLE. I should think the matter of the maximum hours to be worked, and—for we have no better system now—the maximum might be regulated by law, and the minimum of the wage, so that the employer would have to employ—pay a certain wage which would guarantee a decent living. For instance, say, a department store; take a girl—why should a girl, because her father might be killed or disabled, go into a department store and work for $3 a week and not get enough food to eat, not get a good dinner, eat a doughnut and a cup of coffee or a glass of milk and a piece of pie. She is going to be a future mother of the country, and if she is she ought to be properly fed; and if the employer because of the competition will not provide for her I think the law ought to make some provision. I believe the law ought to protect those who can not protect themselves, and if there is no organization to do it, that the Government itself ought to do it, either by State or National legislation. It is true that the girl who goes out early in life to work has not the opportunity that she ought to have. The employer don't seem to care, not because he is not human, but it is the system and conditions under which he lives and exists.

Commissioner BALLARD. What about the million immigrants coming into this country every year?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, all of those immigrants, I think, remembering that this country is free—it ought to be remembered that those people that come here should not be allowed to intermarry, the southern European races and the yellow races, and so forth. But I believe that when an immigrant comes over here there ought to be a law, whether written or whether it is not written—for instance, if an American has been working and has established a standard of American living, and American workmen have been used to that—that the immigrant coming over should be made to take an oath that he will not work for less wages and longer hours, or do anything to draw back the progress that has been made. In other words, that if they are going to be made citizens, that they shall recognize a standard in life and that they should have an opportunity to develop and make better men and women and not permit them to be brought into this country and to be used as tools to bring down the standard to the level of the country from which they come.

Commissioner BALLARD. Suppose there are a great many unemployed, should they be permitted to come in and take the places of the unemployed?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, I think this, that the number of employed—that there is that number because of the policy that has been pursued. I believe this, that the invention of labor-saving machinery is put to misuse in this country. Labor-saving machinery. The name should indicate that it was to lessen the burden on the back of the toiler. If that is true, that is what it should be applied to, and not to creating dividends and great profits and fortunes that we hear in this country about now, while other people starve; the device which the man has invented, if it is a labor-saving machine, should go into use for the benefit to which the Creator endowed the men with talent to invent it, that should be a help to humanity; hours ought to be reduced and wages increased and life made easier by using these inventions, the labor-saving inventions. That these labor-saving devices ought to be used for the benefit of the men; and that instead of the worker being thrown out of commission he should receive his proper benefit out of that same thing that his genius invented. I think that the system of taxes ought to be made so that the world would be open. The world at the present time, I think, is closed. The Rockefeller interests own 300,000 acres, I understand, down in the southern part of this State and New Mexico. Suppose they only owned, instead of 300,000 acres, they owned the whole State, you and I would be their slaves, and we would have either to move to some other State or do what they wanted, because you and I can only live on and from the land.

Now, you shouldn't be permitted to own the land by title in such shape that you could deprive another man born later from exercising the right of having the use of the land as the Creator intended. In other words, that is the system whereby we fine people for improving the earth. If I build a house of two rooms, no paint on it, I pay a certain amount of taxes. If next year I paint my houses, my taxes increase. If the third year I build another room, I increase my taxes, although I have done something for the benefit of my family and humanity. I claim that the man who holds vast tracts of land, often empty, keeping it away from the use of those who were born here and who it was intended should use it, he is the man who ought to pay a fine in taxes on the value of that land, and realize that every penny of increase from that land should go into the public treasury for the purpose of operating the railroads, etc. Take, for instance, the street railway system; they have a franchise in the city for 99 years. How ridiculous it would be, suppose I built a large building, a 20-story building, and I leased the elevator shaft for a period of years, and they would charge a half a cent per floor for everybody who rode in that building. You would say, I won't pay it. I ain't going to pay to ride vertically. If we don't pay to ride vertically, if we object to paying to ride vertically, why should we pay to ride horizontally? Of course, we do pay directly or indirectly for riding vertically, in one sense, but if it is ridiculous to pay to ride horizontally, and not only horizontally but pay on our own streets, which belong to the public, why should that be done? Why should that not go into the public treasury? Take land worth $50 years ago that is worth $50,000 now. If the value of this land has increased that much, with which increase he had nothing in the world to do, that should have gone into the public treasury. Naturally, on the street car they charge the individual a cash price to ride on the street car, yet we don't pay a cash price for our ride on an elevator in a building directly. You may think I have narrow notions on these things, and that because I have not had an opportunity to get out in the world or anything of that kind, I may not know these things; but, nevertheless, there must be something of that kind established. I don't think any man ought to be robbed of his birthright. I believe that the burden ought to be made lighter, no matter what else we do.

Another thing, a man who has worked for years and been a good citizen, and who has done his duty as a soldier in industrial life should not be permitted to sell newspapers or such as that on the city streets. I think those things should be changed if we are at all humane and endeavoring to do what is right. We take up a soldier who has been wounded and he gets a pension, or if he is killed his widow gets a pension, and his business has been that of destruction in many instances, not always that of defense; but the workman, a citizen whose business it is to raise his children to be good citizens and to have a decent family and enjoy the comforts of the world, is not pensioned, but when he reaches old age he is discharged into the scrap heap, because he can not do as much work as a younger man. The Government does not say to him, "You have been a soldier in industrial life; I will see that you do not suffer." They only think of him four days before Christmas and forget him four days after Christmas and do not think of him again until the next Christmas.

In our organization we have no objection to any creed, color, or nationality. We do not say to the Pole, the Frenchman, or the Russian, "You get out of here"; but we say, "Come in; ours is a humanitarian movement, and we will help you out of that rut you have been traveling in." It is not only an industrial movement claiming eight hours a day and fair prices, but it is an organization that is furthering a movement for the uplift of humanity; that is bringing out the best that is in the soul of every man that may toil. That is the purpose of it and we believe it can be done. We believe that those who fight us, fight us because they are ignorant and do not understand. It is like those who crucified Christ; they would not have crucified Christ if they had believed he was Christ. If some one said to-day, "We will crucify Christ," wouldn't we think that he was ignorant? And it is the ignorance of employers to-day of our aims, let it be said, that has permitted them to get into the rut they are in at present. I think, for one, that unless the laboring movement is allowed to exercise its functions, its lawful and right functions—if it goes wrong and unlawful it ought to be chopped off; I do not say it is always right—but if it is it should be allowed to perform its functions and go through its life and exist. It is a reasoning institution; it is a gathering of human hearts beating for what is right, and if it is allowed to go on there is no doubt but that many of the conditions confronting us, which are creating so much of the unrest in the world to-day, will be removed. But if, on the other hand, such institutions as the Rockefeller interests can stand before the world claiming what they call their freedom to do business as they please and that labor organizations shall not exist, "We are going to wipe them out"—I do not say they can not be wiped out—that they can not wipe them out—for it is possible that they can, because they can put any man in the penitentiary or in his grave or any place they choose, and they may think it is best for the human race; and some of us may go to the penitentiary for telling our opinion of Rockefeller. But, as I started out to say, if the powers that be destroy organized labor, there is an indication that something else more radical will arise to take its place. Everyone wants to see this country prosper, and as a good citizen I do not want to see anything disastrous come to this country. I am called an anarchist once in a while, but I want to see wrongs righted in an orderly manner, and I repeat that if it is not done in my time it will be by those who follow me.

If we are not permitted to ease the pressure that is bearing down upon those who toil and do the world's work, I am afraid the day will come in this Nation that men will carry their heads under their arms by having them chopped off over night when they sleep. God forbid that it should come, and I don't want to see it come, for one. But why should men who have all the advantages of opportunity and who are raised until they are 25 years old in colleges—why should they not do something? I never was inside of a college until I was 15 years old and then, when I saw it, I thought the men came there for entertainment, until a friend who was with me told me they were going to school there and boarding there. I was working in a mine three years when I found that out. Why don't men who have all these advantages and the learning of the ages past do something to rectify these things? We need a Wendell Phillips or a George Washington to lead us out of the wilderness. Why don't some of those men put themselves in place of Wendell Phillips or George Washington—that have all those advantages? But they seem to forget and they notice nothing until the pressure underneath tries to rise, and then they wonder what is wrong, and then, when it rises, they say: "Something must be done to stop it"—not justice but, "Something must be done to stop it, to put it down," and the tighter they put it down, the faster they put it down, the higher it will go when it comes. They all recognize that. History, as little as I have read, shows that, in every age, when men have failed to recognize the signs of the times, when men have failed to recognize the crying out of those in silence, the general desires and prayers of the working people to better their conditions—that, unless it was heeded destruction took place and the nation fell. And when we called off our strikers in executive sessions, the statesmen of the Nation knew we were right and considered that we ought to have a voice in the labor conditions under which we worked—they knew we were right before—but, for some mysterious reason, none of them has said, "We know you are right and we will fight your battles." Let us do justice first. As I said in that convention, and say here—if these statesmen in the Nation will not help us to redress the wrongs imposed on labor, if the Chief Executive of the Nation can not see that there is something terribly wrong in the conditions as they exist, can not see that there is something boiling up which may break out at any time and ruin this country—if they can not see it, then it is up to organized labor; and I am conceited enough to say that it is organized labor that is the one thing that will prevent revolution in this country, and the only way to prevent it is to let organized labor proceed along in the way it has; if it errs, let us say that it is human, because there will be errors in every human institution; but let us overlook those errors and profit by them so as not to make the error the second time, and I think if that method is followed there will be less trouble. Let us each perform more of our duty to society. We get up in the morning and we rush to our work, and go to a show in the evening, if we have the money, but what thought do we give to our duty in regard to the individual units of that society? Instead of that we think whether our rent is going to be paid next month; we think whether we can make so much money next month—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). I have a list of questions I want to ask you.

Mr. DOYLE. He asked me a lot of questions and I want to answer, and there are some other matters I want to submit.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner O'Connell wants to ask you some specific questions and you can submit the other matter you have later.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to straighten up the records some first.

Mr. DOYLE. All right.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In a part of your testimony this morning, while Mr. Weinstock was asking you regarding the laws of your organization—

Mr. DOYLE (interrupting). Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And as to the punishment of members for the violation of these laws and rules—

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I have not the testimony before me, but I think you said there was a fundamental law or practice in the organization which might cover the question of violence; in other words, that violence might be considered a violation of a man's obligation. I take it that you mean by that that a man obligates himself to be a law-abiding member of the organization, and that the laws of the organization require its members to be law-abiding, but I do not find anything in the preamble or articles of the constitution of your district No. 15, which is a portion of the international, of the United Mine Workers of America, nor in the preamble of the national organization; in other words, I do not find anything in either one of these constitutions that would excuse a violation of the law, but if a member went out on the streets and committed the ordinary crime of getting drunk or getting into a fight and locked up and being punished—doing any of the things that human beings do—that you would be no more required, as an organization, to fine, suspend, or expel members of your organization for doing these things on the public highway for which they are responsible to the courts of the land—that you are not concerned in these as an organization, nor does your constitution make any more provision for that than in the case of any other association in regard to its members; for instance, the bar association does not provide in its constitution that, if a member of that association commits some crime or violation of the law, the association shall punish him for it?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to read to you the objects of the United Mine Workers of America, and I take it these objects are the ones to which its members pledge themselves. I find in article 2 of the Constitution of the National United Mine Workers of America, in effect April 1, 1914, the following objects stated:

"First. To unite in one organization, regardless of creed, color, or nationality, all workmen eligible for membership, employed in and around coal mines, coal washers, and coke ovens on the American Continent.

"Second. To increase the wages and improve the conditions of employment of our members by legislation, conciliation, joint agreement, or strikes.

"Third. To demand that not more than 8 hours from bank to bank in each 24 hours shall be worked by members of our organization.

"Fourth. To strive for a minimum-wage scale for all members of our craft.

"Fifth. To provide for the education of our children by lawfully prohibiting their employment until they have at least reached 16 years of age.

"Sixth. To secure equitable statutory old-age pension and workmen's compensation laws.

"Seventh. To enforce existing just laws and to secure the repeal of those which are unjust.

"Eighth. To secure by legislative enactment laws protecting the limbs, lives, and health of our members; establish our right to organize; prohibit the use of deception to secure strike breakers; prevent the employment of privately armed guards during labor disputes; and such other legislation as will be beneficial to the members of our craft."

That is the entire purpose of the mine workers' organization as stated in their preamble?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is nothing in that that would indicate that because you have not punished some member of the organization for crimes committed during the recent strikes or strikes, in the northern coal fields, that your organization does not want to carry out the provisions of its constitution?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. A further correction of the record. [At this point a conference took place between the members of the commission out of the hearing of the reporter.] [To the reporter:] That is not for the record.

In further correction of the record, Commissioner Weinstock, when examining you, quoted as an authority—invited at least, your opinion as to a legal—a gentlemen of legal standing in the country—Mr. Darrow—as the legal representative of organized labor. Mr. Darrow, so far as I know, and I ought to know something, has never been, and is not, the legal representative of organized labor, has never represented, has never been compensated by and never employed in any capacity by the American Federation of Labor, which, I think, you will agree is representative of labor organizations in North America?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; I never heard of him being employed by the American Federation of Labor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. A question as to the closed shop being unlawful; your interpretation of that interrogation by Commissioner Weinstock indicates that the mere making of an agreement requiring that all employees of a certain plant or factory or workshop or mine should be members of a union would be unlawful; you have no such thought in mind, have you?

Mr. DOYLE. Oh, no.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The record, as it now stands, would tend to show that the American labor movement does not stand for anything compulsory. There are a number of things which I am sure you will agree that labor does stand for as requiring compulsion?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; I enumerated one this morning.

Commissioner O'Connell. Let me cite some to you: At the recent convention of the American Federation of Labor held in Philadelphia, resolutions were adopted for compulsory minimum wage for women and children; for compulsory education, compulsory sanitary regulations, compulsory protection of machinery in the matter of safety of life and limb, the compulsory use of proper fire escapes, etc., and a number of other things that do not come to my memory. You agreed with Commissioner Weinstock this morning that organized labor did not stand for compulsion in some things. I think you said that without giving thought to the things I have enumerated.

Mr. DOYLE. He enumerated certain things and I agreed with him they did not stand for them, and I was not clear entirely on that, and I said they were in favor of compulsory upholding of the law.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does your position as secretary of district No. 15, in order that we may get this in the record straight—your position as secretary is only subordinate to the international organization, and you can do nothing so far as ordering a strike, or taking any action that will in any way involve the members in a matter that involves the constitution, without consultation with the international members; is that not true?

Mr. DOYLE. We are subordinate to them and can do nothing that is contrary to the constitution or rulings of the international organization, and can not do anything that would involve the organization as such in a strike, without it has been passed upon by the international body.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In the office you hold of secretary-treasurer, are you a member of the executive board?

Mr. DOYLE. Of the district executive board by reason of that office.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you a vote or are you just a member?

Mr. DOYLE. I have a vote and it has never been questioned or tested, and the constitution says, if I remember correctly, that an officer, by reason of his position, shall be a member of the executive board.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You are not the executive of your district?

Mr. DOYLE. No.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The president is the executive of your district, is he not?

Mr. DOYLE. He is, as to the district, but the international board is over him.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes; but I wanted to get at the power of your local board. Your local board is made up of seven or eight members?

Mr. DOYLE. According to the number of districts in existence at the time.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How many are there at the present time?

Mr. DOYLE. About eight.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And does that include the president and secretary, or is it exclusive of them?

Mr. DOYLE. No; I think we have eight subdistricts, and that would be the president, vice president, and the secretary-treasurer.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As secretary-treasurer you do not presume to issue orders of an executive character to apply to your district, do you?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is the function or duty of your presidents?

Mr. DOYLE. Unless it is in connection with finances or exoneration of membership.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am not talking about that, but matters of authority. Your district president, therefore, is the executive officer of your district?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And any orders issued by your district to your membership would have to be issued by your district president to be official?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did your district president enter into an arrangement with the State militia, or with the mine operators, as to the disarming of the miners at the time that it is said an arrangement was made to disarm them?

Mr. DOYLE. I have no knowledge of it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did he issue any general order in compliance with any arrangement he had made, as the executive officer of your district, to require the miners to disarm?

Mr. DOYLE. Not to my knowledge.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I ask this because it is the general impression—I am sure it is the impression of Commissioner Weinstock—that your executive officers agreed that the miners should turn in their arms to the United States soldiers when they arrived.

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I learned from you no such agreement was made, no such instructions were sent out by your executive officer, therefore the question—I understand you were advised in some way.

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And there was no violation on your part, no bad faith on the part of your officers because they made no agreement as to the disarming of the miners?

Mr. DOYLE. That is right.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you know this man Tikas?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is the general rumor that Tikas was a man who had never worked in the mines, but that he was a saloon keeper in the city of Denver. Will you explain briefly whether Tikas was a miner, whether he worked in the mines or ran a saloon in Denver when you employed him?

Mr. DOYLE. My first connection with him was when he joined the organization. While he had been working as a strike breaker in the northern fields he came out on strike. Seeing he was an active fellow, we made him one of our interpreters through which to speak to the Greek population, and any translation we needed in Greek.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And he was working in the mines?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes; in Weld County.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As a strike breaker?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; as a strike breaker at the time he joined the union.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He joined the union?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you employed him as an interpreter among the Greeks?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know whether he ever ran a saloon in Denver?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Or any other place?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How old a man was Tikas when he died?

Mr. DOYLE. I judge about 28 or 29; that is a rough guess.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In this stockade in the north what were Mr. Tikas's habits? Was he generally a sober man, a peaceful man, a man of companionable character, or was he disagreeable?

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Tikas was anything but a trouble maker. He was what I would consider a perfect gentleman. I understand that he had some college education in his own country, and I know he was very smart; I know that I never found him wanting in anything, and he was always upright and manly and stood for what was right, lawful, and honorable. Some party wrote a poem about him one time and I was so touched with the poem as being a description of him that, while not knowing the party, I wrote him and said that he did not make any mistake when he sang the praises of that dead martyr.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Regarding this stockade in the north—are these miners left inside of this fence, this town inside, permitted to go and come as they please through the gates of this place into the world?

Mr. DOYLE. They are now, I think, but not in times past. We have a young man—a boy 19 years old—said he climbed over this fence in the dead of night, and that he had to face a gun and was told to go back to work.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did they build regular company houses in the little town inside this stockade?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did they have a schoolhouse?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't think there was any school inside.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was there any church?

Mr. DOYLE. No; just a pool room, a store, and a casino.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Any saloons?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't think any saloon licensed, but I think it is not very dry.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How many people inside that stockade, approximately?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know the correct number. In the Simpson mine there are 200 men with their families. There are two fences there that the county road divides, and there are about two or three hundred.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Two or three hundred men?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Are the miners usually married men?

Mr. DOYLE. Well, I presume they are about half and half.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I suppose those that are married have the average family of four or five?

Mr. DOYLE. I think so. I am not very well acquainted with them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The State federation of labor is not purely a mining organization?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is an organization made up of delegates from all of the various organizations of the State?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; sort of a mother body for all labor bodies in the State.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The State federation, however, has no power, even for the adoption of a resolution that tended toward a general strike of the order?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The ordering of a strike involving members of other organizations would require the same action upon the part of these other organizations that would be required by the miners' organization if they wished to order a strike; that is, that they would have to conform to the laws of their own international organization first?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Therefore, no State federation could order a strike, as that function is exerted solely by the international organization of each trade or calling, and no strike could be ordered in Colorado unless all of the international organizations scattered all over the United States first gave their consent to it?

Mr. DOYLE. That is my understanding of it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And no strike could be ordered even by the executive board of the State federation?

Mr. DOYLE. No, sir; not unless it went through the routine you mention.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that would require a time far beyond what this strike or any other strike would last?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In the testimony given in the early part of our hearing here, Mr. Weitzel, the general manager of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s mines, gave some testimony to which I want to call your attention, and ask the position of the miners organization upon the same. He spoke about the use of permissible powder and black powder. Permissible powder is considered safety powder of some kind?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Weitzel testified to this effect:

"I might say, too, I believe that in the southern counties that about 90 per cent of the nonunion mines mine coal with permissible powder, while very few, probably not over 10 per cent in the union mines, if there are any—I don't know any union mine in the southern county that is using anything but the old black powder. It is forbidden by law, but they are still continuing to use it."

Can you give any light upon that question? First, are the mines operating under your contracts, known as union mines, all using this black powder as against the permissible powder commonly understood as safety powder?

Mr. DOYLE. The matter of powder has no connection with the organization; that is, it would be inferred in that statement that because they were union mines that was the reason they were using black powder. That is not true. There is nothing in the contract forbidding the use of black powder. As I understand it, a large portion of the mines of the State, perhaps a majority, are using the permissible powder, and there are mines in the State that have been given permission by the State mining department, subject to their complying to other conditions named by the State mine inspector, to use black powder. The mines in which the coal dust would not be as liable to be set afire as it would be in other mines.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Has the United Mine Workers as an organization—does your district as an organization or your local union attached to your district—has it by any action or the passage of a resolution or the adoption of any resolution—agreed not to use permissible powder?

Mr. DOYLE. Oh, no; our organization is not opposed to the use of permissible powder. We are opposed to nothing that tends to the safety of human life and limb. We are in favor of all that, and permissible powder tends to reduce the death rate and injury to the miners, therefore, we are in favor of it; but we do not believe, with the little wage received, that we should be made to stand the expense of the change. With other conditions equal, we are in favor of the change, but we believe that it should be at the same relative cost as if we were using black powder.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In other words, the industry should stand the increased cost by reason of the change in powders, and not the burden be placed on the miner?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is the difference in the cost?

Mr. DOYLE. I don't know exactly. That would depend a great deal on the nature of the coal. If the coal was more brittle it would be more difficult than if it was chalky.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know anything about the conditions in the other States as to the use of permissible powder?

Mr. DOYLE. The only thing I know is that during the agitation for the use of it in the Eastern States I glanced over the records and found the position of the miners was against being compelled to stand the burden of the change; that they wanted permissible powder, but that they did not think they ought to be made to pay the price of it—but that it should be at the same relative cost to the miners.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. My recollection is that he testified that they used permissible powder—90 per cent in this case I have just read to you, as against 10—and the indication or the implication is that that was the cause of the union.

Mr. DOYLE. That is correct. The only thing that would govern it is the matter I referred to, the permission granted by the State mine inspector's department, and subject to other conditions that he might impose—I presume such as sprinkling, etc. It may happen so that these mines happened to have this; I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. If there was something else you desire to add, I wish you would do it as concisely as possible, as we are going to finish this evening with you.

Mr. DOYLE. I have a few papers here that I would like to hand in to the stenographer and have them placed in the records.

Chairman WALSH. Just offer them and hand them to the stenographer.

Mr. DOYLE. Here is an extract from the proceedings of the convention of miners held in Trinidad, September, 1913, showing the grievances enumerated by the miners who attended that convention:

WAGE SCALE ADOPTED BY SPECIAL CONVENTION, COLORADO MINE WORKERS, AT TRINIDAD, COLO., SEPTEMBER 16, 1913.

We, the representatives of the mine workers of district 15, after repeated efforts to secure a conference with the operators for the purpose of establishing joint relations and a fair wage agreement, and having been denied such a conference—the operators ignoring our invitation entirely—and believing as we do that we have grievances of great moment that demand immediate adjudication, we submit the following as a basis of settlement:

First. We demand recognition of the union. (State law on this subject, but not complied with.)

Second. We demand a 10 per cent advance in wages on the tonnage rates and a day-wage scale which is practically in accord with the Wyoming day-wage scale. (The present Colorado scale is the lowest paid in any of the Rocky Mountain States. Wage advance is justified.)

Third. We demand an eight-hour workday for all classes of labor in or around the coal mines and at coke ovens. (State law on this subject, but not complied with.)

Fourth. We demand pay for all narrow work and dead work, which includes brushing, timbering, removing falls, handling impurities, etc. (Scale for this work in all other States.)

Fifth. We demand checkweighman at all mines to be elected by the miners, without any interference by company officials in said election. (State law on this subject but not complied with.)

Sixth. We demand the right to trade in any store we please and the right to choose our own boarding place and our own doctor. (State law on this subject but not complied with.)

Seventh. We demand the enforcement of the Colorado mining laws, and the abolition of the notorious and criminal guard system which has prevailed in the mining camps of Colorado for many years. (State laws on these subjects but not complied with.)

If you believe in the enforcement of law and a living wage, you will support the miners in this strike.

MINUTES OF SPECIAL CONVENTION OF DISTRICT 15, UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA, TRINIDAD, COLO., SEPTEMBER 15-16, 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. We will now have reports of the delegates from the various mines.

Delegate BEN SELLERS. The statements I wish to make are that the men have to push their own cars—they do not call them men, they call them burrows—five or six hundred feet; and if one man can not push the car he gets a partner, and if the two can't push it they are told to get out. Furthermore, when they need spikes they have to go around and pull them out of old ties. If they get a piece of track broken the company will not send a man to fix it, but the miner must fix it himself. They carry their own timber. We are charged $1 a month for hospital and 50 cents a month for a locker in the washhouse. Coal diggers get 55 cents a ton for their coal, but it has to be all coal before they get 55 cents a ton for it. A ton is 30 hundredweight. If there is any rock in the coal they dock you for it, and if they get a chance they charge you for dumping it. We can not get timber at the Morley mine; have to go outside after it and carry it 50, 75, and 100 feet to the mouth of the mine.

LAWRENCE LOSEY (Sopris). Conditions are outrageous against the miners. The boss has the privilege of changing a man every day from place to place, and he gives the good places to the fellows who put up the most money to buy him drinks. He came to me one day and said, "You are not going to work in this place to-day," so he pushed me out and put another fellow in my place. I know of another case where a man was pushed out of his place and a friend of the boss put in. He asked the boss one day why he never got a better place, and the boss told him that he would get a better place the next time, but he worked there six years and never got a better place.

ALBERT GORDEN (Graycreek). There is too much rock at the Graycreek mine. When I was working there I could not make my day's wages in the place I was in. Conditions are very bad. No pay received for turning a room or for crosscuts, and there is about 18 inches of rock for which we are not paid for handling.

ROBERT HARLEY. The conditions at the mine where I work are pretty bad. The miner turns his room, for which he receives no pay. He has to hunt his own ties, spikes, rails, and lay track. The miner is compelled to clean up all falls, and when cleaning them up sometimes about two carloads of rock falls, and the boss makes him clean that up also for no pay. I tell you conditions are outrageous. Work 9 and 10 hours a day. I know of four men who asked for a checkweighman and were fired.

Delegate CHARLES COSTO. I am charged $5 a month for a shack; $2 a month for coal whether I burn coal or not. Men are fired as soon as it becomes known that they are members of the union, or have an inclination to be. Not paid for room turning or crosscuts. Have to pay for drinking water. House is in bad condition, and when it rains we have to get under the bed to keep from getting wet.

Delegate OBEZA (Ramey mine). If a man goes to work at 3 o'clock in the morning he can make $3 a day, by reason of cleaning up rock before starting time. If a man goes to work at 7 o'clock he makes about $1.50, because all his time is taken up cleaning rock on the roads. Men who get there at 3 o'clock in the morning help themselves to the rails and spikes belonging to some other fellow who does come until 7 o'clock. Have very poor houses; would just as soon live in a stable. Pay $8 a month rent; $1 a month for water; $1 for lights; and $1.25 for doctor and hospital. Paid 40 cents a ton for machine work; $1 for brushing, but you have to load 10 tons before you get $1 for brushing. Pay $1 a month for water that is not fit to drink.

Delegate LAMONT (Cokedale). The company furnished carbide. It costs 3 cents per can and they charge us 5 cents per can for it. The company makes $5 or more profit a day on carbide. There is 4 feet of rock between this coal, and we are paid $4 a month for handling it. Cars should weigh 5,500 pounds, but we can get only 3,800 and sometimes 4,000 pounds. Get 55 cents a ton for coal and every third car is docked. Pick work is docked every third car; machine work not so much. They watch the men very closely, and discharge all those who give signs of being members of the organization. I didn't work September 1—Labor Day—the first time in 24 years. A guard came in from the coal field and said to me: "Where the h—— have you been to-day? Where are you going now? Where the h—— is your home? What are you doing in Trinidad to-day?" I told him my home was in Cokedale. I had been working there about three months. I said I have been working all day and just came in to purchase supplies. I said you must have the wrong man. He followed me into the car and sat down beside me and began talking to some men. He was trying to corner me you know, so I moved into the next car with the ladies for protection. He waited for me to get off the car and watched me, and ever since he has been after me. The pit boss told me he would have to fire me because I was a strong union man. I told him I thought he was a mighty small potato if he fired a man for belonging to an organization, as everybody is a union man. They keep the men very close in the camps. I want to state that the miners who have been striking for almost four years are better clothed and better fed than those who have been working every day in the southern field. The little children go barefooted and are half clad.

JOSEPH MOSANT (Tobasko). Cars weigh 60 hundredweight. Have to go around and look for rails, spikes, timber, etc., before you can start to work. If you ask the boss why you don't get rails, etc., he will tell you to go around and look for them—go to Pueblo for rails, and go to the hills and get trees for timber. Sometimes you are in danger of being killed on account of a bad roof. I worked at the same mine for seven years. The miner has to go to the stable and get a mule and pull his own coal. Sometimes he is kicked and badly injured—sometimes killed—but the company doesn't care; it only cares for the mule, because the mule costs money; men cost nothing. One day a man was on a car and the mule ran away and smashed him to h——. He was taken to my home, and a few weeks later he died as a result of the accident. The mine inspector came to my house and made the statement that they were glad the mule wasn't killed. Conditions are very bad. We do not get correct weight on cars. Only those who are favorites of the checkweighman get a fair weight. Can not make anything, because we have to go around looking for rails, timber, etc. Lots of gas in the mines every morning, and we can not stand it. Have to come right out again. A great deal of rock falls, and that has to be cleaned up, for which we receive no pay. Manway not fit for a man—not even fit for a horse.

One day a man was kicked by a mule, and they called the mule doctor. The mule doctor took some waste from the machines and applied it to the wounds and oil came out of his mouth. The doctor killed him by applying that dirty waste from the machines to the wounds. He was left lying in the mines three or four hours and had almost bled to death before anyone took him out. He died a few hours after he was taken out. When asked for damages the company said: "Well, I guess not. He had no business to wait until the mule kicked him."

Delegate HADLAN (Valdez). Generally have bad top, and when the top is bad we do the timbering for nothing. No pay for turning a room; no pay for crosscuts. Have to brush bottom for nothing. From 4 to 16 inches of rock between the coal. This rock is all handled for nothing in rooms and entries. We pay $1 a month for water and $2 a month for every room in the house. On idle days miners load empty cars, and load a car in turn for the driver as wages as the company does not pay him on idle days. They always told me in England that this was a free country, but I have found out that it is not a free country. When they tell a man that he has to keep still I think there is something terribly wrong. I worked at Valdez seven or eight weeks, and I want to say that conditions are unbearable.

Delegate DURAN (Bowen mine). Started to work at the Bowen mine last month. Working in a stump. Load one car of coal and shovel two cars of rock. Work long hours; start at 6.30 in the morning; have to leave home at 4 o'clock. Receive no pay for crossbars. Have docking system. I also worked for the Victor-American Fuel Co. Have six guards stationed around the mine. Never had any conversation with them. Never asked for a checkweighman because we would be fired if we did. Weight is very bad. Dock half of a car when a little impurity is found in the coal.

P. SHAW (Piedmont). Pay $1 a month for lamp; 25 cents for gauze. We have a doctor in Piedmont, and we have to pay him $1 a month. He makes one trip a day. Leaves Trinidad at 7 o'clock in the morning, and if he is needed later in the day, and is sent for, he refuses to go, and tells them that he does not intend to spend his time running out there, and that he makes his trip at 7 o'clock in the morning and doesn't intend to make any more. We pay more for rent than any other camp—$2.50 for one room. Work 10 hours a day.

FRANK BALLECK (Berwind). Start to work at 6.30 in the morning. Drivers get in 20 minutes to 7 and come out at 5 o'clock. At night about two or three minutes before quitting time they make you make another trip, which will take you about 15 or 20 minutes. Lots of men after they get through working eight hours go back at night and load coal on the roads. Men lay track for eight hours and fire shots at night. Supposed to fire shots after all the men are out of the mine and before the manway trip starts out. Many times you have a trip of coal, and the pit boss orders the coal to be hauled first. Work 10 hours and get paid for eight. I went up on the tippie one day and the boss had a warrant out for a man who dumped all the checks into one box. Some cars weigh 20 hundredweight, but they were all dumped into one box without marking down the different weights. Pay $1 a month for doctor and hospital and 50 cents a month for blacksmith.

JOSEPH SALVINE (Starkville). Have been working at Starkville for quite a while. The boss found out I was a union man, and every time he gets a bad place he puts me in it, and as soon as I get it cleaned up he puts me in another bad place. Work 10 and 12 hours a day. Have to carry timber, rails, and ties to all rooms. Pay 35 cents a month to company checkweighman. The boss puts him up there and we pay him. Do not get paid for room turning. Have docking system.

GEORGE BLOCOZ. I would like to make a few statements to you in behalf of my people. Now, this delegate doesn't understand much English. He says that the company store charges him $1.50 for hospital and doctor fee. He is taxed 25 cents a month for school; even though he has no children to send to school he must pay just the same. He worked at the same mine about three years. The cars used to weigh 5,000 to 5,500 pounds, and at present they weigh from 2,800 to 3,500 pounds. I have the same statement from a brother from the Bowen mine. He states that four years ago the cars weighed 5,000 to 5,500 pounds and they now weigh 2,800 to 3,000 pounds. Men have to carry timber, rails, and ties about 300 or 400 yards. The men are all unable to move. The Greeks can not stand conditions there any longer, but they are all going to stay and help fight the battle.

DELEGATE FROM OAKVILLE. Twenty-one men were fired from the mine at Oakville for refusing to work on Labor Day, and about 10 o'clock that night several detectives and deputy sheriffs marched us out of the camp and followed us for about 7 miles at the point of rifles. They followed us everywhere and watched every movement. We are compelled to trade at the company store.

Delegate KELLEY (Forbes). I worked at Forbes five months. Conditions there are rather bad. Cars are 6 feet long, 3 feet 4 inches wide and 2 feet 4 inches high. Paid 65 cents run of mine; 30 cents machine work. Machine runners work day and night. Paid $2.50 for entry work. Have to lay your own track, and must carry it from one entry to another and get no pay for it. Not paid for room turning; not paid for cleaning falls. If you ask that something be done, they tell you that those are the conditions, and that they do not intend to do anything to remedy them.

FRANK TALERBEG. Conditions are pretty bad. Receive no pay for room turning; no pay for rock; no pay for dead work at all. Crosscuts we are paid $1 a yard; timbering back entries 25 cents. We are charged 25 cents for lamp wicks. If you break a battery, you are charged $2.50. The cars hold from 4,000 to 4,200 pounds. They give us from 2,600 to 2,900.

R. WILKINSON (Primer). Work in 7-foot vein; 2 veins rock, 3 veins coal. About 20 inches coal in the bottom and 8 inches of rock and then 20 inches of coal. Paid 60 cents a ton for coal; nothing for rock. Paid 50 cents a ton for coal, and have to shoot it yourself. Paid $1 for brushing all the way from 16 inches to about 3 feet.

WILLIAM COLLIER (Rugby). Paid 60 cents a ton for pick work; 50 cents a foot for crosscuts; 35 cents a yard for bottom brushing. Lay your own track for nothing; make your own ties out of props. Entries are 8 to 10 feet wide. Pay $28 a month for board to company boarding house. Two sleep in a room, and the room is about 12 by 10.

J. McDONALD (Kenneth mine). Receive no pay for turning a room; no pay for crosscuts. Men use on an average of 50 cents to $1 worth of powder to shoot down one day's coal. I don't want any more of it at 65 cents a car. You are docked 15 cents a car if any bone is found in the coal, and if the car is not filled up to the top you are also docked 15 cents. Receive no pay for dead work, and if you foot a roll you have to cut through it. They charge from $6 to $8 for a two or three room house. I am now living at Cedar Hill and have been ordered out of the house several times. My son went to work at the Cedar Hill mine the other day, and, of course, if they ordered us out now they would be ordering out one of their own employees. I was renting a house from the C. F. & I. Co., and ordered some coal one day. They were very busy, and I was afraid they wouldn't get the coal delivered that month, so I managed to rake up a little slack, and when pay day came I had to pay $2 for the coal. I said: I guess because I wanted coal I have to pay for it. I was told that they always charge everybody renting a house $2 for coal, and that keeps them from stealing it. Well, some men may steal coal, but I felt like asking them what they did with the coal they stole from us.

Delegate FERNANDEZ. The conditions at Tollerburg are very bad. We can not travel through the manway and have to risk our lives going through the haulage way. We are not paid for room turning or rock or dead work. The cars weigh from 4,000 to 4,200 pounds, and we get credit for from 2,600 to 2,900 pounds.

Delegate LEWIS. At the Toltec mine we are expected to trade at the company store, and we have to pay $1 a month for hospital and doctor. I asked several men why we couldn't get more pay. They didn't know, but said that since the union was not there the men had to settle on the third Saturday of each month as pay day.

Delegate DOMINICHE. When I went to work at the Tollerburg mine I asked the superintendent why it was that the large and small cars weighed alike, and he replied saying he forgot to tell me the scales were blocked. Every day we have from 700 to 800 pounds of coal stolen from us, and we do not get paid for laying track.

Delegate DOMINSKY (Walsenburg). The air course is not timbered, and it has to be watched very close for fear the roof will fall in and the air be shut off from the miners. Another thing is the safety of the drivers, which I think should be looked after, for when a fall occurs they do not timber the road, and the drivers are compelled to pull coal under dangerous roofs. Do not pay anything for room turning or for rolls.

Delegate KOTZMAN. In the Carbondale mine we have to shoot down our own coal. We are paid $1 for brushing from 16 inches to 3 feet. A great deal of rock falls frequently, and we have to clean it up. We are always promised pay for it, but we get nothing more than promises. Since the mine inspector visited the mine, which was some time ago, the company bought a fan, and it has not yet been installed. We are docked 600 or 800 pounds if we load bony coal, and the coal has bone at the bottom, center, and top. Besides this, we have to remove 4 or 5 inches of rock and do not get paid for it. We will have to strike for about 10 cents increase on the ton, for we have to have more money to live.

Delegate VELL. If a man wants a good room to work in at the Delagua mine he has to pay the pit boss from $25 to $50 cash for a good room, and anyone who refuses to pay the boss or refuses to buy him drinks has to give his room to some one who does. Everyone has to pay from $10 to $15 to the boss and buy the drinks for him on pay day.

Delegate RICHARD DONALD. At the Piedmont mine they do not weigh the coal. There is a seam of dirt in the coal ranging from 4 to 17 inches, and to make the miners believe they are being paid for this dirt they add 6 cents to every car of coal mined each month, which is very unfair, since the man with a large seam of dirt loads the least number of cars of coal, therefore receives less pay than the man who works in the place having a small seam of dirt.

Delegate FLOCKHART. I have been working at Oakview for seven years. If a man appears to be a union man he is fired. We are charged $1.50 a month for doctor and hospital; 25 cents for school tax, and 25 cents for water. The doctor visits the camp once a day, and that is at 10 o'clock in the morning, and if anyone should happen to need him after that trip they have to pay $5 for an extra trip. If he refuses to pay it the doctor gets $5 worth of scrip at the company's office, and the same is charged against the account of the man for whom the doctor was called. One man had his leg broken two years ago, and it is not well yet. The doctor did not set it right and he had to have it doctored by some one else at his own expense, which cost him about $500. If a man was dying, they would not have him taken to the hospital.

Delegate MILLER. The Routt County Fuel Co. have very large cars. The coal is not weighed and they pay 80 cents a car. The checks are hung on the outside of the car and if a load does not happen to suit the boss he will take the check off that car and the man does not get paid for loading it. It is then placed next to the engine and the coal used for firing. When they are in need of coal for the boilers they will stop a trip near the boiler room and unload coal off the miners' cars.

There is a company saloon, grocery store, and doctor by the name of Cole in that camp. This doctor has caused a number of people to be cripples. Some time ago a piece of rock lodged in my eye, and I had to go to the hospital, and when passing through the ward a patient asked the doctor what he expected to do with him. The doctor laughingly replied, "Well, he will be butchered up by the time he leaves here." I came out of the hospital minus this eye [indicating], and have talked to several doctors since, all of whom said that it was a crime to take the eye out. We are charged $1 a month for that doctor, and I have worked in Routt County for three years and have always contributed $1 each month toward the doctor's fund, and when leaving the hospital I was presented with a bill for $12.50 for medical supplies, and in a day or two I received another bill for $50 for the operation. I refused to pay these bills, and I think I done right in this respect. There are a good many cases similar to mine and some a great deal worse. Anyone going to that hospital comes out minus a limb, if he comes out at all, and the doctor only laughs about it, as though it were a joke.

Delegate KARL (Coal Creek). The fire boss says that his experience has been that the fire boss whose duty it is to care for the air in the mine does not have to keep it in good shape unless they have a union to back up the miners when making complaints.

Delegate FONTONCCHIO. I have been sent here by my local and was instructed to say that we ought to have a strike, and have it quick. Don't give the companies any more time, for we will never get our grievances adjusted until we do so.

Delegate VAN LOO. I wish to say that the Brookside Local Union, No. 2546, at Florence, have sent me here with instructions to say that the members of that local union have kept the local union in good standing with the district and national ever since the 1903 strike, and have waited patiently all these years for our officials to call us together to meet the operators and demand justice.

Delegate GEORGE STEWART (Black Diamond mine). I worked at Black Diamond two months and find conditions pretty bad. The coal is 3½ feet high and we only receive 85 cents a ton for it. We pay $2 a room for house rent. Weight very poor. In my judgment we should get 2,400 pounds on the car and we only get from 1,700 to 2,000. We are compelled to push our loaded cars from the face.

NICK WILLE. You have to pay the boss from $35 to $50 for a good room; $20 cash and the rest taken out of your salary. The boss asked me for $30 and said he would give me a good room for it, but as soon as I ceased to pay him and buy him drinks he changed my place and put another fellow in it who promised to put up the money. If you want to keep a good place you have to pay the boss and buy drinks for him every day or he will put you out.

JOSEPH MADONA (Valdez). I asked the boss for a job and he gave it to me. I went in one night and the place was full of water, so I said to the boss, "That place doesn't suit me; there is too much water in it. He said, "Go along, and I will change you to day shift to-morrow." I worked there two more nights, and then spoke to the boss again, and he said, "You work there two more nights then I will change you." I worked there two weeks before I got another place. When I asked for track I was told to ask the driver for it, which I did, and was informed by him that I would have to secure my own track. I worked one day there for nothing. I had to go about seventeen or eighteen hundred feet to get rails. Had to wait half a day before they were brought to the entry. Could not get a car to haul them out. I asked the tracklayer if he was going to lay the track in these rooms, and he said, "No; everybody has to lay their own track." It took me one day to lay track. The cars are so large that it is necessary to have three chains in the body to prevent the sides from spreading. Get 55 cents a ton for coal. Never load by the ton, load by the acre. Cars weigh from 36 to 40 hundredweight. Ought to weigh more than 3 ton. Coal has two veins of rock; about 18 inches on the bottom. Some places 14 inches of rock; about 18 inches on the bottom. Some places 14 inches of rock; some places 8 and some 2 feet. Have to shovel rock for nothing. Turn an entry 12 feet wide for nothing. No pay for timbering. Insist that you do your own timbering, or they have your turns stopped as a penalty. When there is a fall on the road and the driver orders you to clean it up you must do so, as the driver has full power to stop turns when the miners refuse to do company work without pay. Pay $2.25 a room house rent, and a very poor house it is. Am charged 25 cents for blacksmith. Have $4.52 coming to me after loading seven box cars of coal. Have to go outside to get rails, and have to go in old rooms to get timber. It sometimes takes you half a day to find rails.

JOHN FARGO (Oakview). Worked at Oakview about eight months. Conditions are very bad. Get no rails, timber, or anything. Air in the entries is pretty bad. The roads in the mine are very dirty and you can not keep the cars on the track. Paid 40 cents a ton for loading machine coal; 56½ for pick work. Load small Santa Fe car and get about 2,800 pounds. Now, they have got up a little higher; get close to 4,000 pounds since everybody has commenced to move. Have docking system, and sometimes dock half a car. There was a lady out there running a rooming house, and the superintendent said to her one day, "What are you going to do when the strike comes on?" "Well," she said, "I'll not feed any scabs." He gave her two days to move.

TOM LITTLE (Aguilar). I was instructed by the men at Green Canyon to impress upon the minds of this body the terrible conditions existing at that mine. After cleaning up a fall the boss comes along and insists that they timber; all this without any pay. We have numerous grievances, most of them of the same nature as has been related here by other delegates. I want to say that if you will stand back of your officials, the fight will soon be won. It is essential for you to adhere to the organization.

T. EVANS (Fremont County). We have been blessed in Fremont County from what the situation in the southern field is. However, we have some grievances up there. If I had been in the southern field, I suppose I would have been dead by this time, because of all the evidence given I could not live under such conditions. I would be dead.

GEORGE COLLIER (El Paso County). I have been very much impressed by the testimony told in this conversation about conditions throughout Colorado. They are such that I believe we have all been made to blush to think that we have tolerated and maintained the system that has been shown prevails in Colorado. I think it is high time for us all to see what our duty is in this State. We can look to each and every State in the Nation and find conditions far superior than those we enjoy here. I hope that when we leave this convention we will go away from here with a different feeling than when we came. It gives me pleasure to observe the difference in organized mines and unorganized mines. We have already organized one mine in El Paso County, and in the last few days we have succeeded in organizing another. In the last few days this same mine has placed upon the tipple a checkweighman, which makes the second mine in El Paso County that has acknowledged that our demand for a checkweighman was a just one. The mine is thoroughly organized and is far superior to the other mines, but it is impossible for us to make any further advancement until all other mines are organized with us. It is optional to the mine boss as to the hours the miners work. He can keep them 8, 9, or 10 hours if he so desires. The sentiment in El Paso County is that there has never been anything done in that vicinity to try and organize those mines. My friends, I want to say that conditions have been such that any man who expressed his sentiments or complained about conditions he had to take his tools out the next morning. I do not care what your heart may be in trying to uphold the organization unless you have the officials of the organization at your back you are going to starve to death in Colorado.

Mr. DOYLE. And may I ask has the copies of letters that the miners sent to the governor been introduced into the record?

Chairman WALSH. No, sir; they have not been, according to my recollection.

Mr. DOYLE. Here is a letter sent, to the operators, dated August 26, 1913:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Denver, Colo., August 26, 1913.

DEAR SIR: For many years the coal miners of Colorado have been desirous of working under union conditions and, as you no doubt know, have made this desire known on innumerable occasions, a large number of them being discharged because of their wishes in this respect.

While we know your past policy has been one of keen opposition to our union, we are hopeful at this time that you will look at this matter in a different way and will meet with us in joint conference for the purpose of amicably adjusting all points at issue in the present controversy. We are no more desirous of a strike than you are, and it seems to us that we owe it to our respective interests, as well as the general public, to make every honest endeavor to adjust our differences in an enlightened manner.

It ought to be evident to yourself and associates that Colorado can not stand alone in opposition to our movement. The operators of Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oklahoma, Kansas, Arkansas, Missouri, Texas, and Iowa, embracing all the important coal-producing States west of the Mississippi River, have been working under contracts with our union for years, and it goes without saying that the operators in the above-mentioned States, who once held the same opinion concerning our union that you now seem to hold, are at this time well satisfied with our organization and are much pleased over the security and stability given to the industry through the medium of the trade agreement.

Why oppose us here, spending millions of dollars in an industrial conflict for no good purpose? Why is it not possible and practical for you to do in this State what the operators in all the neighboring States have already done?

We feel sure you appreciate the gravity of this situation and will do your part to meet it at this time, when no sting will be left behind, which is always the result of a strike settlement.

Let us meet now as friends and proceed to settle this entire controversy with honor to ourselves, with credit to our people, and with faith in each other.

Hoping you will favor us with a prompt reply, we beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

Policy Committee Representing Colorado Miners.

Mr. DOYLE. Letter May 26, 1914, to joint legislative committee, appointed by the special session of the legislature in an effort to make a settlement of the strike:

DENVER, COLO., May 26, 1914.

To the joint legislative committee appointed by the special session of the legislature of the nineteenth general assembly, State of Colorado, Senator G. J. Burris, Chairman.

GENTLEMEN: Responding to the request made for information as to our position concerning you committee, and the performance of its duties, we take pleasure in stating that we are desirous of aiding the committee in every way in performing every duty devolving upon it by the resolutions adopted by the legislature. You may therefore call upon us for all of the information at our command, and we will cheerfully furnish it.

Concerning the further inquiry as to the committee sitting as a board of mediation to settle the strike, we beg leave to state that we have submitted the resolutions under which the committee was appointed to our counsel. He informs us that neither directly nor indirectly do the resolutions adopted by the legislature give to the committee any power whatever of mediation, the subject being in no way referred to either directly or indirectly. He informs us that your powers are that of an investigating committee, and that any award that you might make against the coal operators would be of no legal force or effect. In other words the legislature met and adjourned without taking a single step for the settling of the strike and without appointing any committee with power even to attempt to settle the strike.

We trust, however, notwithstanding this failure on the part of the legislature, that you will use your good efforts toward a settlement of the industrial conflict now existing and which every good citizen should desire to be brought to a speedy and proper end.

We submit to you that the proper way to bring about this settlement is to have a conference between the operators' representatives and the strikers' representatives. We feel confident that such a conference would result in a speedy settlement.

It must be plain and clear to all that no controversy can ever be settled until there is an understanding between the contending parties. We therefore respectfully suggest that you use your good efforts to arrange for a conference between the representatives of the employers and employees. We pledge to your committee that if such a conference is arranged, we will enter that conference in good faith and make an earnest effort to amicably adjust all difficulties, and we express to you our absolute confidence that such a conference will speedily bring to Colorado industrial peace.

*International Board Member, District No. 15,
United Mine Workers of America.*

*Secretary-Treasurer, District No. 15,
United Mine Workers of America.*

Mr. DOYLE. Call September 8, 1913, sent by the miners to the operators, by the policy committee calling the Trinidad convention, September, 1913, for a joint conference:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Denver, Colo., September 8, 1913.

DEAR SIR: We hereby notify you that there will be a joint convention of miners and operators of this State at Trinidad, Colo., next Monday, September 15, at which time we hope to see your company represented.

We are making this last endeavor to settle our differences peacefully and with the hope of preventing a strike.

If you will kindly come to this joint convention, we feel sure that we can adjust all points at issue between our respective interests in a satisfactory manner.

Anticipating the pleasure of meeting you at Trinidad on the above-mentioned date, we beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

FRANK J. HAYES,

JOHN MCLENNAN,
E. L. DOYLE,

Policy Committee Representing Colorado Mine Workers.

Mr. DOYLE. Letter under date of November 12, 1913, to Gov. Elias M. Ammons in answer to his verbal proposition concerning a settlement, or effort to make a settlement, in Routt County:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Denver, Colo., November 12, 1913.

HON. ELIAS M. AMMONS,

Governor of the State of Colorado, Denver, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Having carefully considered the verbal proposition submitted by you on the 12th day of November, 1913, as a working basis upon which to have the mines in Routt County, Colo., resume operation, which you propose to both miners and operators, in substance, as follows:

First. That a 10 per cent increase in wages be granted.

Second. That no discrimination be made against the miners now on strike.

Third. The right of the miners to belong to a union, without interference on the part of the companies.

Fourth. The right to have a checkweighman, if the miners so desire.

Fifth. The right of the miners to board and trade where they choose.

Sixth. That the operators agree to meet a committee of their employees to settle disputes that may arise in or around the mines, and that, in the event of failure to settle such dispute, the miners to choose two of their number, the operators two, and Father Meyers, of Steamboat Springs, Colo., to act as the fifth person to constitute a board of five, whose decision shall be final.

Seventh. This arrangement to be in effect until March 1, 1914.

We desire to call your attention to the fact that the policy committee is extremely anxious to bring about a peaceful solution of this great industrial struggle. Realizing, as we do, that the public, who is always the innocent victim in any strike, is often the greatest sufferer. However, we are of the opinion that the policy committee has no authority to deviate from the instructions laid down by the convention of miners held in Trinidad, Colo., on September 15-16, 1913, to which every coal operator in the State of Colorado was extended an invitation to be present and participate in the deliberations, and therefore we can not agree to enter into any kind of a verbal arrangement or in any manner make any change in the wage agreement outlined by the convention without first calling a special convention of the miners of this State. Furthermore, any arrangement that is entered into with any operator in this State that deviates from our instructions by the convention would be unfair to the other independent operators who have signed our scale and who now employ about 1,500 miners. It is our opinion that instead of bringing about harmony and a peaceful solution of our strike it would have the opposite effect, for the reason that every operator would have the right to demand the same modification in his contract.

Assuring you of our appreciation of your sincere and untiring efforts, it is with deep regret that we are unable to accept on behalf of the miners of this State the proposition submitted by you, and we sincerely hope that with the cooperation of yourself and other fair-minded citizens a satisfactory solution of this problem will be found in the near future.

Yours, very truly,

Policy Committee Representing District 15, Mine Workers.

Mr. DOYLE. Copy of letter under date of November 13, written to Gov. Elias M. Ammons, by the policy committee, at his request that we submit a proposition for the purpose of reaching a settlement of the coal strike:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Denver, Colo., November 13, 1913.

HON. ELIAS M. AMMONS,

Governor of the State of Colorado, Denver Colo.

DEAR SIR: As per your request of a few days ago, wherein you expressed the desire to have the policy committee submit a proposition for the purpose of reaching a basis of settlement of the present coal strike, we beg to assure you that the United Mine Workers are and have always been ready to enter into a conference with the coal operators of this State for the purpose of adjusting the differences now existing between the miners and operators of Colorado.

Owing to the insistent demand on the part of the coal miners of this State, that the mine workers' union assist them in forming a union to protect their interests, to secure better working conditions and a just wage for their labor, and believing that unless something was done to relieve this condition, an industrial conflict would result, your attention was called to this condition of affairs several months before the strike was called, and we asked that you use your good offices for the purpose of bringing the miners and operators into a conference.

Later, many attempts by yourself to secure a conference with the gentlemen operating these mines having failed to bring results, the miners of the State continuing in their demand upon the organization, the international executive board of the United Mine Workers of America held a meeting at their headquarters in the month of July, 1913, in which they decided to answer the appeal of the Colorado mine workers and lend every effort to adjust their differences without a strike, and on August 1, 1913, the international president delegated Frank J. Hayes, vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, to take charge of the organization's work, with instructions to use all honorable means to effect an adjustment of the differences existing between the operators and miners.

The undersigned policy committee, which was organized at that time, realizing the seriousness of this situation, held several interviews with you, as governor of the State, in an effort to avert the threatened strike.

Your good offices again failing to secure a conference between the miners and operators, we extended the following invitation to the operators of Colorado:

AUGUST 26, 1913.

DEAR SIR: For many years the miners of Colorado have been desirous of working under union conditions, and, as you no doubt know, have made this desire known on innumerable occasions, a large number of them being discharged because of their wishes in this respect.

While we know your past policy has been one of keen opposition to the union, we are hopeful at this time that you will look at this matter in a different way and will meet with us in joint conference for the purpose of amicably adjusting all points at issue in the present controversy. We are no more desirous of a strike than you are, and it seems to us that we owe it to our respective interests, as well as the general public, to make every honest endeavor to adjust our differences in an enlightened manner.

This failing to receive favorable consideration, and the demands of the miners becoming more insistent that a strike be called, we issued the following calls for a special joint convention of miners and operators, to meet in the city of Trinidad, September 15, 1913.

DENVER, COLO., September 8, 1913.

To all Local Unions of District 15, U. M. W. of A.:

REPORT OF SCALE.

We, the representatives of the mine workers of district 15, after repeated efforts to secure a conference with the operators for the purpose of establishing joint relations and a fair wage agreement, and having been denied such a conference, the operators ignoring our invitation entirely and believing as we do that we have grievances of great moment that demand immediate adjudication, we submit the following as a basis of settlement:

First. We demand recognition of the union.

Second. We demand a 10 per cent advance in wages on the tonnage rates, and the following day-wage scale, which is practically in accord with the Wyoming day-wage scale (inside):

Miners (working by the day)-----	$3. 45
Timbermen-----	3. 45
Tracklayers-----	3. 45
Shot firers and shot inspectors-----	4. 00

Inside engineer-----	3. 45
Ripe riders-----	3. 45
Greasers (boys)-----	2. 05
Switch boys and boy coupling at partings-----	2. 05
Trappers (boys)-----	1. 60
Stablemen and barn men, inside-----	3. 15
Inside laborers, not classified-----	3. 30
Pump men-----	3. 30
Motor men-----	3. 45
Motor brakemen and tail-end riders-----	3. 30
Gas watchmen-----	4. 00

OUTSIDE DAY WAGE SCALE.

Engineers, $112.50 per month, based upon an eight-hour workday.

Firemen-----per day--	$3. 15
Head blacksmith (in charge of one or more blacksmiths)-----do--	3. 90
Other blacksmiths-----do--	3. 50
Blacksmiths' helpers-----do--	2. 80

Electricians (in and around the mine)-----do--	3. 50

Boiler makers	Per day	$4. 00
Masons and bricklayers (in and around the mine)	do	3. 50
Slate pickers (boys)	do	2. 05
Pipe men	do	3. 45
Miners taken from face	do	3. 45
Box-car loader, runner	do	3. 30
Night watchman (if performing work for which a scale is made)	do	2. 80
Outside labor not classified	do	2. 65
Greasers (boys)	do	2. 05
Tipple men	do	2. 80

We also demand a 10 per cent advance on the wages paid coke-oven workers and on all other classes of labor not specified herein.

Third. We demand an eight-hour workday for all classes of labor in or around the coal mine and at coke ovens.

Fourth. We demand pay for all narrow work and dead work, which includes brushing, timbering, removing falls, handling impurities, etc.

Fifth. We demand a checkweighman at all mines to be elected by the miners without any interference by company officials in said election.

Sixth. We demand the right to trade in any store we please, and the right to choose our own boarding place and our own doctor.

Seventh. We demand the enforcement of the Colorado mining laws and the abolition of the notorious and criminal guard system which has prevailed in the mining camps of Colorado for many years.

REPORT OF POLICY.

In view of the failure of our efforts to secure a peaceful solution of our differences, and in view of the fact that the operators have even refused to answer any of our invitations for a joint meeting, we hereby instruct that a strike call be issued by the district policy committee to all the mine workers in Colorado to take effect Tuesday, September 23, 1913.

We further recommend that any member who is discharged because of affiliation with our movement shall be promptly supported by the organization.

In conformity with the past policy of the organization, which has worked so successfully in other districts, we recommend that we sign up with all companies that agree to our demands, provided, however, that they agree not to furnish coal to fill contracts of companies on strike, and that companies that sign up must do so for all the mines they operate.

September 23 was the date set by the convention for the miners of the entire State to strike unless the operators agree to meet their representatives in conference on or before that date. Many efforts were made by yourself and others during the time of this convention and the date of the strike to bring both parties to this controversy into a conference, all of which failed, and on September 23 fully 95 per cent of the miners employed in the mines of this State responded to the strike call. Since that time a large number of independent mine operators have signed contracts with the miners' union in accordance with the policy adopted in the convention.

The strike situation continues to grow more serious from day to day, and if permitted to continue longer it might be the result of involving thousands of working men and women in our State. Realizing, as we do, that Colorado is facing the most critical period in its history, business is practically at a standstill, and the citizens who are not directly interested are the greatest sufferers in this industrial conflict, we desire to make it plain to you and to the people of this State that we stand ready and willing to do everything in our power to have this unfortunate condition of affairs settled. Therefore, we beg to submit the following proposition:

That the operators meet and confer with five representatives of the miners' union, as follows: Three striking coal miners and the following officials of the United Mine Workers' Union, who are citizens of the State of Colorado; John McLennan, president of district 15, U. M. W. of A., and John R. Lawson, member of the international executive board, for the purpose of arranging a basis for a settlement. The basis agreed upon by this committee and the operators, to be submitted to a special convention of the miners of Colorado, for their approval or rejection.

Sincerely hoping that the above proposition will lead to an early adjustment of the coal strike, we beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

FRANK J. HAYES,
JOHN R. LAWSON,
JOHN McLENNAN,
E. L. DOYLE,

Policy Committee Representing District 15, Mine Workers.

Mr. DOYLE. Proposition submitted by the governor of the State, under date of November 27, 1913, to Messrs. Welborn, Osgood, Brown, operators, and Messrs. Evans, Allison, Hammon, miners, in an effort to settle the strike after having a conference with the miners:

DENVER, COLO., November 27, 1913.

Messrs. J. F. Welborn, John C. Osgood, D. W. Brown, operators, and Messrs. T. X. Evans, Archie Allison, David Hammon, miners, Denver, Colo.

GENTLEMEN: Having listened to your conference throughout yesterday, and believing from representations made that there is no material difference between you sufficient to warrant a continuance of the present difficulties, I desire to make a suggestion for the termination of the present industrial dispute.

The one apparently insurmountable obstacle to a settlement was the recognition of the union, and almost every other material difference between you hinged about that question, or is covered by existing law.

There is no law compelling the operators to recognize the union nor to permit the employees to exact that recognition. The statute does provide, however, for the right to join a union if the miners so wish without coercion or interference. This law has been read to all the conference and its provisions agreed to by each conferee. It reads as follows, and I suggest to you that its provisions be made the basis of a conclusion on this point:

"It shall be unlawful for any individual, company, or corporation, or any member of any firm, or agent, officer, or employee of any company or corporation to prevent employees from forming, joining, or belonging to any lawful labor organization, union, society, or political party, or to coerce or attempt to coerce employees by discharging or threatening to discharge them from their employ or the employ of any firm, company, or corporation, because of their connection with such lawful labor organization, union, society, or political party." (Sec. 3925, Revised Statutes of Colorado, 1908.)

Bearing in mind the discussion on the other points involved, I suggest the following as a satisfactory solution:

The employment of a checkweighman as provided by law, giving the miners themselves the right to choose their own checkweighman.

The carrying out in good faith the statute making it unlawful to use or employ, directly or indirectly, the so-called "truck" or "scrip" system in the payment of men.

The enforcement of the law for an eight-hour day in all underground mines and coke ovens, as provided in chapter 95 of the session laws of 1913.

That all employees shall have the right to buy where they will without interference or coercion of any kind whatsoever.

That all employees shall have a semimonthly pay day according to the custom now prevailing in coal mines over most of the State.

That all employees shall have the right to board where they please.

The enforcement of all the provisions of the coal-mine inspection law of 1913, providing for the safety of the mine and the protection of the life and health of the employees.

That all employees now on strike shall be given employment except where their places have been filled or where they have been guilty of violence or other unlawful acts, and that where places have been filled other work will be furnished as soon as practicable.

Mr. DOYLE. Affidavit of Andrew Tronlitakis, under date of December 13, 1912, showing that he was compelled to buy a job in the mines in northern Colorado:

AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF COLORADO, City and County of Denver, ss:

Andrew Tronlitakis, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says:

That on or about September 14, A. D. 1912, affiant met one Jeff Rhodes in Denver, Colo., and applied to the said Rhodes for work at the said Consolidated Coal & Coke Co., at Dacono, Colo., at which mine the said Jeff Rhodes was the pit boss; that the said Jeff Rhodes agreed with the affiant that he would secure work for affiant in consideration of affiant paying said Jeff Rhodes some money, the amount of which was not stated at that time; that thereafter and on, to wit, the 19th day of September affiant went to the said mine and was hired by the said Jeff Rhodes, and in consideration of such employment paid to the said Jeff Rhodes the sum of $20 in cash immediately upon said last-mentioned date.

That affiant continued in the employ of said coal company for a period of about two weeks until he received his first pay, which pay was received by affiant on the regular pay days of the company. That affiant was last paid on December 7, A. D. 1912, and on the 9th day of December, a few days after said pay was received, the said Jeff Rhodes came to affiant and demanded that affiant pay him some more money, which affiant refused to do. Upon such refusal by affiant to pay said Jeff Rhodes more money affiant was immediately discharged by the said Jeff Rhodes.

And further affiant saith not.

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Las Animas, ss:

Personally appeared before me this 28th day of November, A. D. 1913, J. R. Petty, who first being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: On the 24th day of November, 1913, while taking out the Valdez pay roll to the striking miners for the United Mine Workers of America, I was held up by a squad of militiamen, in command of one Kennedy; while he was ordering the two parties who accompanied me searched, he walked up very close to me, and says: "What have you in there?" I answered, "A small bunch of money." He replied, "What is the chances of holding you up and splitting the pay roll with you," and I, placing my hands upon my revolver, told him there was nothing doing, and requested him to back off, and he did so.

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Boulder, ss:

I, Mike Stoyanoff, having been employed at the Mitchell mine at Lafayette, Colo., operated by the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., since August 5, 1913, did on this the 26th day of August, 1913, with a number of other men employed in said mine, make a complaint to the mine foreman about the weight received for coal mined, and not receiving a satisfactory reply, offered to act as checkweighman for my fellow workmen.

On hearing this the mine boss and Mr. J. G. Williams, the superintendent, refused to permit a checkweighman upon the mine tibble, and when I told him that for 45 cars one of the miners received only 41 tons, he said that the coal was light; at 5.30 o'clock p. m. John Thomas, the boss, came to my house with five guards and ordered me out of the house; they gave me only 10 minutes to get ready to leave, although I pleaded for more time; one of them phoned for a wagon, which came for my trunks, and I was compelled with others to leave at once.

AFFIDAVIT OF MRS. FRANK FITCH.

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Routt, ss:

I, Mrs. Frank Fitch, of Steamboat Springs, Colo., being first duly sworn, on her oath doth say. That I was present in the court room in the county courthouse at Steamboat Springs, Colo., on the evening of January 2, 1914; that at said time in said court room Justice of the Peace O. E. Mallory was holding a preliminary hearing in a case where Martin Steinhardt and others were charged with rioting in Oak Creek, Colo.; that I was sitting in said court room just behind Frank Garnier and near to the said justice and to the defendants, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock on the evening of said January 2, 1914, when a body of men, among whom were George Salter, Hugh Monson, Dr. Cruikshank, Mr. ——— Welsh, first name to the affiant unknown, Dan Stukey, H. C. Dodge, Harry Ratcliff, R. M. Smith, William Green, Mr. ——— Bivens, first name to affiant unknown, came into the court room, and soon thereafter at the conclusion of the statement of the justice in making his findings and while the court was yet in session, one of their number asked the said court that Harry Ratcliff be allowed to speak; that thereupon said Ratcliff came forward to a place near the court and near to said Garnier, one Ferguson, and said Steinhardt and said substantially as follows:

"Speaking for this body of men and others who are the taxpayers of Routt County numbering about 1,000 men and from all parts of the county, from McCoy to Craig, I inform you that this body of men have determined that Frank Garnier, Martin Steinhardt, and J. L. Ferguson are undesirable citizens and must leave the borders of Routt County within 24 hours. Now, gentlemen, this order must be obeyed. This body of men mean business."

That thereupon said Ratcliff indicated by pointing his finger at the three men named; that at this instant Mr. A. A. Mann, who was acting as attorney for said Martin Steinhardt and the other defendants in said hearing, arose and attempted to speak to the court and to the said body of men, but was prevented by voices from said body of men saying "Sit down," "Shut up," and "Shut your mouth"; that the said body of men, including Harry Ratcliff, left the court room. Mr. DOYLE. Affidavit by Mike Livoda, under date of the 29th day of June, 1912, certifying as to how he was beaten up by a deputy sheriff in Huerfano County, taken out of bed at night and beaten up for being a union miner:

STATE OF COLORADO, Las Animas County, ss:

Mike Livoda, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, on his oath doth depose and state:

That he is, and on the 13th day of June, 1912, was a member of the United Mine Workers of America, and that for the past two years has been engaged in the business of coal mining as a worker in coal mines in Las Animas and Huerfano Counties, Colo.

That his home at the present time is at Trinidad, Colo. That on the 13th day of June, 1912, he went to the coal camp of Ravenwood, in the county of Huerfano, Colo., arriving at that camp at about 8.30 p. m. of said day, and went to the house of his countrymen and friends to visit them and intended to remain with his friends and countrymen during the night of the 13th of June. That he went to bed in the said home of his friends and countrymen about 10 o'clock p. m. on said night, and had gone to sleep in a room of said house with three of his friends and countrymen; that about 11.30 or 12 o'clock on said night, he was awakened by three men who had entered the room where affiant was sleeping, and that an electric light was turned in his face and he was ordered by said men to get up and dress; that after he had dressed he was told to hold up his hands, and one of the men went through his pockets and took from him his books, keys, and money, but afterwards returned to affiant his keys and money and kept his books; the men then said, "Come and go with us," and one of the men grabbed him by the belt, and as he was complying with their orders and was stepping out of the house one of the men struck him in the face and knocked him down and he began to cry for help; the men then put their hands over his mouth and said, "Shut up, you son of a bitch, or we will kill you"; while affiant was on the ground he was brutally beaten and kicked so that it was with great difficulty that he could walk; that his face was badly beaten and lacerated, and affiant became weak from loss of blood; that affiant was then picked up by said men and held up by his arms, one man having hold of each arm, and forced out of Ravenwood camp, and while being forced out of said Ravenwood camp he was kicked, beaten, and assaulted by said men, and affiant was told to leave the State of Colorado, and that if he did not leave the State at once they would kill him; and said men fired off their revolvers several times while making said threats.

That as a result of said brutal treatment and beating and kicking, affiant was confined to bed for one week and was unable to work, and that his back is badly injured as the result of said kicking and beating and that he still suffers great pain on account thereof.

That the names of said men who were present and assaulted and beat and robbed the affiant of his books and papers were James Farr, deputy sheriff at Ravenwood mine; John Nish, superintendent at Ravenwood mine; Joe Watson, guard at Ravenwood mine; Charles Kaiser, assistant superintendent at Walsen mine; and one Carr, whose first name is unknown, deputy sheriff at Walsen mine; all in Huerfano County, Colo.

Affiant further states that all of the above-named parties were acting in concert in assaulting, beating, robbing, and ordering affiant to leave the State of Colorado.

That affiant has applied to the proper authorities of Huerfano and Las Animas Counties and requested that warrants issue for the arrest of the persons who assaulted him, and offered to make and swear to criminal complaints against said persons, but that said authorities refused and still refuse to issue warrants or to prosecute said persons or either of them.

My commission expires August 17, 1913.

Mr. DOYLE. Statement of William J. Yount, pertaining to being fired in the northern fields for not buying his supplies at the company's store. That is a signed statement but is not an affidavit:

DENVER, COLO., January 29, 1913.

I, William J. Yount, have been in the employment of the Northern Coal & Coke Co.'s Industrial mine, located at or near the town of Superior, Boulder County, Colo., and afterwards at the Rex mine, No. 2, of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., located at or near Louisville, also in Boulder County, Colo. My term of employment for these two companies covered the period from May 26, 1910, to and including January 25, 1913. Prior to my employment with the aforesaid companies I worked for the Great Western Sugar Co., but was persuaded by letter through one Henry Berlyn, who at that time was employed at the Rex mine, No. 2, Northern Coal & Coke Co., to come and accept employment at aforesaid Rex mine, No. 2. When I arrived to commence work I was sent to the Industrial mine of the Northern Coal & Coke Co. I remained at the service of the aforesaid Northern Coal & Coke Co.'s Industrial mine from the 26th day of May, 1910, to the 16th day of August, 1911. I was then transferred to the aforementioned Rex, mine, No. 2. I was employed first as fireman and then as second engineer at aforementioned Industrial mine, and when I was transferred to the Rex mine, No. 2, I was employed first as fireman and then as third engineer.

While employed at the Industrial mine I made my purchases for the necessities of life from the store operated by the State Mercantile Co., which to my best knowledge is controlled by the Northern Coal & Coke Co. I went to Denver on or about the 6th day of July, 1910, to make some purchases, because I could buy considerably cheaper at independent stores than at the stores of the State Mercantile Co. Shortly after I returned from Denver I was met by a few of the workmen at the mine, and we discussed the question of the high cost of living. They asked me where I did my trading. I replied that up to the 6th day of July I had been doing it at the company's stores, but that I went to Denver and made some purchases there. They told me that I had better be careful or I would be running around looking for a job. Then I renewed my trading at the company store until the month of July, 1911. Then I borrowed $30 from a brother in law of mine and went to Denver to make some purchases. I had been using a book at the company store, but when I made the purchases at Denver I had enough supply on hand to carry me over for a few weeks, which, of course, caused my book not to appear daily at the company store.

About two weeks after I had made this purchase at Denver I happened to be in the company store, and the clerk says to me, "Hello, Billy, where are you going? Denver, I suppose?" I replied, saying, "Yes; I thought I would take a run down." He asked me if I had bought any groceries in Denver, and I told him I had. He asked me if I could do better in Denver than at the company store, and I told him that I could, and that I had saved about $5 on a $30 order of goods that I had bought in Denver. About two weeks after I had this conversation with the clerk, the superintendent of the mine, J. J. McCormick, came to me and said: "Billy, I guess I will have to give you your time." I asked him what it was for, and he replied, "Damned if I know." I pressed him for an explanation, and he then said: "You don't seem to get along with the boys very good." The superintendent then told me that the master mechanic wanted to see me. I went to the shop to see said master mechanic, and he told me that he had a job for me, but we could not agree on the question of wages, he offering to pay me only $2.50 per day—I had been getting $3—and, besides, he told me I would have to be loyal to the company. This happened on or about the 16th day of August, 1911. On my way back home I secured employment at Rex mine, No. 2, as fireman.

After working several months as fireman I was put on as third engineer. I did my trading with the company store until I accumulated enough money to go to Denver to make my purchases there. Some time after I began to purchase at Denver I was told by the mine superintendent that I would have to take the job firing on the day shift, to which I replied that rather than take that job I would quit, and he replied "All right." It is my actual belief that the reason said mine superintendent, Tom Hilton, wanted to change me from third engineer to fireman on the day shift, which is considerably more disagreeable work, is because I did not do my trading in the company store. I quit and secured employment on the 15th day of January at the Hecla mine, located at or near Louisville, Colo. I worked at said Hecla mine as second engineer from January 15, 1913, to January 25, 1913, when I quit because of the work being intolerable. It was not my desire to quit suddenly and I gave the top foreman notice of my intentions to quit. J. C. Williams, general superintendent for the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., told the top boss to come to me and tell me that if I didn't like the conditions under which I was working I could quit immediately, that I didn't have to work out any notice.

It is my honest belief that men have not been treated with honesty in respect to the weighing of the coal. Last fall the Bulgarians employed at the Rex mine No. 1 and Hecla mine refused to continue at work because, as they claim, they were defrauded in the weighing of the coal, and because, as they claim, they were being dishonestly treated at the company stores.

There is no system prevailing at these mines in respect to the number of hours the miners work. I have known them to go down as early as 5 o'clock in the morning and come out as late as 7 o'clock in the evening.

The Bulgarians at Rex mine No. 1 asked for a checkweighman at the mine to look after their interests in the weighing of the coal. To my best knowledge and belief the matter was settled by the company promising them correct weight and that they would sell them provisions at the company stores for the same prices as prevailing in Denver. I have heard and read of alleged abuses of and assaults on the nonunion men. In this respect I want to emphasize that I have moved around freely in the districts affected by the strike at all hours during the day and night, but was never molested by anyone, even to the extent of the use of abusive language.

I make this statement freely and of my own volition, hoping that it will be of value to the United Mine Workers of America in their efforts to improve the conditions that prevail in the nonunion mines and that those who are now outside of the ranks of said organization working in the nonunion mines will enlist in said organization for the common good of all those employed in or around the mines.

WILLIAM J. YOUNT.

Mr. DOYLE. Statement made by Andrew Colnar, under date of November 27, 1913, telling how he was forced to dig his own grave at Huerfano County by State militia.

STATEMENT MADE BY ANDREW COLNAB.

On November 27, 1913, I was in the Pryor tent colony, when I received word that one of my friends was working at Pryor. He wanted to quit work at Pryor and come down to the tent colony and join the union, but said he was afraid to do so because he had been scabbing. I wrote him a good, friendly letter and told him not to be afraid, that we would take him down to the tent colony, and promised him he would be treated just the same as the other brothers. I guaranteed him that there would be no trouble if he wanted to come down, and I signed my name to the letter and sent it to him by another man. He told the man, when he delivered the letter to him, that he did not want to go down—he was ashamed to. He said he was going to quit work and leave the State.

On November 28 two soldiers came to my house in the evening. I was out on the prairie, about 500 or 600 feet from my house, when they arrested me and told me to come with them. They took me to the Lester Midway mine, put handcuffs on me, and kept me in a soldier's room all night and had one soldier watch me. They asked me what religion I belonged to and I told them.

On the morning of November 29 Capt. Drake came into the jail and informed me that he wanted to give me a hearing. He asked me if I had written that letter, and I told him, "Yes, that I wrote it and signed my name to it." and he tried to make me write the same letter again, but I could not do it. I could not remember just what I said, but I wrote what I remembered. He got very angry and called me names because I could not remember it all, and he told me he was going to give me two weeks' time to write it.

On Saturday evening he took me in the jail. It looks like a cellar—dark and dirty. About 8 o'clock that evening I told the officer that I could not stand to sleep in that dirty place. He then took me back to the room where I was in the first night. He tied my hands and kept them tied all night and had a soldier with a bayonet watch me.

On the morning of November 30 they took me back to the jail, and they asked me how I felt. I said I felt all right, because the room I had slept in was better than the other room in the jail. He said, "Yes; I know you feel all right, but you will find out pretty soon what you are going to get." Between 8 and 9 o'clock on the last day of November one of the soldiers came to me and took me out of the house and gave me a pick and shovel. He took me out in the back yard about 30 or 40 feet from the house and showed me a space marked off on the ground about 2½ feet wide and 6 feet long, and he said, "You dig this hole 8 feet deep, and it must be done by noon." I started to dig, and just then two soldiers came around and asked me what I was digging, and I told them I did not know what it was. Two more soldiers came along, and one of them said to my guard, "What is that going to be? It looks like they are going to bury somebody in there." The guard who was watching me said, "Yes; the man who is digging the hole is going to be buried there. He is digging his own grave." I asked him if that was so, and he told me yes. After that some of them came along and they were talking between themselves. They were talking about what they were going to use—blankets or a coffin. Later on two soldiers came with an officer, and the officer said to my guard, "Take him out and bring him over there and put him in line with the other soldiers." He said, "Be ready," and he put me in the middle of the line, and the soldiers were practicing, and I thought they were going to shoot me. When the practicing was done he took me back to the jail. I was unable by that time to continue the digging, and he raised hell with me. He said, "Hurry up; this must be done by noon."

The soldiers' doctor then came along on horseback, and the guards said to him, "Doctor, will that be good enough?" The doctor said, "Yes; I guess it is all right." Another soldier came around and said, "Is that long enough?" Another one said, "Yes; it's 6 feet. He is not quite 6 feet." The other one said, "I guess it is all right," and some of them were talking about getting a priest. After awhile another soldier came without a gun or bayonet and my guard stopped him. He said, "Where are you going?" He told him he wanted to talk to that man, and my guard said, "You can't talk to that man." The soldier said, "I must; I have an order. I am going to talk to him in his own language." When he came close to the place where I was digging he asked me in the Polish language how I felt. I told him I did not feel very good, because the soldiers say I am digging my own grave. He said, "Yes; that is what I came over here to tell you. You are digging your own grave and you are going to be shot to-morrow morning, the 1st of December." At that I dropped into the hole and the soldiers tried to make me dig again, but I could not do it. I was crying and asked him to give me a telephone and let me tell my wife and children good-by. He said, "Nothing doing." I then asked him if he wouldn't please give me a pencil and some paper and let me write a line to them before I died, and I was told I could not have it. A little before noon I was taken back to the dirty jail again, and they offered me a lunch, but I told them I did not want it. I said, "You just take that back, because I don't feel like eating in this kind of a time." He took it back and closed the door again and kept me there for a couple of hours. After that the officer opened the door, and when he saw me I had fallen down and was lying on the floor. He said to the other officer, "Is that fellow going crazy?" The other one said, "It looks like it."

After awhile Capt. Drake came to the office, called me out, and gave me a good lecture, and told me never to write any more letters. He said, "You go home, now, with your wife and children, and don't go out at all, because I will just give you five days. It may be after that I will come after you again." He then turned me loose.

Mr. DOYLE. Affidavit of John Moser, dated October 23, 1913, the mail carrier at Forbes, Colo., to be held up by mine guards in that county:

AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF COLORADO, Las Animas County, ss:

John Moser, first being duly sworn on oath, deposes and says:

First. That he is employed by the United States as a mail carrier, and is engaged in carrying the mail to and fro between Forbes Junction, Forbes, and Majestic.

Second. That Joe Moraskey is the postmaster in charge of the post office at Forbes, Colo.

Third. That S. G. Cox is employed as a deputy sheriff and guard at Forbes, Colo., and that for several days prior to October 23, and on said date, said S. G. Cox was acting as postmaster in charge of said post office.

Fourth. That on October 23, about 9.30 in the morning, while affiant was in the course of his employment as mail carrier at Forbes, said S. G. Cox pointed a loaded and cocked rifle at affiant and threatened to kill him.

Fifth. That said action of said S. G. Cox was wrongful, unlawful, and wholly without cause.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand at Trinidad, Colo., this 23d day of October, A. D. 1913.

LEON V. GRISWOLD, Notary Public.

My commission expires September 10, 1917.

Mr. DOYLE. Copy of a resolution passed by a few of the editors of papers in the State of Colorado, under date of November 13, pertaining to the settlement of the strike:

DENVER, COLO., November 13, 1913.

To the people, the press of Colorado, the coal-mine owners, and the coal miners of the State:

For the past two months a strike has existed in the coal-mining industry of Colorado. As a direct result of this strike human lives have been sacrificed, many thousands of laboring men thrown out of employment, property destroyed, business conditions have become depressed, the price of coal has been advanced, the reputation and credit of the State at home and abroad is being impaired, and the public at large is being made to suffer beyond accurate calculation. These unfortunate conditions are not in harmony with the peace, prosperity, and general welfare that is supposed to be guaranteed to all men and to all institutions alike under the Constitution of this State and of the United States.

For the purpose, therefore, of trying to arrive at a method of assisting in terminating this industrial conflict between the miners and the mine owners in a manner which will be in accordance with the laws of Colorado, enacted to regulate the coal-mining industry, the newspapers of Colorado represented, acting on behalf of the general public, have met in Denver, and, after hearing the arguments and statements of representatives of the coal-mine owners, of the coal miners, of the United Mine Workers of America, and a statement from the governor of this State, and having given extensive consideration to each and every one of these statements, and having weighed their effect fully and carefully, the newspapers represented have agreed upon a general and united policy of action to be recommended to the press of Colorado with reference to the termination of this strike, based upon the authority of the existing State law.

Before stating our conclusions, we desire first to state the cause of the strike, viz, the demands made by the miners upon the coal-mine owners of Colorado, which are as follows:

The demands of the miners:

First. We demand recognition of the union.

Second. We demand a 10 per cent advance in wages on the tonnage rates and the following day-wage scale, which is practically in accord with the Wyoming day-wage scale.

Third. We demand an eight-hour day for all classes of labor in or around the coal mines and at coke ovens.

Fourth. We demand pay for all narrow work and dead work, which includes brushing, timbering, removing falls, handling impurities, etc.

Fifth. We demand checkweighmen at all mines, to be elected by the miners, without any interference by company officials in said election.

Sixth. We demand the right to trade in any store we please, and the right to choose our own boarding place and our own doctor.

Seventh. We demand the enforcement of the Colorado mining laws and the abolition of the notorious and criminal guard system which has prevailed in the mining camps of Colorado for many years.

First demand. Recognition of the union.

With reference to the first demand, we submit the following facts and conclusions:

The question of the official recognition of any labor organization or labor union by any employer or employers of labor is a question not reached or controlled by law, but must mutually be desired by both employer and employee to become a recognized reality. In other words, if employers do not desire to recognize a labor union as an organization in the employment of members of that union, there is no law upon the statute books which can or will compel them to do so.

We have come to the conclusion, therefore, that the first demand made by the miners is not one which can be arbitrated by any body of mediators, for the reason that, as stated above, it must be a matter mutually desired and agreed to by employer and employee.

However, so long as individual workmen in the employ of coal-mine owners desire to belong to the union they have a perfect right to do so. This right is guaranteed them by the laws of the State, and, therefore, this first demand for official recognition of the United Mine Workers of America, as such, should not be further pressed by the members of that organization in accepting a declaration on which this strike should now be terminated. However, the right of the miners to belong to a union under the authority of the laws of Colorado should be recognized and upheld, and should not be objected to by any employer of labor.

Second demand. A wage increase of 10 per cent.

Fourth demand. Additional pay for additional and varied work.

In our judgment, these two demands should be merged into a single demand, especially as both the second and fourth demands contemplate a higher net income in wages for the miners, and our conclusion is, therefore, that these demands should be consolidated and considered under one general proposition. With reference to this general wage demand, therefore, our conclusions are as follows:

The amount of money a miner can earn depends on the amount of work he can or is willing to perform. In a published advertisement over the name of the United Mine Workers of America, which recently appeared in the Denver newspapers, a statement was made to the effect that all the miners wanted was a living wage and the enforcement of the laws affecting the coal-mining industry.

The question very properly arises, therefore, as to what should be considered a living wage.

The average wage earned by the individual coal miners working in all parts of Colorado, as published in the advertisements of the coal-mine owners, we find to be approximately $4 per day—practically $105 per month—and working eight hours a day, or less if they choose. This is said to include the wages earned by good, bad, and indifferent miners.

The wages of some miners is said to run as low as $2.25 per day, while other miners individually earn over $7 per day.

A comparison of the average coal miner's wage for the entire State of $4 per day with the wages earned by other classes of laboring men in Colorado who are equally skilled with a coal miner shows that if the average wages of all coal miners in Colorado is $105 per month they are now being paid, in our belief, what has been referred to as a living wage; in fact, they are already being paid a wage entirely in keeping with the wages paid for other classes of labor in Colorado.

Therefore, taking the miners at their published word, we believe that their original demand for a 10 per cent increase over the present Colorado scale, and which is later modified in their advertisement to a demand for living wages, has already been met by the payment of the existing scale of wages for mining coal in this State, and which is higher in the net wages earned than in any other State. Therefore this, the second and fourth, demand upon the part of the United Mine Workers of America for living wages is now being given the miners by the coal-mine owners.

Third demand: Demand an eight-hour day for all classes of labor in and around the coal mines and at coke ovens.

This third demand is one which is guaranteed to miners employed in underground mines by the laws of Colorado. If the laws of this State have been disregarded in the employment of labor in the coal-mining industry, it is the duty of the governor to enforce this law, and in this he should be heartily supported.

Therefore our conclusion with reference to the third demand on the part of the miners employed in underground mines is that it should be guaranteed to them in accordance with the laws of this State.

Fifth demand: Checkweighmen at all mines.

This, the fifth demand, is another to which the miners are clearly entitled, and which is guaranteed to them under the law. If this law has not been enforced or if the miners have not taken advantage of their rights under it, it is the duty of the governor of Colorado to guarantee the enforcement of this law.

Sixth demand: The right to trade at any store.

This sixth demand also may or may not have been accorded the miners by the mine owners. It is a demand, however, which should be guaranteed to them, for the reason that the laws of Colorado provide that no coercion shall be practiced by any coal-mine owner against any miner in the buying of his household supplies. Therefore this sixth demand should also be guaranteed to the miners under the provisions of the laws relating thereto.

Seventh demand: General enforcement of Colorado mining laws, abolition of guard system.

This seventh and last demand upon the part of the miners is not open to discussion, so far as that portion of it which relates to a general enforcement of the Colorado mining laws is concerned, for, without question, the miners are entitled to receive the full benefit guaranteed to them under the mining laws of this State.

So far as the employment of police or mine guards is concerned, this practice during periods of peace is maintained solely as a matter of police protection against ordinary disturbances and against possible damages to property in times of petty brawls, which are of ordinary occurrence in many mining camps; and so long as these guards or police are maintained upon a company property for the purpose of preserving the peace and to protect that property there is no good or legal reason for their removal. With the exception of this portion of the last demand of the miners, our conclusion is that the seventh demand, for general enforcement of the mining laws of Colorado, is clearly right and should also be guaranteed to the miners by the full power of the laws of this State.

Therefore, after mature and careful consideration of all the factors in connection with this strike, we hereby make the following declaration:

That the strike which has prevailed in the coal-mining industry in Colorado should be called off under the following terms and conditions, viz:

First. That the miners should waive their first demand, which is for recognition of the union, on the ground that the recognition of any union must necessarily be a matter of mutual agreement and not of coercion, and not being covered by any law; and for the additional reason that the laws of Colorado guarantee to every miner the right to belong individually to any labor organization without prejudice or discrimination on the part of any employer of labor.

Second. That the miners should waive their second and fourth demands for an increase in wages, not only for the reason that the wages now paid to coal miners in this State are larger than in most other States, and are as large as paid in most other lines of industry in Colorado, but also for the reason that the modified demands of the miners, as published in the newspapers, asking for living wages, are, in our opinion, already met, being paid by them in cash, twice each month, by the coal-mine owners.

Third. That the miners are entitled to have granted their demands, in accordance with the laws relating thereto, designated as follows:

Third demand: For an eight-hour workday in all coal mines.

Fifth demand: For a checkweighman in all mines where they ask, to be selected from among the miners by the miners, to be paid by them, and without interference upon the part of the operators.

Sixth demand: The right to trade at any store.

Seventh demand: The demand for the enforcement of all laws relating to the coal-mining industry.

Also, that all competent striking miners who have not been guilty of violations of the law while on strike should be taken back by the coal-mine owners without prejudice.

Also, that any coal-mine owner has a legal right to employ any person without interference or threats upon the part of any other person or organization, as provided by law.

Also, that we declare it to be the duty of the governor of this State to compel the enforcement of the State mining laws, to which we pledge our earnest support and cooperation; and that, to obtain for the miners every right to which they are entitled under the law, the rigid enforcement of the State laws is alone necessary.

We commend Gov. Ammons for sending troops into one disturbed district of the State, and express our full confidence in the integrity of his purposes respecting the unfortunate industrial strike that exists there. However, we believe that troops should be adequate in number to become sole protectors of life and property in sections of the State where such strife exists or is threatened, and that the National Guard should be recruited to meet conditions as they may arise. That in our opinion that until such time as the National Guard may safely be withdrawn from the affected districts and law and order restored that all offenses and violations of law pertaining to the strike should be immediately tried before military courts.

We further request the governor to take such action as will prevent the importations of firearms into this State by any individual or any organization, because we believe that no one has a right to bear arms here except those legally authorized to do so under the laws of the State of Colorado.

Thus it will be seen that we have found in favor of the miners in four of the six general demands they have made and have recognized their right to work as a union.

That in declining to side with the miners in the other two demands, as stated, we have concluded that the miners are already receiving living wages, and have, at the same time, found for the miners in their first demand by insisting that one of the conditions under which this strike is to be called off is that all competent miners shall have guaranteed to them under the provisions of the laws of the State the right to belong to any organization without prejudice or discrimination on the part of any employer, which means their right to work as union miners on the open-shop plan.

Therefore, in the interest of the miners, of the coal-mine owners, and of the general public, we hereby declare that this strike should be called off under the conditions stated above, in order to insure the future developments of the coal-mining industry of Colorado and the peace and prosperity of its people.

In the carrying out of this policy by the governor of this State, we pledge the support of the editors and papers here represented and ask for the cooperation of all our fellow editors in Colorado, who could not conveniently come to this conference, in support of such policy.

Also that a copy of this declaration be furnished to the officials of the United Mine Workers of America, a copy to the coal mine owners, a copy to the governor of Colorado, and that copies be sent to the press of this State for the purpose of advising the people concerning what we believe to be a just and fair declaration under the terms of which this strike should now be immediately called off and industrial peace restored, and that we pledge ourselves to support this declaration, based on law enforcement, in the editorial columns of our newspapers.

Mr. DOYLE. Answer to same under date of November 15, by policy committee of the United Mine Workers:

DENVER, COLO., November 15, 1916.

GENTLEMEN: A copy of the resolution passed by 11 of the 331 editors of the State, 14 of whom were present at your meeting held in the Brown Palace Hotel, Denver, Colo., November 13, 1913, was handed to us, to-day, at 5.23 p. m., by Mr. H. E. Bowden, one of the gentlemen who has signed his name as a member of the committee appointed to draw up this resolution.

Your entire recommendation consists of advising the miners to accept the same conditions that have existed in the coal mines of Colorado for the last 10 years, and against which they were compelled to strike.

Since you have been charitable enough to admit that our strike is justifiable, in so far as four of the seven demands are concerned, namely: The right to have the mining laws enforced; the right to trade at any store; the right to choose our own doctor and board where we see fit; the right to have a checkweighman and the right to belong to the union of our choice. Inasmuch as these are State laws that have been violated by the operators for years, we feel grateful to you for your generosity.

In speaking of the demand for an increase in wages, you say: "The amount of money a miner can earn depends on the amount of work he can or is willing to perform." The inference that miners are not willing to work, we consider an insult to their intelligence, and is an indication that it came from a prejudiced mind. You state the average wage of a coal miner is approximately $4 a day. If this be true, why are we compelled to strike for a day wage of $3.45?

You also maintain that the wages paid to coal miners in Colorado are larger than in most other States. With very little effort you could have learned that the Wyoming day wage scale is from $3.30 per day, minimum, to $4 per day, and the cost of living in the two States is practically the same. You should at least make an attempt to be fair.

Upon the question of reorganization of the union, it seems to us that you are entirely ignorant of the absolute necessity of the miners' union being recognized if the laws of the State are to be enforced, to say nothing of the settling of grievances arising in or around the mines. This, we think, was made clear to you by the miners who made their statement before your meeting, and whose testimony was evidently disregarded, for, had it not been, surely you would have attempted to offer some excuse for not considering it.

Let the public look at the names of the editors appointed by the chairman to draft the resolution, and it can be readily seen why it fails to recognize the miners' rights. Frank S. Hoag, of the Pueblo Star; H. E. Bowden, of the Trinidad Advertiser; L. C. Paddock of the Boulder Camera; Fred Marvin, of the Pueblo Chieftain, are editors of papers that have bitterly opposed the miners' union ever since the strike was called. Therefore, on behalf of the Colorado coal miners, we positively refuse to consider your proposition.

Mr. DOYLE. Summary of the Whitford impeachment evidence introduced by president and secretary of the Colorado State Federation of Labor:

To all whom it may concern:

Below is a summarized statement of the proceedings in the matter of the impeachment of Greeley W. Whitford.

On the 30th day of January, 1911, John McLennan, under his constitutional right as a citizen of the State of Colorado, filed his petition with the house of representatives, charging, among other things, that Greeley Whitford had "been guilty of oppression in office" and that he had been guilty of "conduct unbecoming a judge and such as to bring shame and disgrace upon the high office which he holds."

On the 6th day of February, 1911, the committee of the legislature, consisting of A. P. Audourel, chairman; H. A. McIntyre, of Pueblo; Newton, of Grand Junction; Hollenbeck, of Salida; and Bacon, of Cripple Creek, had its first meeting and began to take testimony on the charges filed.

Seventeen sessions of the committee were had, at which testimony both for and against Whitford was heard. Alexander M. Smith represented the petitioner and the Colorado State Federation of Labor at these hearings, with the exception of one day, when James J. Sullivan appeared for the petitioner on account of the absence of the regular attorney.

The respondent, Whitford, was represented by Messrs. Henry J. Hersey and Ralph Talbot in the early stages of the proceedings, Talbot being succeeded later on by Mr. E. C. Stimson. The petitioner, John McLennan, attended all the sessions of the committee, but the respondent, Greeley W. Whitford, never appeared or testified either in person or by affidavit.

THE EVIDENCE.

The evidence upon the matters contained in the memorial addressed to the house of representatives was most thorough and conclusive. Upon the charges of "oppression in office," the petitioner, McLennan, called as witnesses Dr. John E. Canning, a dentist, with offices in Denver, and Henry A. Hicks, formerly county judge of Gilpin County, and now a practicing attorney of Denver.

It appeared from this evidence that in the spring of 1910 one John E. Canning was committed to the county jail for the nonpayment of alimony to his first wife. After being separated and divorced from his first wife for two years, he married a young girl about 20 years of age, of good family. While Dr. Canning was in the county jail he was called at night by a voice over the phone, which promised the man his liberty provided he would come into court the next morning and have his second wife give up her diamond rings, but in no event was he or she to have their attorneys present.

Judge Hicks supported this statement with the testimony that the second wife did give up her rings, and that he, as her attorney, was not permitted to be present.

Charles O. Erbaugh testified that he was informed against for wrongfully obtaining the sum of $3.40. Whitford, while district attorney, had bitterly prosecuted Erbaugh, but Erbaugh was found not guilty. Whitford, then, as judge, sat in the subsequent trial of Erbaugh, after affidavits of respectable people had been filed as to Whitford's prejudice. Whitford ignored these affidavits, and sentenced Erbaugh to seven years at hard labor in the penitentiary for the $3.40.

THE MINERS' CASE.

Judge Whitford, on the 23d day of November, 1910, took jurisdiction of matters in Boulder County, overruling the miners' motion for a change of venue, and on a contempt charge sentenced 16 miners to the county jail for a period of one year. There was no evidence to show any guilt upon the part of a great number of these men. As to one of them, if the evidence against him was to be admitted as true, he only swore at a pit boss across the public road, and for this he received one year.

One of them was conclusively shown to have taken no part in the transaction at all, and he was given a similar sentence by Whitford. One of them showed that he had a new-born babe and that he could not have been present; another that he was at home both day and night with a sick baby and could not have been present.

One of the miners was shown to have been in the office of the justice of the peace at Lafayette, assisting to interpret the wants of a fellow country woman before the justice, and that he could not have been present.

The mothers, wives, and sisters of these men testified, but they received the uniform sentence of one year each.

IMMORAL CONDUCT OF WHITFORD.

In the hearing before the legislative committee, Ralph Talbot defied the petitioner, McLennan, to show by a respectable witness that Whitford had been guilty of immoral conduct, saying that if it were shown that he, Talbot, would withdraw from Whitford's defense and demand his impeachment before the house of representatives. McLennan called H. P. Gumaer, a highly respectable witness, who testified to having seen Whitford on Market Street at the hour of 1 o'clock in the morning with his arm around a prostitute. Both Whitford and the woman were in a drunken condition.

THE WEINBERGER INCIDENT.

Testimony was given before the committee to the effect that one Maurice Weinberger was charged in the West Side court, of which Greeley W. Whitford was the judge. Whitford visited the saloon of Weinberger while his case was pending in the West Side court and talked to Weinberger about the case.

CHARGES OF INFLUENCE USED ON WHITFORD.

John I. Mullins testified that before the conviction of the 16 miners, James H. Blood was seen in the private hours prior to the sentencing of the miners; five deputy sheriffs had to come to the court room for the purpose of taking the prisoners to jail. The evidence on behalf of the miners was not even concluded and the arguments of the lawyers had not been made. The judgment was therefore anticipated in advance and the sheriff's office notified to have the deputies ready there.

James H. Blood, counsel for the coal companies for years, testified under cross-examination that he didn't know whether the Northern Coal & Coke Co. was paying for Whitford's defense or not.

ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL.

The case was argued before the legislative committee by John C. Lewis and Alexander M. Smith for the Colorado State Federation of Labor and by Henry J. Hersey and Edward C. Stimson for Whitford.

FINDINGS OF COMMITTEE.

A. P. Audurel, of Boulder County, recommended that Whitford be by the house of representatives impeached and tried before the Senate of Colorado.

H. A. McIntyre, of Pueblo, made a report recommending that the house of representatives censure Whitford for his actions as district judge of Colorado.

Hollenbeck, of Chaffee; Newton, of Mesa; and Bacon, of Teller County, recommended the exoneration of Whitford.

ACTS OF INTIMIDATION.

Various acts of intimidation have been resorted to by those representing Whitford and the office of the district attorney in Denver, who has openly allied himself with the Pinkerton Detective Agency and the Northern Coal & Coke Co. Threats charging conspiracy have been made and given to the public press. Pinkerton detectives have trailed Alex M. Smith, the attorney, to his office and about the city, even going out of the city with him when he went on professional business for his clients. They have shadowed his house in the evenings and on Sundays in an effort to intimidate him and his wife and child. To all this the district attorney, who has been in conference with the attorneys for the coal company, and E. E. Prettyman, of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, has apparently lent his encouragement and assistance. We submit that now for the American people and the citizens of Denver to prepare to do battle with such officials at the polls and to eliminate them from public life and positions of honor and trust in the great State of Colorado.

Respectfully submitted.

THE COLORADO STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
By _____, President.

Attest:

_____, Secretary.

Mr. DOYLE. Extract of evidence of ex-Sheriff M. P. Capp, of Boulder County, given before congressional committee investigation, showing attempt of certain parties in the interest of the coal operators to bribe him to use his office in the interest of coal companies:

M. P. Capp, ex-sheriff of Boulder County: My name is M. P. Capp. I live at Boulder. Have resided there nearly nine years, and have been sheriff of Boulder County for four years. My term of office expired this last January.

I am acquainted with Mr. G. M. Williams, formerly clerk of the district court up there. I understand that in the year 1910 he was the secretary of the mine operators' association. He spoke to me concerning a coming strike. This was before the strike occurred. It was some time before the strike started, on Monday or Tuesday. It was some time during the week prior to that. He said, "It looks as though we might have a strike," and he said that some of the other operators or representatives had spoken to him as to what my attitude would be in case they had a strike, and whether or not I would be fair—how I would stand on the matter. And that, as near as I can recollect, was some time during the week before the strike was actually called.

I knew a man by the name of Al. Baker. He held a position with the Northern Coal & Coke Co. shortly after the beginning of the strike. Had charge of the guards, as I understand it. I had a conversation with him about two months after. It was the last of May, the 30th day of May, 1910, at Superior. He called me up on Saturday afternoon. I do not know just what time it was, possibly 5 or 6 o'clock, and wanted to know where he could see me Monday. He spoke about my coming to Superior. I told him I would come down if he wanted to see me. I went down. He met me there. We went up on the hillside near the Industrial mine. He said, "You know the operators don't care anything for you or I, only what we are worth to them." And he said, "You know that the union men don't care anything for us, only what we are worth to them. I want to talk to you and tell you what you can do. You can get some money out of this thing." He said, "The operators say they will spend a million dollars to break this strike. Why don't you get some of it? You can get it as well as not." I said, "How?" He said, "They want some deputies. Wanted them bad and were willing to pay for them." That he could get a job out of it too, and I wanted to know what I would get per day for the deputies that I would appoint. He said, "They want a lot of deputies, and you can get a piece of money out of this thing. You can get 75 cents per day for all the deputies hired, and you can stay in the office." He said, "They could use 400," and told me how much money could be made out of the proposition. I asked how long it would take to break the strike, and he said 30 days. I said that would not near amount to what he was talking about, and he said, "You can get a dollar." I said, "Do you know about this," and he said "Yes; I know it can be done." He told me I could get some money besides that; that Mr. Struby and Mr. Blood would be out on the next car. I stayed there until the next car came. Mr. Struby and Mr. Blood came out to where we were. They invited me to go over the district with them in an automobile. They never said anything about it themselves at all. I told Baker that if it was right to go into it in that way, it was not right to charge them money for it and it would not be right anyway, and I left it just about that way. That is about the sum and substance of the conversation.

(Conversations.)

I have a record of arrests made by deputies and myself for the years 1910 and 1911 and 1912 growing out of the strike. I missed the record of some of the arrests where six or eight people would be taken up, and where on investigation, would be found only two or three to be connected with it. They would all be turned loose, but the record of all that went into court at all I have. I tried to get it complete, but I find it is not entirely so.

(Conversation.)

Q. Give the number of arrests growing out of the strike for the year 1910 and the year 1911.—A. One hundred and forty-three that I have any actual record of, cases that were actually handled and some disposition made of them in court.

Q. What number of those were union men?—A. About one-fourth or one-fifth. I have 296 all told that I could connect with these strikes more or less, and there were 30 of them union men that were brought to Denver and 33 union men that were handled in court over there. That would be 63 out of 296, and possibly some scattered ones, before 1912, that I did not separate. The rest were nonunion men.

For 1912, there were 77 nonunion men arrested; 33 union men. Besides there were 26 arrested at the Brooks-Harrison mine, of which we handled 12 in court; 77 nonunion men in all.

I think six or seven men have lost their lives on account of the strike. As near as I can recollect, on August 31, 1910, there was a killing near the Senator mine between two nonunion men. April 5, 1911, there was a union man killed by four Mexicans, nonunion. April 22, Deputy Sheriff Hockaday shot a nonunion man at Superior. May 7, 1911, a Mexican shot another Mexican on the hillside at the Capital mine, both nonunion. February, 1911, Gunn died in the hospital in Denver from wounds received on the streets at Louisville. He was nonunion. November 28, 1911, Searcy was shot at Superior. December 19, 1911, William Bashford, a mine guard at the Monarch, was shot and killed by Billy Adams, a nonunion man. And there might have been one or two more, but I think that is all.

There was a man found in Lafayette unconscious. We never knew who he was, apparently had been beaten; we never did find out how it happened. I think that is all. I have been inside of the inclosures at the mines at different times.

Q. State generally the character of the men that were brought in there?—A. Well, we have taken out a good many people for officers of other States and for officers of Denver; that is, men being accused of different crimes. It seems as though a great many of them were looking for trouble all the time. I will say that they were a class of people that have a great deal of trouble. A great many of them were arrested for different offenses, everything from common offenses up to murder. Don't know anything about their past histories only the ones I took for the different States that were accused of crimes and were fugitives from justice.

The lists of arrests given include arrests on warrants from justice courts, and in the killings the men were arrested and attempts were made to fix the blame. The first case, this man Cedar, we never did find him. We knew nothing of this killing for some little while; we never found him. I got pictures of him that were made here before they sent him to the penitentiary.

In the case of the Mexican, the guard told me he had the Mexican that cut his fellow up. I told him I could get there in 30 or 40 minutes, and when I got there I didn't get the fellow. In the case at Lafayette, we got the four Mexicans. The killing at Superior by the city marshal, I arrested him myself. The killing of Bashford by Billy Adams, he gave himself up to one of my deputies. At the time Mr. Hockaday shot Grover Mills, Hockaday was taken in on a stretcher. Mr. Hockaday was never arrested. At the inquest it was found that he was justified. They were all arrested, as far as we could get them. Those two men got away.

Q. Did any of these killings take place inside the fence around the mine?—A. At the Capital mine there was not any fence there. Never has been. It was at a camp down on the hillside that the Mexicans were stabbed, and at the Standard mine it was just outside the inclosure at a camp there. At the Monarch mine it happened in their grounds, but there is no inclosure there, and, of course, the other two were at the depot. Not all of them have these stockades. None of the killings happened inside of the stockades. These others that I speak of were at the mine proper. They were not in any inclosure or any stockade.

Q. Would the operators give you any assistance in arresting nonunion men?—A. We never got any assistance from them. If we tried to arrest the men inside the stockade we had to show our warrant at the gate before we could get in. We could not get in with a John Doe warrant; we had to have the names of the men.

The guards were acquainted with me and my deputies.

Mr. DOYLE. Form of report on people employed, discharged, and leaving, generally used by the Evans Coal & Land Co. by one of their employees:

THE CONDITIONS OF THE COAL STRIKE IN THE NORTHERN COLORADO COAL FIELDS AS I FOUND THEM WITHIN THE BULL PENS OF THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN FUEL CO.

While there have been a great many writings on the strike situation in northern Colorado, there has been nothing heard from one who has worked inside the bull pens for two years.

I started to work in the month of December, 1910, in the northern coal fields as a mine guard; or, in other words, scab herder at the Monarch mine, No. 1, of the National Fuel Co., at Downer, of all the guards who looked after the boarding houses and imported men to all the mines of the National Fuel Co.

After leaving southern Colorado I met the head guard, Hall, in Denver, on Market Street, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth Streets, at one of the employment agencies; being out of work, Mr. Hall approached me and asked me if I wanted to go to work; never having scabbed before, I hesitated when he mentioned the location. I saw him several days in succession; each time he urged me to take a position as guard at $3 per day and board. I finally consented to go, and Mr. Hall gave his brother, Orn. Hall, and me a transportation to the mine at Downer, Colo.

It seems that the Baldwin-Felts people, who had charge of the mine guards, had lost their contract with the National Fuel Co., and the guard work had been given to Mr. Hall just prior to the time I went there.

The Baldwin-Felts people did little but gamble—shooting craps, etc.—as I found out from Mr. Zook, mine superintendent at that time. He told me the guards would come on duty in the evening, and as soon as the men who were working in the mine had eaten supper, the guards would gather in the engine house of the mine and gamble until 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning. I want to say in fairness to Mr. Zook that he tried to stop it, but the camp being under the jurisdiction of the Baldwin-Felts people he could do little. The public knows what the Baldwin-Felts people are and what kind of a detective agency they run; ex-convicts and murderers are employed as guards, and the class they import as strikebreakers are worse than a cankerous growth on God's green earth; but it is this class that such a company as the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co. and others hire as the main tool to hire small tools to break up union labor.

To get back to the point of the conditions at the mine and camp, I found that the majority of the inmates of the camp were the low type of Bulgarians and Greeks, and a few English-speaking people. I think there were about 250 people in the camp at that time; about 20 per cent were English speaking. I found in some of the four-room houses as many as 25 people living and sleeping, among them being one to three women and some small children. The custom of the Bulgarian was to take as many boarders as he could crowd in with his family. I have seen as many as five beds in one room 12 by 14 in size, and the men wash and change clothes in these houses, as the wash house at Monarch mine, No. 1, was reserved for the men staying at the boarding house. Any intelligent person can imagine the fumes arising in a small room from cooking, steaming, soap water, and sweaty mine clothing.

A coal miner's work is dirty, yet in the homes of the better class of miners you will not find a cleaner set of working people anywhere, as he takes his bath every night and completely changes clothes from head to foot; but among the class that have been imported to northern Colorado I found the most insanitary conditions prevailing.

At the Downer camp there was no school at that time. There was one store, owned by the company, and the people had to trade there; the cost of living being about 40 per cent higher than in Denver or Boulder. They have what is known as the coupon book; when one gets an order at the mine office and takes the order to the store he gets a coupon book; if he needs any cash between pay days, as most do, he could get a coupon cashed for 75 cents on the dollar at the store. I know this to be a fact, as I was short of cash one time. I had several coupons cashed. I found that the men were getting 300 to 500 pounds short weight to the car, compared to the time when there was a check-weighman of the United Mine Workers of America there.

The houses at this camp are simply shacks, as the company does not keep them in repair; the plaster had fallen off the houses that had been plastered, and the ceiling boards were broken and torn off the boarded ones; the glass was broken out of many of them, and all were generally run down. But a splendid fireproof barn was put up for the company's teams and the grain. You know mules and feed cost the company money, but men—well, human lives are cheap.

I stayed at the Monarch mine about five weeks, as I found out after living there a few days that instead of $3 and board we were getting only $2.50 and board, because 12 had night work.

My family being in Denver and there not being an empty house in the camp, I quit there and went to the Industrial mine of the Northern Coal & Coke Co. at Superior, Colo.; the Northern Coal & Coke Co., not having sold out to the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co. at that time, Mr. F. J. T. McCormack was superintendent. I lived in the town of Superior for about a year, not moving inside the stockade until about the 4th of December, 1911; I will say right here that there was union men all around me and I was never insulted or bothered all the time I lived in the town of Superior and went to the mine one-half mile away through groups of union miners and was never molested.

I started to work in the mine as a miner, conditions at that time not being as bad as they became later; I was on pillar work, and having worked in the northern coal fields before as a union miner, I found that we were being robbed of about 500 pounds of coal to the car, the same or worse than I found at Monarch mine, No. 1; I found there was a great loss of cars to me through such as my check being taken off, and someone else putting their check on; to explain to those who do not know, each miner has a check number and when he starts as a miner or loader the weigh-boss gives him several iron checks, each stamped with a number; he hangs a check on each car he loads, and when his car reaches the top and is dumped, the dumper takes the check off and gives it to the weigh boss, who then marks the weight of the coal on the bulletin under his number; so it is easy to lose his cars because when they leave the place and are pulled to the parting, anyone can take his check off and put their own on and thereby receive credit for the loaded car. I lost nine cars one week and reported the matter to William Green, pit boss, and also to Pat Kilker, the weigh boss; they said they could do nothing; then I told Mr. McCormack, the superintendent, and he said he knew there was lots of stealing going on in the mine, but he could not prevent it; I suggested that he put the check hook on the inside of car as is done at several other mines, where it would not be so handy for those stealing cars, but he said it was too much bother for the dumper to take the check from the inside; of course it is no trouble for a miner to dig and load a 2,000 to 2,700 pound car of coal and then have some contemptible thief get his car. You may ask were these hooks not on the outside of car when the mine was being worked by union labor; yes; but there is a fine for the first offense and for second offense there is immediate discharge and loss of union card. Does the company discharge for that now? No; because I know of one case in particular where Mr. McCormack knew that a party had been stealing cars, but did he discharge the man? No; all he did was to take the number off of the thief's car and place it on the car of the loader.

If a man was heard to say he believed in unions or was in sympathy with them, he was immediately discharged and ordered out of the camp and sometimes beaten by the guards; this is true, as I have seen it done.

One guard named Tim Harvey, who was captain of the guards at the Industrial mine, was known as a notorious gunman, and was imported to the northern coal fields by the Baldwin-Felts people. Harvey had been a guard at Lead, S. Dak., and had earned a reputation of being a bad gunman and strike breaker, and it was such as he that was put in charge of the "bull-pens" to intimidate the men and women.

Life inside these places was almost as bad as being in prison; the gates were closed at 9 o'clock at night, and the order was to be in camp at that time; if one was out later than that, it was up to the jurisdiction of the guard on duty whether you could come inside or not; the guards at the mines were not invested with police power to commission of any kind, and yet they took on themselves, with the backing of the coal company, the authority of an officer of the law, and because they knew the company's money would come to the rescue; did things officers of the law would not do.

I started as mine guard at the Industrial mine on the night of November 29, 1911; during the previous night a nonunion miner was shot and killed by the night marshal of Superior; the facts developed at the trial were, that a non-union man named Dude Searcy had quarreled with the union men of Superior, and told them he would meet them at the depot that night and kill one of them before daylight; Night Marshal De Andy went to the depot as he had been doing for months past to meet the interurban cars; Dude Searcy was there also with his two brothers, Elmer and Jim; Dude started a dispute with the night marshal and pulled his gun; the marshal then pulled his gun and shot Searcy. The marshal was found not guilty, as he had killed Searcy in self defense; Searcy was found to be a fugitive from justice, having been picked up by one of the men who had been sent to Kentucky to import men; Searcy was then hearing from the sheriff of Kentucky. Most of the camps are made up of these kind of people.

After the shooting, the company hired two more guards, namely, Frank Cummings and myself. Not caring to have my family in the town of Superior, I moved inside the stockade, or bull pen; I then began to see what the life of a scab was like in reality; we had to deal at the company's store, the same system being in vogue at the Monarch mine in regard to the coupon book, but the prices were even higher than at the Monarch mine. The company's store is known as the State Mercantile Co., and is owned and operated by the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., said company having taken over the northern mines in November in the year 1911. If one refused to trade at the company's store, he would be discharged; a few people of the camp bought some groceries and dry goods in Denver, but had to steal them in, under cover of a trunk or suit case, and the guards had strict orders not to allow any peddler or vegetable men in the camp; in fact, anyone who had anything to sell that the company's store could supply, was refused admittance. The orders were given to us by Supt. McCormack, and we had to obey them.

Just a few weeks prior to the time I started to work as guard at the Industrial mine, the town board of Superior had taken the saloon license away from P. J. Keer on account of the trouble caused by the nonunion men in his place of business; these men would leave the stockade in groups and go to Keer's saloon, get drunk, and start back to the bull pen shooting, yelling, and cussing; it was almost impossible for the marshal and Sheriff Capp's deputies to do anything, and I want to say that Sheriff Capp should be highly commended for the way he handles the situation; if a nonunion man was arrested, he was taken before Supt. McCormack, and imprisoned or fined—McCormack was and still is the justice of the peace, also humane officer.

When the saloon was closed there was no trouble to speak of in Superior, but Mr. Keer bought a saloon in Marshal, because by doing so he could obtain a wholesale license which gave him the right to sell liquor in the camp; I have seen his wagon make five and six trips in one day carrying liquor.

Mr. Keer would allow a man as much liquor as he wanted provided he had money coming to him from the company's office, as it would be held out of his pay; I know a number of men who never drew a dollar on payday; all their money went for board and liquor.

At this time there were about 65 Bulgarians and Greeks, and about 100 Americans and Austrians in the camps; beer and whisky were sold in the camp without a license; men and women lived in polygamy, and Justice McCormack knew it.

About four months before I left, we had a new head guard, a man by the name of Robert Boykin, exconvict sent from Denver for robbery, murderer of the man who was killed sometime ago on Larimer Street; the same man herded scabs at Lead, S. Dak., and went to old Mexico with an expedition—but in reality to rob the churches as he told me; he was also known as the gambler. This is the character who was appointed as head guard of the camp.

Robert Boykin ran a poker game in his own home at the Industrial mine, and I have seen from 10 to 25 men in the bathhouse shooting craps from Saturday night until Sunday night, and poker games were being played in nearly all the batch shanties. Liquor was sold week days and Sundays. It was a common occurrence for a man to beat his wife. The guards would beat men with their guns. I have witnessed a man being kicked out of the mine office because of a mistake in his statement, said mistake being in favor of the company. I have seen a family—man, wife, and baby in arms—put out of the camp with but $3, and had to leave their furniture. Men were put out of camp for talking unionism. Vegetable peddlers were beat up for trying to find sale for their goods in the camp. A man had to borrow money to bury his dead baby, his money being tied up in the company's office unlawfully by Supt. McCormack. Men were urged by the guards to "smoke up" the union men's houses; one case I remember in particular, where a nonunion miner shot through the house of

WILL FOX, Superintendent.

Mr. DOYLE. Statement pertaining to the methods used in the election in Huerfano County:

Voers in Huerfano tell of card system and holes in ballots. In the Walsen mine precinct, when some of the colored people came in to vote, the election judges would announce the names and hand them a ballot; this same thing occurred in practically all the nonunion camps; in Checo precinct, near Walsenburg, a Mexican woman came in and announced her name, and one of the judges told her that was not her name, and she voted under the name that the judge told her was her right name. In primary elections the printer scratches the dies which print the black spot on the ballot so that the judges are always able to tell whether a person votes on a Republican, Democratic, or Progressive ballot. Then the companies know who to work on before election day; if they are weak they can sway them the way they want them, and if they refuse to promise to vote the way the companies want them, they can fire them before election day and force them to move out of the precinct, so they will have no vote coming.

Mr. DOYLE. One statement and two letters pertaining to school tax, being checked off from the miners and not accounted for to the State superintendent of schools:

LA VETA, COLO., October 16, 1912.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I inclose my statement to show you that this school tax is no fake mind you if a man has 2 or more boys working the tax is the same 25 cts. each the doctor attends to the Railroad men for 50 cts. each but mind you he is also County Coroner with the usual verdict you no what that is we don' no where their are any hospital eather it is nothing more than a graft pure and simple.

Mr. Editor: The Kindom of Huerfano is going to make one of the greatest fights of its life to try and elect the Republican ticket as they see the hand writing on the wall the C. F. & I. and other coal co. is turning all their forces in Huerfano and Las Animas Countys as they see they are beat in all other Counties James B. Dick is not so strong as they thought with Park for Governor if you remember I. B. Dick was one of the senators that put Peabody in office over Adams and they are leaving no stone unturned to try and elect them so we will just do the best we can to deport them if their are an honest count of ballots they are beet and they no it well.

From an old timer

Mr. JAMES DUCE, Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your note of some time ago received would have answered it but I have been away trying to get something to do but failed as yet. Well I am about the school Tax the oakdale Coal Co. headquarters in Denver J. D. Jones Gen'l Mgr. 25 cts. from each empty in and around the mine school District No. 36 the Alliance Coal Co. Denver 25 cts. used to be $1.00 McDowel Gen'l Mgr. the same school District No. 36 the Big Four Coal and Coke Co. Mine at Fioga 25 cts. for single man 50 cts. for married men the no. of school district I don't no headquarters in Denver the Fioga mine at Sunnyside 25 cts. for single men 50 for married men their headquarters are in Denver I don't no the name of the management thier I will be down their this week and find out and get a statement from some of the men all the small mine are just the same when oakman was Governor the Victor American Co. and the C. F. & I. was called up before him and swore they did not no anything of this tax and when they were shone the statement they stopt taken it of and have never done it since but the small company has always done it and it amounts to several thousand dollars where it goes no one will tell I will inform you of the Doctors next time and say that they are unable to arganize the men in Huerfano to their has never been a district officer down here there are no use of a stranger going around here the companys things noes one when ever they see him and it is all off with him let them do their business right and they will come out all right get a man in here that no all the mines and the men and he will make this a union County before long there are no use of a stranger as he can do nothing as he is watched when ever he leaves the train.

Respectfully yours,

ROBT. F. LOCKHART,

The coal-mine inspector has published his report for 1913, and on pages 5 and 6 will be seen the average number of coal miners employed in this State, the number of men killed in the mines, the number of widows and orphans left, the number of accidents to employees in and around the mines, and they are as follows:

Average number of men employed.....	12,871
Fatal accidents.....	110
Nonfatal accidents.....	354
Total.....	464

Accidents resulting in personal injury and total amount of compensation paid to the injured and the relatives of the dead amounted to $33,593.63.

The above figures give a little more information than we were able to obtain under the old law, and it should be remembered that these figures are taken from the sworn annual reports of the mine operators.

If you work out the sum total of the compensation paid to the injured and to the representatives of the dead, it appears that John Doe and his associates have decided that the price to be paid for killing or injuring a coal miner averages about $72.40, which is the amount shown to have been paid for the 464 accidents.

Taking the average number of miners employed at the figures given, which is 12,871, and remembering that each of these men pay $1 per month for doctor and hospital, the yearly tax upon these miners amounted in 1913 to the sum of $154,452.

This sum was collected and administered wholly by the operators themselves. They employ all doctors (sometimes getting them as low as $75 per month), make all hospital arrangements, which arrangements (except in the case of the C. F. & I.) are entirely on paper.

No coal miner has anything to say about what doctor shall attend him; he has no voice in any such arrangement; his part begins and ends with paying his $1 per month.

Mr. DOYLE. Letters received from men working at various mines in southern Colorado prior to the strike and desires of men for organization:

DELAGUA, COLO., Sunday, August 10, 1913.

DEAR FRIEND: I got a job down here the only thing the Boss would pick work with another fellow a Welchman. I guess it is the worst place in the mine. It is over two miles and a $\frac{1}{2}$ from the mouth of the slop to the face. It takes nearly a hour to walk to work. They only pay 55¢ per ton and whair I am working the coal will not brake at all. It is the hardest pick work I ever done. It is nearly imposable to make anything at it. My Partner and the other three Welchman who are working here in the mine are going to Wyoming soone as they make a few more dollars. There is about four or five hundred men here. Outside men are mostly American. I think about 50 Japs. The rest are farmers such as Austrians, Slavish, and Mexicans, Greks and Italians, and they all no sava. Of all the places I ever was in my life this is the worst place I ever saw for an American to live unless he is a Boss.

I am sure I cant stand it here eny longer. In the first place I cant make wages. I and the three other Americans are bording at the Jap boarding house. Gee the Japs that swarm around here at night. The bath is a big squair box two ft. deep and 12 feet squair all the Japs, Greeks and Mexicans and all of us have got to wash in the same for they only fill the tub once. Last night one Jap with a lot of open sors on his body jumped in the tub with the rest of us. Now I dont think a senceable white man would stand for this, do you.

N. B. after walking to Ludlow six miles, while I was writing this letter, I was watches By a man whom I think is a detective. I went out away from the buildings then one of the gards came around so I walked to ludlow. I dont know that am followed but will continue my letter and mail it here.

When I got to Trinidad I found the Victor fuel Co. office and asked if they needed eny miners. They said yes if I would go up I could get a job so up I went. When we got within a mile of Delagua a mounted Gard meet us and asked all of us a great lot of questions. Whair we were aeing and what for. Whair we come from. Whair we had worked. What our names are, if we could refer to our former employer.

AUGUST 27, 1913.

NUMBER FIFTY-TWO: Your letters of the 16th and 24th inst. received; have noted carefully what you have to say. Am kept very busy with the Denver end of the campaign.

I wish you would give the names of all whom you come in contact with, as well as postoffice address.

Guards are being placed on the mines at Lafayette, and all camps in the north, but it seems that the more guards they hire in the south, the more members the organization gains. Fremont County is doing splendid; El Paso County is securing new members; every camp in the south reports that the men are waiting for the call, but we advise against any out-brake on their part, until all efforts for a peaceful settlement have failed.

Help keep down any unnecessary strike call, and suggest to any whom you might hear talking such that they await the official call before making any brake.

I have not hear from "74" since I saw him in Trinidad.

Assuring you that everything looks bright, and thanking you for your promptness in reporting, I remain with kind regards.

Yours very truly,

"455."

DEAR SIR: I have got work at Big 4 Coal Mine. Started Weds. the 20th and doing fair but aint feeling extra good. The board isnt much good and the water is pumped from the mine. I could get board at a private house but the Super. said, or told my Partner that if we worked there we had to board at the Co. boarding house. We pay 28 per mo. The wash shanty could be kept cleaner. We have to lay our own rails. The cars we load look like two ton cards. We get 30 to 32. I believe we get 5.00 lbs short. The Boys say if you want to hold ajob here keep your mouth shut about union. It looks like a man ought to free to talk about what he pleases & discuss eny matter he wishes but I guess you cant here but all the Boys seem to be union men. Hoping that everything turns out for the best I remain respectfully yours

FORBES, COLO., August 30, 1913.

DEAR SIR: Herewith I notify you that we arrived at this camp one of the "Rocky Mountain Comp" and got the work. We will start on Monday the 1st of september. We found out that five men were fired yesterday and they have to leave the camp today. because they were Union men and were talking about strike.

Yours truly,

No. 455: Will drop you a few lines today. Have been staying around Tioga the last few days and Big four also. Most all the mines layed of Sat. afternoon on account of Elks Convention at Walsenburg. In and around Tioga Camp unionism is quite openly expressed while same are quit and dont say much I should judge about 75 to 85 per cent are only waiting to be called out and are ready to lay down there tools. Most diggers clame they are getting very short weights. The Big four compel all single men to board at ther boarding house which is very bum most of the time. The dinner pail they dont fill is a poor lunch. Friday they only put in the dinner pail two fat meat sandwiches and a piece of poor rhubarb pie and a little green apple. All the Boys Kicked. But its take what they give you or leve the Camp. They worked 8 hours. The wash house is fair but not sanitary.

I dont know if the Boss will let me stay and got to Work Monday or not. He uses me very cool at times. I came down to Walsenburg to day to see if there is eny mail for me but I havent got a bit of mail sence I am down here. Perhaps none was sent to me. I will go back to Tioga tonight Suppose you better write me at Walsenburg if you have Occasion to. If you wire me, I will be at Tioga for a couple days. When I am in Walsenburg I stay at the Oxford Hotel. I got a letter from you two weeks ago in answer to Delago. Dont know or cant think of eny thing more of imporence.

With best wishes for success I am as ever

SUPERIOR, COLO., September 18, 1913.

DEAR SIR: The Conditions in the Mine are bad in turning a room there is not extra pay for it. Setting up timbers is the same thing. 6 cents per inch per running yeard for brushing in soap stone stone bottom, the cards weight from 20 to 26 cuts, there is always plenty of smoke in the mine, for the men shoot any time of the day they get ready, no air to speak of and in some places in the mine every time a man shoots about 2 feet of rock come down with the coal and no extra pay for loading it out. The men lay their own track and it is awful hard to get rails around this mine and in some parts of the mine the rooms are in 40 feet and not a timber in sight and when the boss comes around he never tells a man to set up a timber and the men wont do it because they do not like to do all that work for nothing and also along the entries the rock is loose and no timbers. The switches and frogs are not laid right and the loaders have to lift them on and when the driver gets a car of the track along the entry close to any rooms cuts of his mule and leaves the car there for the loaders to put on or not load any more. There is 21 Austrians here all ready when the word is said. Some of the men here can't make enough to pay up their board. The biggest part of the men here are ready also with the others. The Bulgarians are also kind of pulling for the right side. I happened to get into a conversation with one to-day that could talk our language pretty fair and he said there was 15 of his country men organized. Well as I have no more to tell you about the situation of the thing I will now end.

Yours truly,

WALSENBURG, COLO., September 6, 1913.

I am still hanging on to my job and doing fairly well.

The mine where I work has very poor conditions. The coal is about 3½ ft. high and solid shooting. There is about 2½ to 3 ft. of the main body and then there is a seam of dirt that runs from 10 to 16 inches thick and under that there is from 6 to 10 inches of coal. The miner has to handle all that rock the width of his place for nothing. They don't weigh coal at all. They pay 65¢ a car and the car must be level full or the miner is docked from 5¢ to 25¢ and if there should happen to be a little dirt in the car he is docked for it. They allow 6¢ a car at the month end to every body for the rock they handle. So if a man has lots of rock and loads less coal he gets less pay for handling the rock. Where a man with a small seam of rock and loading lots of coal gets good pay for rock. A keg of powder cost $2.25 and it will knock out from 12 to 20 cars and they pay $1.00 a yd. for entry work and $1.50 per yd. for cross cuts.

I will inclose a few names of fellows I met while running around. Wm. Sheeley of Lafayette is at the Solar mine but his post office address is Walsenburg. Gene Thorne is at the Ravenwood his P. O. address Walsenburg.

WALSENBURG, COLO., August 30, 1913.

I am in Walsenburg agan. left Tioga yesterday. I was at Big 4 working. Thursday night 2 thirds of the men at Big 4 and Tioga were about ready to quit on account of some reports they had got from Walsenburg from some strange men who were there in the day some time. They told some body up there that the union is going to call every miner out the first of Sept. and that the Park and other ground had been leased here and that hundreds of tents were ready to put up. so I quit up there and come down. I got your letter and found out all I could and phoned up to some of the Boys and told them to stick to there jobs and not to get excited for there is still a good show for settling up with the Company without being called out of course I was careful how and what I said. I left Tom up there working. He running a machine. I had a poor job working in Black lamp a good deal but was to get $3.25 per day as they had been paying for for day work when I got my time at the office. The Superintendent turned my time in at $3.00 per day. I was at the boarding house not quite 8 days and they charged me 8.25. When I called at the office for my time they—the clerk—gave me a time check but no statement. I told him I must have a statement. They seemed very much surprised and said if I must have one they would have to make one out. I insisted and they gave me one. Now I will send it to you. The 10¢ on the statement is for a little Book of Mining Laws of Colo.

The diggers are complaineing of being robbed all the time. I am certain 74 wrote you last week or first of this week. I read your letter with much interest and will try to attend to all.

As ever,

Mr. DOYLE. Copy of letter dated October 9, written to Gov. Ammons pertaining to information received that machine guns were being imported into the State.

OCTOBER 9, 1913.

To his Excellency the GOVERNOR OF COLORADO.

HONORABLE SIR: It has come to the knowledge of the undersigned that four pieces of rapid-fire field artillery known as Gatling guns have been purchased by one of the coal-mining corporations, whose miners are now on strike. That these death-dealing engines of civil war are now on their way to the coal fields of southern Colorado. That the company above referred to has arranged to utilize the services of an officer of the Colorado State Militia, who is also an employee of the coal company, in the operation and use of these field guns. Now, Governor, inasmuch as the skill and training in the use of these guns possessed by this militia officer was given him by and at the expense of the State of Colorado, and by officers of the United States Army at public expense, therefore, we, the undersigned, do solemnly protest against the use of the skill by a private corporation to murder the citizens of this State on strike for their common rights of man, and for the privileges guaranteed them by the laws of Colorado. Such guns as these mentioned can only mean civil war by private power; and we protest against the use of skill and training developed and paid for by this Commonwealth being used by modern representatives of the middle-ages private-warfare barons.

We ask you as governor of Colorado to insist that no private use of State paid for skill shall be tolerated in this industrial conflict. We ask you as governor of Colorado to insist that this is an industrial not a military conflict, and if the operators by the power of hunger can not starve into submission, they shall not with privately owned Gatling guns use State and Federal trained military men to destroy us.

Signed by,

POLICY COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOYLE. Copy of statement concerning the shooting of John Ure, Forbes, Colo.:

JOHN URE AND HIS TENT.

John Ure, of Scotch birth, 63 years of age, a miner for 53 years, was employed at Forbes mine, Forbes, Colo., at the beginning of the present strike, at which time he joined the strikers and moved into a tent furnished by the miners' union. While standing in front of his tent on the afternoon of October 17, 1913, a mine guard approached the tent colony, carrying a flag of truce with him. Upon arriving at the tent colony he was met by a group of men and he asked them if they were strikers. They informed him that they were. He stepped back and dropped the flag, at which signal the rapid machine gun, mounted on a steel-bodied automobile, on the public highway some 300 yards from the tents, commenced firing at the strikers. Shooting started about 3 o'clock p. m. and continued until 5 o'clock p. m. Ure took refuge under the cot in his tent, and it is a miracle that he was not killed, as the tent has 147 bullet holes in it, and the furniture—every dish and cooking utensil—bears evidence of the shots fired by this Gatling gun.

Mr. DOYLE. Document issued by the United Mine Workers at the time of the Whitford injunction cases, entitled "Put The Scales Back," pertaining to the scales falling from the courthouse when the miners were unjustly sentenced:

Why did the scales of justice fall from the hands of the goddess of liberty on the dome of the Denver courthouse and crash to the roof below just after the 16 miners were sentenced by Judge Whitford to one year in jail on December 23, 1910, for violating his injunction?

The right to trial by jury was denied by Judge Whitford, notwithstanding the following provision in the Revised Statutes of Colorado, 1908:

"Provided, That in all cases where the alleged contempt is not committed in the immediate view or presence of the court or judge, the person arrested may upon demand therefor be tried by a jury."

A civil contempt was held by the same judge to be subject to punishment by imprisonment.

The same statute provides: "Upon answer and evidence taken the court or judge or the jury in cases tried by the jury shall determine whether the person proceeded against is guilty of the contempt charged, and if it be determined that he is guilty of the contempt a fine may be imposed upon him not exceeding $500."

Upon whose affidavit were the respondents, the miners, brought into court for alleged contempt?

One of the affiants said that several of the names in his affidavit should not have been there, and he did not know they were there, and some of them were written in without his knowledge; Mr. James H. Blood, attorney for the operators, then stated that he drew the affidavits and was responsible for the allegations therein made and he only, thought the affidavits were sworn to by the others.

John Cassidy is in jail with a $250 fine for contempt, because as town marshal of Lafayette he attempted to arrest A. C. Felts, of the Baldwin-Felts detective agency, who was imported from West Virginia to break the miners' strike.

Andrew Burt left Colorado November 15, 1910, for Iowa; returned to Colorado March 25, 1911; was never served with summons or the injunction writ. He is in jail and fined $500 for contempt for violating a writ when he was out of the State during all the time the proceedings were had.

The same is true of Grover Wiseman.

Edward L. Doyle is serving one year's sentence in jail for writing two articles published in the Mine Workers' Journal, the official paper for the United Mine Workers' organization. These articles were published March 2 and April 15, 1911. The contempt proceedings referred to had been disposed of in the supreme court and were not pending. Doyle said, "This judge, who refused us a jury trial, had the nerve to ask that a grand jury be appointed to investigate the charges of bribery made against him. He dared to ask for a jury trial, and but two months before had refused 16 men that right."

These articles were a criticism on a matter disposed of by the court and not pending, and also pertained to the impeachment proceedings.

From the evidence introduced at the proceedings the remaining respondents were sentenced because they belonged to a union and were loyal to the organization.

All of these respondents were compelled over their own objections to testify against themselves where they had been charged with a criminal offense.

"That no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal case." (Colorado constitution.)

The following words were used in a criminal case by attorney for the defense (The People v. Beckenstein) before Judge Whitford: "If your honor's ruling is the law, then it is not justice; it is barbarism, and no man can successfully defend himself, his liberty, or his good name when it is attacked in this way by the prosecution."

Among other grounds urged for new trial in the Henwood case, recently tried before Judge Whitford, the following are mentioned by Attorney John T. Bottom: "The bias and prejudice of Judge Whitford against all persons charged with crime make it impossible for him to give the defendant a fair and impartial trial."

One of the leading prosecutors in the district attorney's office for Denver stated in the presence of Judge Whitford, "O don't call Judge —— to try a criminal case here, because we have to prove everything beyond a reasonable doubt before him." Judge —— was not called.

In a former contempt case on December 23, 1910, Judge Whitford stated that the evidence was very conflicting, and evidently some one had not told the truth and proceeded to sentence the 16 union miners to a term in jail for one year on such conflicting evidence.

[Extracts from the Rocky Mountain News.]

Henwood to Judge Whitford:

"Judge Whitford, I am not surprised that I am here for sentence before you after the attitude you have taken toward me since this trial started.

I have seen criminals, innocent men, and others afraid to come before you, because you hold the reputation of being a prejudiced judge, a biased judge—a man with a mind for just one thing, and that is conviction. A man is guilty before he enters this court room in your estimation.

"My idea of a judge is that he is fair and just to both sides. I never had that justice from you. Judge Whitford, from my observation it does not make a bit of difference how young a life is or how old, whether man or woman, your one thought is and always has been conviction. You have been a prosecutor all your life and you know nothing else; it is like a kleptomaniac with you."

The court:

"The feeling concerning the man now on the bench—of course you are surrounded in jail with 14 men—miners—that I recently sent there and occasioned much public comment.

"The law is that it must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty of a criminal offense, and it seems that these miners were looked upon as criminals without the benefit of the rules of evidence."

The Daily Herald of Boulder (Republican) in a recent editorial said:

"Sticks and stones will break my bones, but words will never harm me." And continues by saying that the extent of the damage done to the coal company was measured by this verse, but that the damage to a judge's feelings was measured by one year in jail and $500 fines, aggregating $6,000 and costs plus jail commitments, until this "enormous balm of Gilead" for injured feelings could be paid.

The Boulder County Miner (Republican) is quoted from below, for the reason that heretofore this paper has been unrelenting in its attack on the union:

"Constituted as is mankind, it would be a cause for wonder were there not bitter, wordy disputes growing out of the present strife, and hot words often lead to blows, and no doubt in many instances during the present difficulty what was only a personal affray has been magnified into a riot, involving a battle between union and nonunion men. In such instances we believe that the officers, while doing all in their power to prevent clash, should deal leniently with the offenders, and only where deliberate violations occur or cowardly assaults are made should the offenders be punished to the full extent of the law. All honor to the many good men and true who, bearing the full share of the burden and believing in the righteousness of their cause, have persistently and consistently thrown the weight of their influence in favor of law and order."

The following is taken from the Daily Camera (Democrat) published in Boulder:

"Judge Greeley W. Whitford has become an instrument of good for the people of Colorado which can not be overestimated. The people were in doubt, and the interests were teaching them that recall of judges would be a bad thing; but the people have been reading reports of proceedings in Judge Whitford's court, and the more they read the more firmly are they convinced that judges need recalling, as well as any other officers who abuse their powers. As George III's obstinacy gave the world its greatest Republic, so some judges' services to the interests promise real rule of the people and freedom from judicial tyranny.

"In sentencing the miners now in jail Judge Whitford made use of the following amazing statements:

"Idleness begets lawlessness. Here is organized refusal to work. Bitterness and animosity are in the breast of each against those who do the work. This must be remembered as a general condition in the place when we examine the evidence and determine the falsity or truth of the charges; declarations have been made by members of the union that they will yet win the strike, despite Judge Whitford's orders. The declarations have come from those high in the councils of the union."

"From this it appears that it is a crime to strike and that the injunction writ was issued not to protect the property but to defeat the strike. The highest court in the State of New York held recently that a strike was legal; that organized labor was essential and had brought the laboring man from a position of degradation to one of honor, respect, and citizenship. If the injunction was made to defeat the strike, then has the court become the tool of the operator and the antagonist of organized labor.

"Proceedings of attachment have been issued by the Denver court against the homes of 13 of the imprisoned miners in lieu of the payment of the fine imposed upon them by Judge Greeley W. Whitford."

Mr. DOYLE. An appeal to the miners of district 15 just prior to the strike, but the policy committee of the organization quoting the law guaranteeing to them the right to be a member of that organization or any organization:

AN APPEAL TO ALL MINE WORKERS IN DISTRICT 15.

To the Mine Workers of District 15, U. M. W. of A., Greeting:

This is the day of your emancipation. This is the day when liberty and progress come to abide in your midst.

We call upon you this day to enroll as a member of the greatest and most powerful labor organization in the world, the United Mine Workers of America, an organization numbering more than 400,000 members, operating in all the coal fields of the United States and Canada.

This organization since its inception has increased wages more than 100 per cent, has established the eight-hour workday, secured better mining laws, and made it possible for its members to enjoy freedom and protection from corporate tyranny and oppression.

It has advanced the interests of its members in a hundred different ways and has brought sunshine and happiness into thousands of homes. This great movement now enters your district, which is the only one in the West yet unorganized, and we enter it with the firm determination of remaining here until every mine in the district is working under union conditions.

We feel sure we have your support. We know that for years you have appealed to us to help you. Now we are answering your call with all the power and all the wealth of our great union.

We ask you to join or help organize a local union at once, if none exists in your locality. We ask you to help lay the foundation of the splendid movement we are building in this field. Do not delay a moment, but make haste to join your fellows and help win the victory.

The law of Colorado protects you in your right to belong to a labor union. It reads as follows:

“LABOR UNIONS.

“Unlawful to interfere with or coerce.—That it shall be unlawful for any individual, company or corporation, or any member of any firm, or agent, officer or employee of any company or corporation to prevent employees from forming, joining, or belonging to any lawful organization, society, or political party, or to coerce or attempt to coerce employees by discharging or threatening to discharge them from their employ or the employ of any firm, company, or corporation because of their connection with such lawful organization, society, or political party.” (Sec. 2801, vol. 3, M. A. S.)

“Misdemeanor—Penalty.—Any person or any member of any firm, or agent, officer, or employee of any such company or corporation violating the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than $100 nor more than $500 or imprisonment for a period not less than six months nor more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.” (Sec. 2801s, vol. 3, M. A. S. Sec. 1 is on 2801r.)

If you are discharged for exercising this legal right we will begin court proceedings against the offending company and will pay you strike benefits from the moment you quit work. For further particulars consult the men in charge of our offices at Trinidad, Walsenburg, Florence, and Aguilar.

Yours, for unionism,

FRANK J. HAYES,
JOHN R. LAWSON,

Policy Committee Representing District 15, Mine Workers.

Mr. DOYLE. Copy of statement issued by policy committee to the press, under date of August 26, 1913, pertaining to statements being issued through the country that were not correct:

AUGUST 26, 1913.

To the Press:

Many statements have been issued to the public, some of them utterly unwarranted and without foundation, to the effect that the miners are asking for an open shop in southern Colorado. This is so ridiculous that were the situation not so critical it would be a joke. The miners of southern Colorado have had what the operators term an open shop, for many years. They have had the open shop and the armed-guard system until it has become so unbearable to them that they have, after trying in vain for many years to have the statutes of the State lived up to, appealed to the United Mine Workers of America to assist them in gaining that which is the right of every free man in this country, the right to join the union of their choice; the right of free speech; the right of collective bargaining and the right to employ representatives to assist them in getting higher wages; better and more sanitary conditions; the right and opportunity of an education for their children; the privilege of demonstrating that the highest type of citizenship is not produced through espionage, by men, women and children being constantly placed under surveillance of ex-convicts and imported gunmen.

Statements have been made that the miners' representatives will not insist upon the recognition of the union and that they are only asking several unimportant concessions. This is absolutely untrue. Another statement has been made to the effect that Frank J. Hayes, international vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, who is in charge of the Colorado situation, has expressed views not held by other members of the policy committee. This is absolutely false. We desire to state that Mr. Hayes was sent to Colorado to take charge of the situation here upon our personal request and was selected by us to act as the one member of the policy committee to give statements to the press, and every statement made by him reflects the sentiments of the committee and the Colorado miners.

Realizing as we do the real meaning of a strike of the coal miners of Colorado at this time and that the public is oftentimes, by virtue of their position, the greatest sufferers, also that the business interests must not be overlooked, and that the interests of the State should not be forgotten, we are determined to exhaust all honorable means in an endeavor to bring about a settlement before the strike order is issued.

We are for Colorado; we are for good citizenship; we are for the enforcement of the law; we stand for justice. We hope the situation may be cleared up without a strike and that the disgraceful scenes of years gone by that have placed a blot upon the fair name of Colorado will never be enacted in this State again.

E. L. DOYLE,
Secretary-Treasurer, District 15, U. M. W. of A.

MR. DOYLE. Extract of advice given by myself pertaining to picketing in the northern Colorado coal fields:

[Extracts from advice given to officers and members of local union No. 1388, U. M. W. of A., Lafayette, Colo., by E. L. Doyle, secretary-treasurer district No. 15, U. M. W. of A., October 2, 1913.]

Sheriff Buster being unable to attend this meeting to-night, as he had intended to, left word with the secretary of this local union to the effect that it was his desire that I explain his position relative to the orders issued from his office prohibiting members of this organization from picketing, and having a conversation with him in the Denver office to-day, I will state in a brief way his stand in this matter, after which I shall explain the position of the organization and advise you along the lines I think proper to follow during the life of this strike.

Mr. Buster informed me that he is acting under the advice of Gov. Ammons, Attorney General Farrer, and District Attorney Carlson; they based this advice on the antiboycott law of the State of Colorado, which prohibits picketing of all forms. He further stated that his one desire was to serve the people as sheriff of Boulder County and prevent any lawlessness, and that he had learned that the only way to prevent trouble was to stop the parties meeting, especially with men who are shipped in to act as strike breakers; that if the miners or their committees had a right to go to work or to the mines to induce men to cease working, the fuel companies would insist that their guards be permitted to come to such places with arms to escort these men to work, and the consequence would be trouble. He said in substance:

"I am endeavoring to prevent such trouble, and if you people are of the opinion that this is denying you any rights as citizens, I wish you would have it decided in the courts; I am willing as sheriff of Boulder County to be governed accordingly."

This is practically the sheriff's position in the matter of picketing, and I think he wants to be fair and just to both sides, and in answer to this I told him that I expected to visit you people to-day, and that I would attend this meeting to-night for the purpose of advising you as to how you should be governed with reference to your picketing committees; and while the sheriff no doubt believes that the advice given him is correct, I am of the opinion and will hold that opinion until ordered to do different by the courts; that our right to do peaceful picketing and use every peaceful and lawful means to prohibit men from taking our work at the mines, or to influence them to join the organization after they have secured work in the mines, is a right that we can not be denied; even a sheriff's or governor's office should not deny us that right, and if they deem to do so, as indications are they are going to, my advice is that we ignore their orders and exercise our rights as citizens to use all peaceful and lawful means to accomplish our desired end.

I am going to ask you men to-night to appoint committees, say, two or three men, to meet incoming trains and picket the various places where men can be met and talked to, and to explain to these men why we are striking and the reason why we are entitled to all that we demand; explain to them why it is necessary to have an organization and make every effort to have them assist our cause by refraining from working in these mines.

The deputy sheriffs, I understand, have already ordered our picketing committee away from the station and other places; if that is the case, they no doubt will endeavor to stop your committees, and if they do, my advice to you is to refuse to stop picketing, and if the deputy sheriff or the sheriff sees fit to arrest you for violating his instructions, submit to the arrest peacefully, notify the district office, and we will see that proper legal steps are taken to protect you in all your rights; do not be afraid to go to jail for a short time, if you have to, and in all cases refrain from using loud, boisterous, or profane language. Let reason be the weapon with which you fight.

The law under which the sheriff is now acting is the antiboycott law, which the legislature repealed at the last session and which Gov. Ammons vetoed. Aside from this there is a clause in the blacklisting and boycotting law of this State which says that you have a right to persuade men from taking your work by peaceful picketing; and even if this were not a law your natural right as a citizen, your right under the State and National Constitutions would permit you to do this. Again, in the case where the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co. made application for a Federal injunction in October last, Judge Lewis plainly said, in rendering his opinion and in denying the company an injunction, that you have a right to picket peacefully and persuade men to join your organization or refrain from acting as strike breakers. This decision was one of the most sweeping ever handed down from the Federal bench; even the newspapers of the country were silent, evidently afraid to make known to organized labor the decision of such importance to it. Now, in the face of the fact that a Federal court says we have this right, that a Constitution of State and Nation gives us this right, are we going to, as members of organized labor, submit to the wishes of either the district attorney or attorney general, or even the governor of the State, and comply with a law that even the legislature said should not be on the statute books and made an effort to repeal—a law that one man, the governor of the State, said should not be repealed? No; if you accept my advice you will exercise your rights and take the consequences. Every right that we as citizens of this country have was fought and paid for in the blood of the citizens of this country, and we should not permit any of these rights to be denied us even if we have to fight people to maintain them; this we do not want to do, therefore we will fight to the highest court of the land to protect that right, and it will be sufficient time to protect by war—civil war—when the last court of the land denies us the right guaranteed us by the Constitutions of the State and Nation.

I have hopes, however, that we will not have to go very far in the courts before our rights will be fully recognized.

Mr. DOYLE. List of districts in which the United Mine Workers are working, whether they have agreements in those districts or not:

The United Mine Workers of America, with a paid-up membership of 415,142 December 31, 1913, is divided into districts, as follows:

Pennsylvania; working under agreement.

District No. 2. Pennsylvania; working under agreements with the coal companies.

District No. 5. Pennsylvania; working under agreements with the coal companies.

District No. 6. Ohio; working under agreements with the coal companies.

District No. 7. Pennsylvania; working under agreements with the coal companies.

District No. 8. Indiana; working under agreements with the coal companies.

District No. 9. Pennsylvania; working under agreements with the coal companies.

District No. 10. Washington; greater part organized and working under agreements.

District No. 11. Indiana; working under agreement with the coal companies.

District No. 12. Illinois; working under agreement with the coal companies.

District No. 13. Iowa; working under agreement with the coal companies.

District No. 14. Kansas; working under agreement with the coal companies.

District No. 15. Colorado; greater part organized, and has a number of mines working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 17. West Virginia; organized and working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 18. British Columbia; organized and working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 19. Kentucky; partly organized.

District No. 20. Alabama; partly organized.

District No. 21. Arkansas; organized and working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 22. Wyoming; organized and working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 23. Kentucky; partly organized.

District No. 24. Michigan; organized and working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 25. Missouri; organized and working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 26. Nova Scotia; partly organized.

District No. 27. Montana; organized and working under agreements with coal companies.

District No. 28. British Columbia; greater part organized, some mines working under agreement.

District No. 29. West Virginia; organized and working under agreement.

Mr. DOYLE. Copy of letter from the United Mine Workers' executive board that was sent here, dated December 1, 1914, or was, rather, brought here by a committee of that body, giving its reasons for advice to the miners pertaining to calling off the strike, which was called off on the 10th of this month:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., December 1, 1914.

To the officers and Members of all Local Unions in Colorado, Greeting:

The President of the United States on September 7, 1914, submitted to us a proposition for the settlement of the Colorado coal strike and urged upon us its acceptance in the following letter:

"MY DEAR SIR: I feel justified in addressing you with regard to the present strike situation in Colorado, because it has lasted so long, has gone through so many serious stages, and is fraught with so many possibilities that it has become of national importance.

"As you know, Federal troops have been in the State for the purpose of maintaining order now for a long time. I have been hoping every day during that time that some light would come out of the perplexities of the situation, some indication that the mine operators and the miners who are now on strike were willing to consider proposals of accommodation and settlement; but no such indication has reached me, and I am now obliged to determine whether I am justified in using the Army of the United States indefinitely for police purposes.

"Many things may come out of this situation if it is not handled with public spirit and with a sincere desire to safeguard the public as well as all others concerned; perhaps the most serious of them all—the feeling which is being generated and the impression of the public—that no one is willing to act, no one willing to yield anything, no one willing even to consider terms of accommodation.

"As you know, two representatives of the Government of the United States have been actively engaged in investigating the whole situation and in trying to reach a dispassionate conclusion as to what it is possible to do, in justice to both sides not only but also in the interest of the public. The result of their investigations and of their very thoughtful consideration in the matter has been the drafting of the inclosed 'tentative basis for the adjustment' of the strike. I recommend it to you for your most serious consideration. I hope that you will consider it as if you were acting for the whole country, and I beg that you will regard it as urged upon a time—I am sure you will feel—when everything should be done that it is possible for men to do to see that all untoward and threatening circumstances of every sort are taken out of the life of the people of the United States.

"Sincerely, yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

Our international officials sent the following reply to President Wilson :

"HON. WOODROW WILSON,

"President United States, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: With feelings of personal esteem, we reply to your favor of September 5.

"We have weighed well and thoughtfully both the sentiments expressed in your personal letter and the proposed tentative basis for the adjustment of the coal-mining strike in Colorado, the acceptance of which you urge 'with very deep earnestness.'

"We are profoundly impressed with what you say, and fully conscious of the fact that in submitting this basis of settlement you are actuated only by feelings of public concern and inspired by motives both lofty and patriotic.

"The organization which we have the honor to represent stands for industrial peace. We favor the establishment of right relations between employers and employees, to the end that strikes may be rendered unnecessary. Having proper regard for these aims, we sought in the beginning to avoid an industrial conflict in Colorado. We repeatedly asked for a meeting with the mine owners, with the object in view of entering into contractual relations with them, so that peace might prevail. Had this been done, we are confident that the awful industrial struggle which has been going on in Colorado could have been avoided; instead of bloodshed, bitterness, industrial strife, and economic waste, there could have been established throughout the coal fields peace, prosperity, and harmonious cooperation. It is our judgment that employers and employees, through their chosen representatives, ought to meet and settle their differences by mutual agreement. A direct working agreement, entered into in a friendly spirit, makes for abiding, permanent, industrial peace. This, we believe, ought to be done by the miners and operators of Colorado. However, we are mindful of the suffering and waste which this strike has thus far imposed, and the additional sacrifice which will be made if it continues.

"Feeling keenly therefore our responsibilities as the representatives of our organization, we accept your proposed basis of settlement of the Colorado strike, subject, of course, to the approval of the miners of Colorado. A convention of the representatives of the miners of Colorado will be held at Trinidad, Colo., Tuesday, September 15, at which time action will be taken thereon.

"We sincerely appreciate the personal concern which you have manifested in the Colorado strike. Speaking as you do in the name of all the people of our great Nation, we feel it our duty to respond to your earnest wish.

"We do so, therefore, as we trust in the true spirit of American citizenship."

In view of the President's earnest request that the strike be settled on the basis proposed by his mediators, and in accord with the sentiment expressed by us in the above letter, we immediately called a convention of the miners of Colorado, to meet in Trinidad, Colo., September 15, 1914, for the express purpose of permitting the men affected to pass. The delegates to this convention, by practically a unanimous vote, decided to accept the President's proposal, and the convention directed that the following telegram be sent to President Wilson:

"TRINIDAD, COLO., September 16, 1914.

"WOODROW WILSON,

"President United States of America, Washington, D. C.:

"The Colorado mine workers, in convention assembled, have carefully considered your proposal for a settlement of the Colorado strike, and after calm and deliberate thought have this day decided to accept the proposition you submit. The delegates to this convention convey to you their abiding faith in your integrity and your earnest and patriotic desire to be helpful in the present strike situation. Upon notice of acceptance of your proposition by the coal operators, we will immediately terminate the strike and return to work."

President Wilson immediately replied, as follows:

"Allow me to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram conveying to me the action of the Colorado mine workers, in convention assembled, and to express my deep appreciation. The action does honor to the convention, and the spirit in which the action was taken is a fine prophecy of the conclusion of the trouble.

"Cordially and sincerely, yours,

"WOODROW WILSON."

We were of the opinion that such action on our part would speedily terminate the strike, not thinking for an instant that the operators would refuse the President's plan of settlement, especially when this plan meant nothing more or less than the impartial enforcement of the labor and mining laws of Colorado and the appointment of an industrial commission by the President to see that such laws were enforced. In the refusal of the operators to accept the plan of settlement proposed by the President, and their insistence on a continuation of a system which stands for industrial chaos and anarchy, they forfeit the support, if they persist in maintaining this position, of every right-thinking, law-abiding American citizen.

When the operators refused to accept the President's proposal we entertained the hope that President Wilson would enforce his proposition by governmental action. After waiting for more than two months for some measure to be adopted by the President that would speedily terminate the strike, and receiving no definite word as to what his final action might be, we concluded to arrange a meeting with the President, and accordingly we met with him at the White House on Thursday, November 19. He informed us at that time that he was legally advised that he could not take over the Colorado coal mines and operate them under Government supervision and thus force a settlement of the strike in accord with the peace plan he had submitted. The President expressed deep regret that the operators had seen fit to disregard his wishes in the matter, and informed us he would do everything he could legally to bring about a settlement of the controversy. We requested that he make his position known as soon as possible, and so on December 1 we received the following communication from the President:

"The strike of the miners in Colorado which has now lasted for 12 months has attracted the attention of the whole country and has been accompanied by many distressing and tragical circumstances. The mediation of the Government of the United States was offered early in the struggle, but the operators of the mines were unwilling to avail themselves of it or to act upon the suggestions made in the interest of peace by representatives of the Department of Labor authorized by statute to serve in such cases. It became necessary to send Federal troops to the district affected by the strike in order to preserve peace; but their presence could of itself accomplish nothing affirmative. After long waiting, therefore, and the disappointment of many hopes of accommodation, I ventured, after taking counsel with representatives of the Government who had been on the field and made themselves thoroughly familiar with all the circumstances of the case, to propose a plan of pending agreement upon such terms and arrangements as might be made the basis for permanently satisfactory relations between them. The plan seemed to me obviously fair and sensible. The striking miners promptly accepted it; but the mine operators rejected it, saying in response to my earnest appeal that they objected to its most essential features—namely, the proposed arrangements by which differences might be settled by reference to a commission appointed by the President of the United States. I think the country regretted their decision and was disappointed that they should have taken so uncompromising a position. I have waited and hoped for a change in their attitude, but now fear that there will be none. And yet I do not feel that I am at liberty to do nothing in the presence of circumstances so serious and distressing. Merely to withdraw the Federal troops and leave the situation to clear and settle itself would seem to me to be doing something less than my duty after all that has occurred. I have therefore determined to appoint the commission contemplated in the plan of temporary settlement, notwithstanding the rejection of the plan by the mine operators, and thus at least to create the instrumentality by which like troubles and disputes may be amicably and honorably settled in the future, in the hope, the very earnest and sincere hope, that both parties may see it to be not merely to their own best interest but also a duty which they owe to the communities they serve and to the Nation itself to make use of this instrumentality of peace and render strife of the kind which has threatened the order and prosperity of the great State of Colorado a thing of the past, impossible of repetition so long as everything that is done is done in good temper and with the genuine purpose to do justice and observe every public as well as every private obligation.

"The Hon. Seth Low, of New York; Mr. Charles W. Mills, of Philadelphia; and Mr. Patrick Gilday, of Clearfield, Pa., have most generously and unselfishly consented, at my request, to serve as members of the commission. I owe to these gentlemen my own warm thanks not only, but also, I believe, the thanks of their fellow citizens throughout the country. They will place themselves at the service alike of the miners and the operators of the mines in Colorado in case controversy between them should in the future develop circumstances which would render mediation the obvious way of peace and just settlement."

This is the last word from the President, and in submitting this final proposition he emphasizes the thought that "both parties may see it to be not merely to their own best interest, but also a duty which they owe to the communities they serve and the Nation itself to make use of this instrumentality of peace and render strife of the kind which has threatened the order and prosperity of the great State of Colorado a thing of the past." In view of this urgent request, coming as it does from the Chief Executive of the Nation, we deem it the part of wisdom to accept his suggestion and to terminate the strike. In our opinion, to wage the strike further would not mean additional gain to our members.

We trust that this commission appointed by the President will meet with success and that all the operators in the State will come under its jurisdiction. The men who compose this commission are of national reputation and are citizens of high character and standing in their respective communities. If the operators reject the good offices of this commission, appointed in good faith by the President of the United States, upon their shoulders will rest the responsibility of any future trouble in the mining fields of Colorado. In taking this position and in terminating this strike, which has lasted for a period of almost 5 years in the northern coal fields and for more than 14 months in the southern coal fields of Colorado, we believe we are doing the best thing possible for the men on strike, who have suffered so long in order that justice might be done. We have spent an enormous amount of money in waging this struggle for justice and fair play in the mining fields of Colorado but have felt that it was spent in as noble a cause as it was ever given to man to espouse. We are not unmindful of the heroic struggle waged by the miners of Colorado since the strike began. It is with feelings of pain and sorrow that we recall the massacre of our men, women, and children at Ludlow. The sacrifices made, the privations endured, is without a parallel in the history of the labor struggles of America. Only those who have suffered grievous wrongs could endure such a prolonged conflict.

All lovers of liberty and believers in fair play between man and man must admire the heroic struggle of the Colorado miners against the great wealth and influence of Rockefeller and his associates. We believe that our people have not died in vain, and that the battle they have waged against such tremendous odds has aroused the conscience of the Nation, and that out of the martyrdom of our people will come the dawn of a better day for the suffering miners and their families in the coal fields of Colorado. May not this terrible conflict teach the citizens of Colorado and of the Nation that "government by gunmen" must cease? We express the hope that the President of the United States and the people of this Nation will see to it that constitutional government is enjoyed by the citizens in the coal fields of Colorado. We have made every overture for peace since the beginning of this conflict. We have repeatedly sought a conference with the mine owners only to be denied a hearing. We have repeatedly offered arbitration only to be ridiculed, and in the end 35 of our men, women, and children were murdered before the people of the Nation came to understand that the coal strike in Colorado was not a local or a State issue but a national issue of vital importance, involving civil as well as industrial rights. We feel that the President has so regarded it; that he has recognized the truth of the claims we have made; and that with the termination of this strike by the appointment of a permanent presidential commission of fair-minded men we shall find that the old-time oppression and tyranny will be no more, and that public opinion will compel the large operators of Colorado to deal justly with our people. And even though we now feel called upon to terminate this strike, due to untoward circumstances which surround us, we wish to say that our support and influence will ever be given freely to the mine workers of Colorado. We recognize no surrender and shall continue to propagate the principles of our humanitarian movement throughout the coal fields of Colorado. We advise all men to seek their former places in the mines, and those who are refused employment we shall render assistance to the best of our ability and shall provide every legal protection to those of our members who are being persecuted by the hirelings of organized greed.

In accordance with the above we recommend that a convention of the mine workers of Colorado be called to meet in Denver Monday, December 7, for the purpose of making known the meaning of the recent proposition of the President and for the further purpose of working out all the details in connection with the closing up of the strike; and, further, that a committee representing the international executive board shall attend the above-mentioned convention, and that they be given discretionary power to meet the exigencies of any situation concerning the termination of the strike that may arise.

Mr. DOYLE. Clipping from the New York Times of last week pertaining to the Rockefeller Foundation, which shows that they have on hand $103,930,817.

My reason for submitting that statement is because of the foundation which has been endowed by the same Rockefeller, whom the miners of Colorado have had to pay a greater price for the attempt to establish the industrial part of this—industrial liberty of this State.

“By the issuance of a statement it was announced at the Rockefeller offices yesterday, 26 Broadway, that Jerome D. Greene, secretary of the Rockefeller Foundation, had withdrawn temporarily from his activities as a member of John D. Rockefeller's personal staff and that Ivy L. Lee, executive assistant to the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, would shortly take up his duties.”

Of course, I read this to show that this is the same Ivy L. Lee who was press agent for the operators in the issuing of the recent bulletin, to get it into the record, to show that labor itself does not need to expect any benefits from the industrial relations benefit investigation that the foundation, I understand, proposes to make.

That the services of this man were used in Colorado at the direction of the Rockefeller interest for the purpose of thwarting justice in the industrial world in the State of Colorado, and that the services of such a man certainly could not be beneficial to labor in the outcome from an investigation in Colorado.

I also want to get into the record a statement concerning the Belgian relief work of the foundation that has been in the press from time to time. The Belgian relief work, which is no doubt done by that interest to get the public sympathy, while at the same time the interest from which this money was coming, or a great portion of it, was squeezed from those who work in the mines of Colorado; rung from the blood and sweat of the men, women, and children, even taken from the children too young to enter the mines.

That the Belgian relief work and perhaps a general investigation of the Colorado mine troubles would be taken up by this Rockefeller Foundation.

I would like to get it into the record, with the permission of the commission, that we don't expect to get any justice or any semblance of justice from any investigation that may be taken up by this foundation, because they are the same identical men who have taken from the miners and made them contribute to this investigation.

I find here in the list 146 names of different corporations in the United States where the bonds, notes, and stocks have been given as security or donated to the Rockefeller Foundation to be used in this Belgian relief work, so called. I find that among them there are $1,600,000 of the Colorado Industrial Co. convertible bonds, as I understand it, and as the Colorado Industrial Co. is one of the institutions of this State that is linked up with the C. F. & I. bunch, to claim that the $1,600,000 that is used to investigate a portion of it is used to investigate Colorado's industrial unrest, is simply an insult to the intelligence of the workers of this State.

I claim it is like a man being held up at night, and the robber meets him on the street next day and asks him to loan him the price of a meal.

I believe that it is not in sincerity that that foundation is going to investigate industrial relations. I think it is more to hide what has occurred than to do good for organized labor.

It refers here to John Rockefeller, sr., retiring from business activity. I want to mention that I read in the press the other day, during the investigation of this committee, that Rockefeller was present at Tarrytown some time last September, Rockefeller, sr., with others, and that he evidently has not retired from activity, and the investigation of the Rockefeller Foundation into labor conditions will not be such that we can expect any benefit from it.

I want to call your attention further that the hundred millions appropriated by Rockefeller for this Rockefeller Foundation, according to this report there were about six and one-half millions appropriated from that for service, and that after this appropriation being made, $3,930,817.19 is on hand now more than they had when it was endowed in the start. It would appear to me that even the accumulations, while I have not figured it out, have not had time to get up the figures, but according to the statement of the accumulated earnings the interest on that $100,000,000 donated by the Rockefeller Foundation for this so-called uplift work would more than pay the increase asked by the miners of Colorado and thus have prevented the industrial unrest that existed in this State and would have prevented the loss of life on both sides which has taken place and which has brought disgrace to the State and Nation.

If we sincerely want to try to do what is right, and promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world, how can any association established by him who has brought so much on Colorado, how could he establish any kind of organization that was to promote the welfare of mankind throughout the world? How can he expect the world to believe this commission, or anybody to believe that he is trying to promote the welfare of mankind throughout the world, when he denies the simple justice to the men who toil in the bowels of the earth from morning to night? How can he expect—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I want to call attention to the fact that it is long past the time for adjourning, and we ask the gentleman just to confine himself to telling us what those documents are and let us read them for ourselves.

Mr. DOYLE. All right.

I want to offer in evidence a number of pictures.

(The photographs referred to were submitted by the witness, but are not printed.)

I want to offer in evidence first a picture of the funeral procession in the streets of Trinidad after the Ludlow massacre.

Another picture showing the caskets of the victims.

Another picture showing the C. F. I. wagon loaded with boxes of supplies, etc., to be delivered at the headquarters of the militia, showing that they worked in conjunction.

A picture of the machine gun used by the militia, showing the gun ready for action as was used in the month of April.

Picture showing the destruction of the tent homes of the miners who went on strike at Forbes, Colo., showing how their homes were ruined and torn down by the militia.

Picture of Ludlow before the fire, showing the tents clustered on the prairie.

Picture showing the ruins after the Ludlow fire.

Picture of the Black Hole, where the bodies of 2 women and 11 babes were burned up.

Picture of the armored automobile, containing machine gun and mine guards. This is the same automobile that traveled through the tented cities down there and created a reign of terror, shooting the people to death.

Black Hand letter received by Jack McQuarrie.

Picture showing the remains of Louie Tikaš, the martyr at Ludlow, who was trying to maintain peace, and as the evidence has been given, was killed by the gunmen militia at Ludlow last April.

Picture of the remains of another miner, Robodino, I think his name is, killed on that day at Ludlow.

Picture of the remains of James Fyler, secretary Ludlow local union, also a martyr on that day, showing how his face was blown to pieces by reason of a bullet through the back of his head.

Picture of the little Snyder boy, 12 years old, who went out from the hole to get his mother a drink, and as the miners were in that locality, he was killed by a piece of lead. But had that been John D. Rockefeller, jr., when he was 12 years old, what a fuss would have been made in this country, and I claim that that boy who died that death is just as good as anybody, and that he to-day lies in an early grave.

Picture of a group of miners' children near the tent colony. These are the children who will be citizens of to-morrow, and unless the Nation's statesmen arise to the need of changing industrial conditions, at least realizing them from the working people's viewpoint, that these children in years to come will be the strikers of Colorado or of this Nation.

Picture of the two boys, showing one of them in his father's overalls, having none of his own.

Picture of a mother and child, showing the anxious look on the mother's face.

Picture of two children.

I want to say that I appreciate, as one humble citizen, the opportunity of having this time before your committee, especially since the hour of adjournment has long past, because I feel I am speaking to the statesmen of the Nation, and I hope this commission will take such action to enact legislation that will for all time to come stop such things as we have been going through with in this State of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will adjourn until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

(At this point, 5.25 p. m., an adjournment was taken until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 14, 1914, at 9 o'clock a. m.)

DENVER, COLO., Tuesday, December 15, 1914—9 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Ballard, O'Connell, Lennon, and Harriman.

Chairman WALSH. The commission will be in order.

Is Mr. Snodgrass here? Take that chair, please, Mr. Snodgrass.

TESTIMONY OF MR. B. W. SNODGRASS.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, please?

Mr. SNODGRASS. B. W. Snodgrass.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I am superintendent of a coal mine.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived in the State of Colorado?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Since 1888.

Chairman WALSH. By what company are you employed now?

Mr. SNODGRASS. By the Victor-American Fuel Co.

Chairman WALSH. Please briefly state what you have been doing since you come to the State in 1888.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I came to the State when I was quite a young boy and went to school for a number of years.

Chairman WALSH. What was your first business?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I was employed three years in the Trinidad National Bank. After that I was employed for 10 years by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. In what capacities?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, most of the time in a clerical capacity. I worked at the coal mines for six years, and also worked in their general offices in Denver here for four years. I then went to the Victor-American Fuel Co. in 1905.

Chairman WALSH. In what capacity?

Mr. SNODGRASS. As clerk to the general manager. I worked in that capacity for a year and went then to the mines as assistant superintendent of the Delagua mine. That was in 1906.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been superintendent?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I was assistant superintendent of the mine two years and have been since that time superintendent. I have been superintendent six years.

Chairman WALSH. Well, please state briefly your experience with the striking miners from the beginning of the strike until the battle of Ludlow.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, when the strike first began to be talked of I talked to nearly all of the men employed at that mine individually whenever I could talk to them. They did not seem to think there would be a strike. None of them seemed to want to have a strike. They did not want to go on a strike. They told me that they considered they were doing as well as they could do in the coal-mining business any place.

Chairman WALSH. How many did you talk to, would you say?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Oh, we had 500 men at that time and I talked to the greater part of them.

Chairman WALSH. You had 500 men at the Delagua mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes, sir. They seemed to be quite well satisfied with the conditions there, and up until three days before the strike became effective I do not believe—I did not believe that very many of them would leave us. I don't believe they were intending to leave. Two or three days before the strike some organizers or agitators came into the camp.

Chairman WALSH. What was his name?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, I am not positive, I did not see them. There were two or three, I was told, came in on Saturday night and stayed Saturday night and part of Sunday, and mixed around among the men, and on Monday returned, and when I saw some of the men I knew there was going to be a strike because they told me they were going to leave. They changed their minds very abruptly.

Chairman WALSH. How many went on strike from your mines?

Mr. SNODGRASS. About 250.

Chairman WALSH. Just about half that were there?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes—well, a little more than half, because during the last week before the strike probably 50 men quit; they did not wait for the strike; they did not want to be in it so they went away.

Chairman WALSH. What percentage would you say went out from the Delagua mine, what percentage of the whole, on account of the strike, went out immediately before, at the time or immediately afterwards?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Fifty per cent.

Chairman WALSH. Then it was just about half?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; if you consider the number that quit a week or so preceding the strike.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, after they went out at Delagua, what experience did you have personally?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, when they went out on a strike they went out very good naturedly; they were just as friendly when they were leaving as they had been previously, but when I met those men a week or two afterwards they had completely changed their actions; they were distant.

Chairman WALSH. How many of the men that went out from Delagua went to the Ludlow tent colony?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Nearly all of them went to the colony, went directly to the colony. Very few stayed at the colony; they did not like it there; and after they had been there a week or so, some moved to other places, to Trinidad, Aguilar, or other places where they could get houses; they did not like the idea of living in tents. I don't know just how many stayed at the colony, probably 50 out of the 250 stayed at the colony.

Chairman WALSH. Were you present when any violence took place on either side?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I was present when there was violence at our camp, at the Delagua mine.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe that, and please confine yourself to first-hand information, what you saw yourself.

Mr. SNODGRASS. All right, I will do so. We had trouble there on three different occasions.

Chairman WALSH. When was the first one?

Mr. SNODGRASS. The first occasion was on October 26, I believe; yes, on October 26.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe it, please.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The superintendent at the Hastings mine, which is located about 3 miles from our mine, telephoned me that there was a bunch of strikers coming up the canyon back of the camp from the Ludlow tent colony, presumably headed for our place, and I sent six men out to head those men off so they would not get to the camp. They came up the canyon to our reservoir—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Who were the six men you sent out? What official capacity, if any, did they have? Were they guards or sheriffs or what?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; they were guards.

Chairman WALSH. Were they what were called mine guards proper or deputy sheriffs?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Deputy sheriffs.

Chairman WALSH. What date was that?

Mr. SNODGRASS. On the 26th of October.

Chairman WALSH. And you sent them where?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Over to our reservoir, which is about a mile and one-half from the camp.

Chairman WALSH. In what direction?

Mr. SNODGRASS. In a northeasterly direction.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Before they got there these strikers had reached that point. We have a caretaker living at the reservoir with his family and he had seen the strikers coming. He had climbed up on top of the mountain to see if he could see any of our men around any place.

Chairman WALSH. Were the strikers armed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What did they have, small arms or rifles?

Mr. SNODGRASS. They had rifles. And when the caretaker got up on this prominent point the strikers saw him and began to shoot at him. He was not armed. They shot at him and also shot at his house and put several holes into his house where his family lived. When our men showed up on the scene there was a little shooting back and forth and the strikers went back down the canyon.

Chairman WALSH. Was there anyone hurt at that time.

Mr. SNODGRASS. No one seemed to be hurt.

Chairman WALSH. How were the guards armed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. With rifles.

Chairman WALSH. How many men were in the strikers' party, do you think?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I did not see them.

Chairman WALSH. How many were reported to you?

Mr. SNODGRASS. About 20.

Chairman WALSH. No one hurt that time and they went back up the canyon?

Mr. SNODGRASS. That is correct; nobody was hurt.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Then, on October 28—

Chairman WALSH. October 28, 1913?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; October 28, 1913, the strikers came up again. They came up from the same direction, and also a number came from the direction of Aguilar.

Chairman WALSH. How many were there that time?

Mr. SNODGRASS. There were about 150.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see them yourself?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I saw some of them.

Chairman WALSH. Your reports and all showed there was about 150?

Mr. SNODGRASS. That is what we thought, as far as we could see. They came within about three-quarters of a mile of the camp, and we had some men out to keep them from coming in. There was considerable shooting but nobody hurt.

Chairman WALSH. Did they come up a county road?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No; they did not follow any road.

Chairman WALSH. They came up the canyon?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; they came up the canyon.

Chairman WALSH. How many men were engaged on your side in that shooting?

Mr. SNODGRASS. On that day? Twelve.

Chairman WALSH. Were they mine guards or deputy sheriffs?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mine guards.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get the information that the strikers were coming up the canyon?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We had been telephoned the day before that they were coming and had been up all night getting telephone answers; and it was generally talked over the telephone from all sources—all night—that there was going to be trouble in the morning; that it was going to start at 5 o'clock, and it did start at 5 o'clock.

Chairman WALSH. Who, if anyone, directed or requested the deputy sheriffs to go down and meet them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, I requested them to go.

Chairman WALSH. Who did you request, any particular one among them or all of them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, I requested all of them to go.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, was there anyone hurt in that scrimmage?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You say it took place about three-quarters of a mile from your mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is, the Delagua mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes, sir; no one hurt.

Chairman WALSH. When was the next time?

Mr. SNODGRASS. The next time was on April 22; there had been fighting around Ludlow a couple of days.

Chairman WALSH. That was after the Ludlow affair?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes. They had been fighting at Ludlow from the 20th.

Chairman WALSH. You were not present at Ludlow then?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go there afterwards?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Not for several weeks afterwards.

Chairman WALSH. Tell us what took place on the 22d?

Mr. SNODGRASS. On the 22d of April we had been informed by a man in Aguilar that the strikers were coming up the canyon—that is, on the 21st we were told they were coming up the canyon and getting out onto the hills. I sent some men out on the hills to keep them from coming into the camp, and they stayed out all day on the 21st, and we changed them and sent some more men at night and they stayed out all night.

Chairman WALSH. The militia were there at that time, were they not?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Not there; there were none closer than Ludlow. We had about—we had 12 men out during the night of the 21st, and at—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Twelve guards?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes. And at 4.45 in the morning the strikers came up to within probably 100 or 150 yards of where some of our men were stationed.

Chairman WALSH. Within the canyon or on the road or where?

Mr. SNODGRASS. On top of the hill—no road at all.

Chairman WALSH. No road?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Was it on your property?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Oh, yes; it was a mile inside of our land, where our men were stationed. A large number of strikers came up there and they engaged our men and there were several hundred shots fired.

Chairman WALSH. Were you present?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I was in the camp; I was not on top of the hill.

Chairman WALSH. How many men did you have there?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I had 12 on the hill that morning.

Chairman WALSH. Who were the 12 men you had there; do you remember their names?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I remember a number of their names.

Chairman WALSH. Were they the same 12 that went out before?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Some of them were the same.

Chairman WALSH. How many did you have altogether guarding the camp?

Mr. SNODGRASS. At that time we had 12 regular men, and then we had a number of men working in the mine who could be depended on to help in case it was necessary.

Chairman WALSH. How many?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We had 12 regular men; and then we had a number who were working in the mine on whom we call to help us in case of trouble.

Chairman WALSH. Now, were there any individuals among those men that were in command of the others, or did they all have the same authority, or how was that?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, of course, we had a man who was in command.

Chairman WALSH. Who was that?

Mr. SNODGRASS. His name was Vanderleur.

Chairman WALSH. Had any of these men, or how many, if any, had worked for your company before this trouble?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Before the strike?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; before the strike.

Mr. SNODGRASS. About half of them.

Chairman WALSH. In what capacities had they worked?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Some of them had worked in the store, some had worked at the mine as laborers or motormen and coal diggers.

Chairman WALSH. Who, if anyone, directed them to be commissioned, or asked them to be commissioned?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I asked them.

Chairman WALSH. Among the others, the other half that had not worked in the mines, where did they come from?

Mr. SNODGRASS. They were men that had come there to work in the mine. They came from different points; I don't know just exactly. Some lived on farms above the mine as ranchmen.

Chairman WALSH. Who hired them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I hired them.

Chairman WALSH. And when you hired them, how did you get them commissioned?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We asked the sheriff to commission them.

Chairman WALSH. Who was the sheriff.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Gresham.

Chairman WALSH. And what direction or instructions did you give these men at the time you appointed them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I simply told them we wanted them to protect the property; to stay on the property lines.

Chairman WALSH. What compensation did they receive?

Mr. SNODGRASS. They were paid $3.50 a day for their services, and when they worked in the mines they got the regular scale of wages paid in the mines. They were not always employed as guards. They were employed most of the time in the mines, but when we took them out for those services—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). When did you employ the first ones?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We employed the first ones on the 23d of September.

Chairman WALSH. That was as soon as the strike was declared?

Mr. SNODGRASS. That was the day it was declared.

Chairman WALSH. And where did they get their arms?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We furnished them.

Chairman WALSH. What arms did they have?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Rifles.

Chairman WALSH. And where did you get the rifles? Were they at Delagua, or did they have to get them from some place else?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We got them from Trinidad or Denver, or—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Do you remember how long before the strike was called that you got them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Oh, two or three days.

Chairman WALSH. You got them two or three days before?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; we didn't have any arms before that.

Chairman WALSH. Who purchased the arms?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I presume the purchasing agent of the company purchased the arms.

Chairman WALSH. So far as you know, they came from Trinidad?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; so far as I know.

Chairman WALSH. Just coming back to the third engagement you had there, the third trouble was on the 22d of April, was it?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Describe it, please.

Mr. SNODGRASS. When the strikers came up and engaged our men, our men had to leave because there were too many of them. Some of them came back; a couple were killed.

Chairman WALSH. You say some of your men were killed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How many?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Two of those men that went up on the hill that morning were killed. Another who went up after the engagement started.

Chairman WALSH. What was the name of the first one who was killed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. His name was Chavez.

Chairman WALSH. And what was the name of the other?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Fred Dougherty.

Chairman WALSH. Both had worked in the mine before?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Were they men with families, or not?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chavez had a family.

Chairman WALSH. How long had Chavez worked?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Worked for two or three years, off and on. He lived on a ranch above the camp and worked part of the season; part of the season he worked on the ranch.

Chairman WALSH. What was the other man's name?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Dougherty.

Chairman WALSH. How long did he work for you?

Mr. SNODGRASS. He had been there since December, 1913.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see the engagement in which they were killed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; I saw the engagement in which Dougherty was killed.

Chairman WALSH. How many men were with Dougherty?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, there were five of them started up the hill, four with Dougherty; but four of them got back. That is, they met these strikers, and it was too warm for them.

Chairman WALSH. Where did they meet the strikers?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Just at the top of the hill.

Chairman WALSH. And how far was that from the top of—from the mouth of the mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. A quarter of a mile from the mouth of the mine. Dougherty was killed there. The other men got back.

Chairman WALSH. And this other man was killed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Killed.

Chairman WALSH. That same day?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; about an hour after the engagement started.

Chairman WALSH. That would be along about 6 o'clock?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I think it was along about 6 o'clock.

Chairman WALSH. Did the strikers continue to advance right down to the camp?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No; they came—some of them came within 200 yards of the mouth of the mine. They never got any closer than that.

Chairman WALSH. Describe that whole affair, please.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, when the shooting started I was asleep. I was called I got up. A lot of other people got up. We rustled up probably 10 or 15 men, gave them some guns, distributed them at different points about the camp.

Chairman WALSH. Rifles?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Rifles. And in about a half an hour the strikers showed up on a hill—on the top of a hill, about a quarter of a mile away. They were strung along the brow of the hill for about three-quarters of a mile—the length of the camp. They were shooting promiscuously into the camp, shooting at everybody they could see, so that our men shot at them whenever they could see them from the camp. Along about 5 o'clock the men started up to help the fellows who were on the hill; they got nearly to the top of the hill, but the strikers had got there first, so that they began to shoot at them and our men ran back, except the one who was killed.

Chairman WALSH. About how many strikers were there?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, we considered there were 250.

Chairman WALSH. What was the name of the man—your man—that was killed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Besides the two I told you of?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; the last one you mentioned.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Karl Peterson was killed.

Chairman WALSH. Did he work for your people prior to this time?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes. And he was a noncombatant at the time.

Chairman WALSH. What was he doing?

Mr. SNODGRASS. He was a coal miner; and he was taking refuge behind a tree watching the affair. He left the hotel because the hotel was not protected. He was taking refuge behind a tree. He was more than 50 feet from me when he was killed.

Chairman WALSH. Were you engaged in the fight, yourself, were you armed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I was armed. I was watching the thing.

Chairman WALSH. Had a rifle?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I had. Everybody was armed that could get anything, that could get a gun.

Chairman WALSH. Under whose command were your forces?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, I helped distribute the men, and after they were distributed, why, there was nobody in command of them. They were doing what they were told to do.

Chairman WALSH. Taking care of themselves?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Taking care of themselves; trying to keep these people out of the camp. There was another man killed, a noncombatant, Donovan, Dave Donovan, he was a carpenter—he was a man 70 years old.

Chairman WALSH. Working for your mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Where was he when he got killed?

Mr. SNODGRASS. He was on the street.

Chairman WALSH. Where was he with reference to yourself?

Mr. SNODGRASS. He was about a quarter of a mile from me. There were two noncombatants killed that morning. The shooting kept up until 9.30 in the morning, and during that time I had some one telephone to Hastings, to get some help. We did not have very many men, had only about 20 men armed, including those who were on top of the hill. We did not know where they were at that time. They had become scattered. About 9 o'clock the switch engine came up and brought some men from Hastings. I believe that some of those men were militiamen. And the Hastings people had phoned to Maj. Hamrock at Ludlow that the affair was on at Delagua, and he sent some men by rail. They came up within half a mile of the camp and got off the train and went up toward the hill. The strikers saw them coming and immediately retreated back in the direction of the militia.

Chairman WALSH. Did they have any fight with the troops there at all?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No; they left when they saw the troops coming.

Chairman WALSH. What other events occurred there that day, if any, or was that the end of it?

Mr. SNODGRASS. That was the end of it. The militiamen went over the hill to see if they could see anybody, and everybody had gone when they got up there.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any property destroyed at the Delagua mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No.

Chairman WALSH. What were your experiences, if any, after that? Did you have any other experience with them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No; we had no more trouble after that.

Chairman WALSH. How many, if you know, of the men that went out on strike, returned?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Oh, about a hundred I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any change in conditions at the mine September 23, after that strike was called, in any mine, so far as any conditions were concerned; were they paid any more or any less, or was there any change made in conditions?

Mr. SNODGRASS. None whatever; no change made.

Chairman WALSH. Now, is there anything else you care to state about the events that occurred around there that you saw that you think would enlighten the commission, Mr. Snodgrass?

Mr. SNODGRASS. There was very little else occurred at the Delagua mine. You see, we were 6 miles away from Ludlow, where the main trouble took place, and outside of these three engagements we had no particular trouble.

Chairman WALSH. How many men are there in your mine now that stayed in all the time?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I think there are 125.

Chairman WALSH. About 125?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes. Never went out at all during the trouble. There were some stayed part of the time; went away and came back again.

Chairman WALSH. How many new men have you that came in since the strike?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, we have now over between 475 and 500 men.

Chairman WALSH. Between 475 and 500?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Between 475 and 500.

Chairman WALSH. You are very near up, then, to your full equipment?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Your mine is running now, is it?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever have a checkweighman in your mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We have two checkweighmen.

Chairman WALSH. Now?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How is he selected?

Mr. SNODGRASS. The checkweighmen who are employed—we have two weighmen, two places that we dump coal, two places that we weigh coal, consequently it is necessary to have two checkweighmen, if we have any. These men talked around among the miners and decided they wanted to have a checkweighman.

Chairman WALSH. When was that?

Mr. SNODGRASS. The two men went to the miners and said, "We would like to be checkweighmen." They circulated a petition among the miners in the mine where the men were working.

Chairman WALSH. When was that?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Oh, that has been two months ago. They circulated a petition; got the miners to sign the petition. When they had it signed they brought it to me, and, according to the law, it was necessary for us to allow them to have the checkweighmen. The law says that if a majority of the miners want a checkweighman they can have it. I simply took the petition, looked it over, counted to see if we had—if they had the majority of the miners.

Chairman WALSH. How are those checkweighmen paid?

Mr. SNODGRASS. You mean the amount of their salary?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SNODGRASS. They are paid $100 a month if the miners work steady, or at the rate of $100 a month if the miners work steady.

Chairman WALSH. Who pays them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. The miners pay them.

Chairman WALSH. How is the money collected to pay them? Is it taken out of their wages?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes. The mining laws state specifically how they shall be paid.

Chairman WALSH. How are they paid at your mine?

Mr. SNODGRASS. They are paid by deducting a certain amount from each ton of coal mined. They run a coal check, the same as a coal miner. They credit themselves with a certain tonnage each day to make their wages. That tonnage is deducted from the tonnage of the miners who send out the coal. There is no other way to do it and comply with the law. The law says that they shall do it in that manner, and that is the way they are being paid.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever had a checkweighman in that place before?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did I understand you to say you never had a checkweighman before?

Mr. SNODGRASS. We never had a checkweighman before.

Chairman WALSH. Have these checkweighman worked steadily ever since the request was made upon you to appoint them?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yes; they have worked all the time.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever make a suggestion to the men that they get a check weighman?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Well, do they seem to want a checkweighman?

Mr. SNODGRASS. Well, it is hard to say. There are some of them whom I talked to, since the checkweighmen were put on, who state they would rather get along without one; but I don't know about the majority. I have not talked with the majority, but I think they are very well satisfied the way the thing is.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think it makes for better satisfaction among the men to have a checkweighman?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I believe in the long run they would be better satisfied.

Chairman WALSH. What have you observed with respect to the results of the checkweighman? Do they seem to get more tonnage—more weight or not?

Mr. SNODGRASS. No; it would be impossible for there to be any difference at all. They were getting what they sent out before, and they are getting that now. There is no difference. I have seen nobody who thought there was any difference in their weights.

Chairman WALSH. You say you saw nobody, what?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I say I have talked to nobody who thought there was any difference in the weights since the checkweighman went on. They seem to think they have got the same weights now as they always got from the companies.

Chairman WALSH. Has there been any other change at your mine except the installation of a checkweighman?

Mr. SNODGRASS. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. Thank you.

Mr. Gove, I understand those witnesses are not here, and I think you had something to put in. May we not utilize this time?

Mr. GOVE. Very good.

TESTIMONY OF MR. F. E. GOVE

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Gove, I believe there were certain documents that Mr. Osgood said he would have you present. One of them, I recall was—well, maybe I will not try to recall them. Just indicate what you have, and we will put them in the record.

Mr. GOVE. The commission asked Mr. Osgood to produce here, or have me state, the rental at the Delagua saloon. For many years the saloon at that point—and, by the way, there are two instead of one, as he stated—has been based upon 20 cents per man for the men employed at that mine. Just before—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Well, analyze that, will you please, Mr. Gove. Just tell us—

Mr. GOVE (interrupting). If there were 500 men employed at the mine, the saloon rental would be $100. That varied at different mines in times gone by. It has run from 20 to 30 cents per man in a small mine. The rental was based upon 30 cents per capita allowance. There has been a good deal of criticism of that method, although it has always been in vogue, I think, in the State. And, from time to time, in recent years the different operators have changed that and put the saloon rental upon a flat basis. Then rental at the Delagua saloon from this time forward, and, in fact, the change was contemplated more than a year ago, will be upon that basis—$100 per month.

The commission asked that Mr. Osgood cause to be prepared a statement of the wage scale at the Victor Co. camps; and I have here a typewritten list of that character. It gives the daily wage of all the the company men—timber men, track layers, trappers, trip riders, firers, etc. Those wages run from $1.32 a day to $4.60 a day, the $1.32 being the trapper boy.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And who is the $4.60?

Mr. GOVE. The $4.60 is the machinist. This statement also gives the men who worked eight hours and those who worked nine hours. In addition to that the price paid for mining coal appears, ad at the different Victor Co. mines that price runs from 55 to 95 cents per ton. In addition to this at two of the mines a bonus for increasing the lump produced by the miners—a bonus of 1 cent for every per cent increase in the lump.

I think the chairman asked whether a record of any kind was kept of the names and family relationship of men who applied for work. Mr. Osgood stated there was not, so far as he knew. Well, there is and always has been.

He was asked—I think I corrected him at that time, and a request was made that sample pages of such record be produced here. The record is not kept exactly as I thought it was, but I have here a page or two from the record during the year 1911. It shows the date of employment, the name of the employee, his check number, age, nationality, married or single, and then a column with respect to his family and where they live. If you care, I will read just a few to show you how they run?

Chairman WALSH. Very well.

Mr. GOVE. Here were men employed on the 3d and 4th days of August, 1911. On the 3d of August at that mine seven men applied for work. They were given their check number. One was 26 years old, one 38, and one 53; a Greek, an Austrian, a Mexican, a Mexican, an American, a Mexican, a Mexican. Three were married and three were single; one had a wife in Greece, one a wife and two children in the old country—that was the Austrian—one a wife in Mexico and one 10 children in Mexico.

On the next day there were some 10 or 15 employed. Most of them are between 22 and 30 years of age; four or five Slavs, two Montenegrins, two Italians, and three Greeks; about one-half were married and half single; one has a child in Delagua, one a child in the old country, one 2 children at Delagua, one 2 children and a family in the old country, and that is the general character of those two pages.

The next is two pages from the 1913 record. Now, it so happens that during that time there were only two or three men employed each day and the character of them is about the same; young men for the most part; one a Jap, an Austrian, a Mxican, a Slav, Italian, Austrian, Italian, Mexican, Greek, Mexican, Greek, Greek, Mexican, Mexican, Jap, Italian, Italian.

Chairman WALSH. Just offer that, will you please, Mr. Gove.

(See Gove Exhibit No. 3.)

Now, do you also have a record of men that were discharged?

Mr. GOVE. This is the only record we have, and does not show that.

I will say this, in 1914 a new book was started, a more substantial affair, a great, big, bound volume. These other records were kept in little informal books; but in 1914 this book was started, and it does show—well, I see I am wrong about that. My impression was that in the new record we had a column in it showing when the men were employed and when discharged; but it does not appear here. Either my recollection is wrong or they have omitted, in copying, that column. This is the 1914 record.

(See Gove Exhibit No. 4.)

Chairman WALSH. They have no further record of what men were discharged or what the discharge was for?

Mr. GOVE. No. I suppose the pay-roll record would show when they were discharged.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; but not the cause of the discharge?

Mr. GOVE. Not that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Now, what else have you there, Mr. Gove?

Mr. GOVE. Mr. Osgood was asked whether there were any written orders sent to the superintendents of the mines with respect to law enforcement and efforts to prevent accidents and things of that kind, and I think he said not as far as he knew. I have been to Mr. Murray's files, and Mr. Murray is the general manager of the company, and I find that scarcely a day passes that he does not write a letter or circular of some character to the superintendents, and I have selected here, for a period of a few months prior to the strike and for a few months subsequent to its inauguration, a few letters of that character—I started in February, 1913, and it runs down practically to date.

Chairman WALSH. Well, just submit those, will you please, Mr. Gove?
(See Gove Exhibit No. 5.)

Mr. GOVE (continuing). And in one of those circular letters Mr. Murray referred to the superintendents a pamphlet or book which he was sending them, and asked that they be widely distributed among the men in the camp. He got this up himself. It is marked on the outside, "Suggestions as to how to avoid accidents to employees of the Victor-American Fuel Co." It is printed in a half a dozen different languages and has different headings in it. This is the English, and there are a number of rules for miners; a page for drivers, a number for trackmen, timbermen, trappers, and so forth.

Chairman WALSH. When was that issued?

Mr. GOVE. The letter transmitting it would show. There is no date here at all.

Chairman WALSH. Have you the letter transmitting it?

Mr. GOVE. Yes; here it is [referring to Exhibit No. 5].

(Booklet entitled "Suggestions as to How to Avoid Accidents to Our Employees," issued by the Victor-American Fuel Co., in six different languages, was submitted in printed form.)

Chairman WALSH. Returning for a moment to that saloon proposition: You say hereafter the rent will be $100 a month flat. Has the order been made?

Mr. GOVE. The order has never been made, because the decision was made shortly prior to the strike, and we have had no saloon since.

Chairman WALSH. Now, there is an amendment to the State constitution prohibiting the sale of liquor on and after a certain date in Colorado?

Mr. GOVE. That goes into effect, I think, the 1st of January, 1916; and there is a dispute as to whether it requires legislation to make it effective.

Chairman WALSH. What is the position of the company?

Mr. GOVE. The companies want to get rid of these saloons and always have been. They would be very glad if they could be wiped out.

Chairman WALSH. What is there to prevent them from closing the saloons in their own camp, or what is their policy with regard to it?

Mr. GOVE. Mr. Murray has tried a number of experiments in regard to his saloons. He has closed them entirely, with the result that then the men drift into Trinidad and never come back, or if they come back it is three or four days later. He has enforced a nontreating rule, which he found to be somewhat effective he thought, but it is a difficult thing to determine. He at one time tried cutting out all whiskey and strong drinks and confine the men to beer and wine, without any appreciable effect.

Chairman WALSH. Now, is there any other document there that we asked you to submit?

Mr. GOVE. I think nothing.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Gove, will you explain why the men on the—I notice the machinists, blacksmiths, carpenters, engineers, etc., are marked nine hours on the list, as against eight for the men in the mines.

Mr. GOVE. The eight-hour law in this State is applicable only to underground men.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Oh, I thought a later amendment made it applicable to all.

Mr. GOVE. No, sir; just underground.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Just underground?

Mr. GOVE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Briefly, what have been your duties with relation to the strike as attorney for the Victor-American Fuel Co., Mr. Gove?

Mr. GOVE. I am a member of the firm which has acted for many years as counsel for the Victor Fuel Co. Since this strike started my associate has been attending to his legitimate business and I have rather drifted into this strike matter, and have done very little else for the last year.

Chairman WALSH. Please state whether the company you represent has taken an active part in politics in the district where its mines are situated.

Mr. GOVE. It has not. Now, understand me about that; the people in Denver, the head officials of the company, have striven to keep out of politics. They have tried to keep their men out of politics, but it is utterly impossible; and I am not sure but what it is perfectly unfair to ask the men around these mining camps to give up their rights of citizenship and never mention politics in the local camps.

Chairman WALSH. Does your company contribute any money to either political party?

Mr. GOVE. It does not.

Chairman WALSH. Do they contribute any money, to your knowledge, to the election of any individuals in the districts in which their mining camps are located?

Mr. GOVE. It does not, to my knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Does any other company, so far as you know?

Mr. GOVE. No; not so far as I know.

Chairman WALSH. Please state what part you have taken personally in supervising the publicity work for your company or for the operators generally.

Mr. GOVE. When we found that the newspapers and public press generally were printing what to us was most outrageous stuff we undertook to counteract that to some extent. The first effort at publicity was some time after this strike started. I wrote a statement, which we could not get the newspapers to print unless we paid them for it. That statement was printed in a number of papers in this State and paid for.

Chairman WALSH. Printed as an advertisement?

Mr. GOVE. Printed as an advertisement, and so labeled.

Chairman WALSH. Will you submit that, please, into the record?

Mr. GOVE. There is no date on this, but it was—I venture to say it was early in October.

Chairman WALSH. October, 1913?

Mr. GOVE. October, 1913. It was a statement of the position taken by the operators.

Chairman WALSH. You wrote that, did you?

Mr. GOVE. I wrote that myself.

(The newspaper clipping here referred to, entitled "Advertisement—a statement of the coal-strike situation," was submitted in printed form.)

Mr. GOVE. Some time later, and it must have been after October 15, about that time, another statement was prepared, and I wrote that myself, with the exception of the tabulated portion of it. The gist of it—the point in it is to show a long list of acts of violence committed invariably, as we insist, by the strikers.

Chairman WALSH. Were those incidents referred to in the statement of Mr. Osgood and in the statement of Mr. Welborn?

Mr. GOVE. Not one-half of them.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think they are all contained up to that time in that statement you have there?

Mr. GOVE. Well, yes.

Chairman WALSH. Please submit that, Mr. Gove.

Mr. GOVE. This gives the names of the outside agitators that were at that time conducting this strike—a list of a dozen or 15 from other States.

(The newspaper clipping here referred to, also entitled "Advertisement—a statement of the coal-strike situation," was submitted in printed form.)

I hold in my hand another advertisement. The Pueblo-Star-Journal had heard of a man by the name of Bettis running a small mine near Canon City who had signed up with the union and had some trouble and quit—had a strike. The editor of that paper wrote Mr. Bettis a letter asking him a number of questions as to the exact effect of his having signed up on his operations. He replied to the editor. We got hold of that correspondence, although it did not originate at all with the operators, and it was of such a character that we thought the public ought to know about that, and this contains that correspondence—questions and answers by that operator of his experience under the domination of the union.

Chairman WALSH. Those were advertisements, were they?

Mr. GOVE. So marked and paid for.

(The newspaper clipping here referred to, entitled "Advertisement—Recognition of the United Mine Workers of America handicaps both operators and miners," from the Alamosa Courier, December 20, 1913, was submitted in printed form.)

Now, this advertisement is simply the letter of the governor to the operators and the three miners who conferred in the governor's office at the time Secretary Wilson was here. It is the governor's letter to the operators and miners and the response of the operators accepting the governor's proposition for a settlement of the difficulty.

(The newspaper clipping here referred to, entitled "Advertisement—Official correspondence on strike situation," from the Glenwood Post, December 6, 1913, was submitted in printed form.)

A great deal of talk and publicity has been given about the so-called starvation wages received in this State, and it was rather irritating to the operators, and we examined into and found out the facts, and after an infinite amount of statistical work on the part of the auditors of the company we advertised here "The starvation wages of coal miners," giving a complete, perfect, unquestioned copy of the pay roll of several mines. They show for themselves what they are—the wages for certain months at different times before and after the strike started.

(The clipping here referred to, entitled "Advertisement—Starvation wages of coal miners," from Colorado Springs newspaper, dated October 26, 1913.)

Commissioner LENNON. Does it indicate where two men worked together in taking out coal? Does it indicate what each man got?

Mr. GOVE. There is nothing in these statements to indicate whether—yes; I am mistaken about that; that point was covered. Where two men worked together the pay roll shows exactly the receipts of each one, and as a matter of practice two men always worked together and are paid separately.

Those figures were disputed and denied to such an extent that we requested Gov. Ammons to appoint an auditing committee to see whether they were correct or not. He picked out three public accountants here, and they spent approximately a week verifying them, and, so far as those notices are concerned, they found about three errors in all of them against the operators.

The strike leaders had a long advertisement in some of the papers that all they asked was the enforcement of State laws. This advertisement on the part of the operators showed that they had already formally in writing agreed to consent to their demand if their advertisement were true. That is in the form of a letter to the governor.

Chairman WALSH. Did you dictate all of those advertisements, Mr. Gove?

Mr. GOVE. I had nothing—oh, yes; I will say that I prepared those advertisements, although the material, as in the Pueblo instance, was not prepared by me.

Chairman WALSH. You were doing that on behalf of all of the operators?

Mr. GOVE. Yes; we were all in together. All meeting together.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have anything further to do with the publicity?

Mr. GOVE. No.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as to the publication of these bulletins by Mr. Lee, what, if anything, did you have to do with those?

Mr. GOVE. Absolutely nothing.

Chairman WALSH. That was solely the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and in so far as it relates to your company it is a donation from the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. GOVE. Yes, sir; so far as I know.

Chairman WALSH. You know nothing about the employment of Mr. Lee, or his compensation?

Mr. GOVE. No. I did not know he was here until he was on the ground.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, Mr. Gove.

Mr. GOVE. Wait a minute, please. Some one has handed me a note. My attention is called to the testimony of Mr. Osgood as to the eight-hour day. I think that would be cleared up from the statement I have handed in.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, Mr. Gove.

Mr. GOVE. Mr. Osgood, if the commission will permit me, had in his hand a typewritten statement taken from the State coal mine inspector's records, showing the number of men employed and the tonnage of the State for a long period of time. The same tabulation can be obtained from your own clerks and probably will be; but if you care to have it, I will be glad to put it in.

Chairman WALSH. Please offer it.

Mr. GOVE. Here it is, with the other articles referred to.

(See Gove Exhibit No. 6.)

(The witness also submitted in printed form newspaper article entitled "Advertisement—Starvation wages of coal miners," from the Daily News, October 25, 1913, and Pueblo Star-Journal, October 31, 1913; also article entitled "Advertisement—Miners' chief demands based on Sate laws," from the La Junta Democrat, November 17, 1913.)

Mr. WALSH, I suggested yesterday to Mr. West that the mental attitude of the operators during at least one period of this violence can be well obtained, if you care to have it, from a series of telegrams that I wrote at that time.

Chairman WALSH. To whom were the telegrams directed?

Mr. GOVE. They were directed to a friend in Washington, who had asked me to keep him advised. I suspected that those telegrams were going to official sources.

Chairman WALSH. Would you be kind enough to let Mr. Luke Grant, who is the gentleman that went over that correspondence with the mine workers yesterday, have that correspondence, and he will go over it, as far as it has bearing on this strike, and indicate to you that which he thinks ought to go into the record?

Mr. GOVE. I will be glad to do so.

Chairman WALSH. And put it in in that form?

Mr. GOVE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Grant will go over that correspondence. That is all; thank you, Mr. Gove.

(See Gove Exhibit No. 7.)

Chairman WALSH. John Sanders.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN SANDERS.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. SANDERS. John Sanders.

Chairman WALSH. How old are you?

Mr. SANDERS. Twenty-six.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Mr. SANDERS. Morley, Colo.

Chairman WALSH. Are you married or single?

Mr. SANDERS. Married.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any children?

Mr. SANDERS. One.

Chairman WALSH. How old?

Mr. SANDERS. The child is 14 months old.

Chairman WALSH. You are a native of what country, Mr. Sanders?

Mr. SANDERS. I was born in the United States.

Chairman WALSH. Whereabouts?

Mr. SANDERS. Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a coal miner?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Was your father a coal miner?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where was he a miner?

Mr. SANDERS. In Germany; also in this State.

Chairman WALSH. Did he mine in this country?

Mr. SANDERS. In Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. Did he ever belong to the miners' union?

Mr. SANDERS. He always did.

Chairman WALSH. Where have you worked in coal mines?

Mr. SANDERS. I have worked in coal mines in Arkansas, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, and New Mexico.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever been a member of the United Mine Workers?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. When did you join that organization?

Mr. SANDERS. I joined the organization when I was 13½ years old.

Chairman WALSH. What was your business then?

Mr. SANDERS. Trapping—I started trapping in the mines.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you remain a member of the organization?

Mr. SANDERS. I remained a member of the organization seven years.

Chairman WALSH. In what States have you worked under union conditions?

Mr. SANDERS. Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Kansas.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go out on a strike when the strike was called, September 1, 1913?

Mr. SANDERS. On the 23d.

Chairman WALSH. On the 23d of September, 1913, did you go out on a strike?

Mr. SANDERS. I sure did.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay out?

Mr. SANDERS. I stayed out four months, up to a day.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you go out on a strike?

Mr. SANDERS. Just for the simple reason they had us all scared to death.

Chairman WALSH. Who had you all scared to death?

Mr. SANDERS. The people that was talking about the strike—some fellows that wanted them to go out on a strike.

Chairman WALSH. Who were the people? Name them.

Mr. SANDERS. Some of them were the Mackoways and Jack Mott, president of the Starkville Local.

Chairman WALSH. Anyone else?

Mr. SANDERS. Some of the Park boys, Parker, and George Weatherbee.

Chairman WALSH. What did they say to you?

Mr. SANDERS. They said, if we don't want to go out on a strike that day, we will be forced out in a little short time.

Chairman WALSH. What else did they say to you, if anything?

Mr. SANDERS. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. How many of them said that to you?

Mr. SANDERS. I can't remember, ever so many.

Chairman WALSH. These men you talked to, where they men that worked in the mine?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you a member of the United Mine Workers on the 23d of September, 1913?

Mr. SANDERS. I was not.

Chairman WALSH. How long since you have been a member?

Mr. SANDERS. Of the United Mine Workers of America?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. How long had you been a member before that time? You told me you started as a boy as a trapper?

Mr. SANDERS. I was, up until I was 20, a member of the United Mine Workers of America.

Chairman WALSH. How old are you now?

Mr. SANDERS. Twenty-six.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you quit the United Mine Workers?

Mr. SANDERS. For the simple reason I didn't think I got a square deal from them.

Chairman WALSH. In what respect?

Mr. SANDERS. Because they didn't treat me—I didn't think I got treated the way I ought to be treated; they showed too much partiality.

Chairman WALSH. To whom?

Mr. SANDERS. To the men.

Chairman WALSH. In what way, Mr. Sanders, can they show partiality?

Mr. SANDERS. I will tell you the reason. There is people who can talk pretty good English, and educated, and those they do what is right with them, but foreign people that is not educated and can't talk, they wont do a thing for them.

Chairman WALSH. In what way can they help them and in what way can they hurt them—the union?

Mr. SANDERS. The condition of the mine, when a man works for so much, and he has done so much work in the mine, the boss may come around and not pay him what he thinks is right. If he is a foreigner and he complains to the boss, why, he will say "All right," and he won't do anything, but let it pass away without anything being done about it.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you work in Arkansas?

Mr. SANDERS. I worked in Arkansas for four years.

Chairman WALSH. At what place did you work?

Mr. SANDERS. I worked in Jenny Lind, Ark.

Chairman WALSH. Was it a union mine?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you belong to the union when you worked there?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever work at Jimstown?

Mr. SANDERS. Where?

Chairman WALSH. At Clarksville, in Arkansas?

Mr. SANDERS. I never did.

Chairman WALSH. How old are you now?

Mr. SANDERS. Twenty-six years old now.

Chairman WALSH. How old were you when you left Arkansas?

Mr. SANDERS. About 20.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you go after you left Arkansas?

Mr. SANDERS. I went to Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. To what place?

Mr. SANDERS. Berwind, at Tabasco, first of all.

Chairman WALSH. So the last place you worked under union conditions was in Arkansas?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How do coal miners' wages in Colorado compare with those paid in Arkansas?

Mr. SANDERS. I always got better wages in Colorado than any other State of the Union.

Chairman WALSH. Better in Colorado than in Arkansas, Kansas, Pennsylvania, or any other district in which you worked?

Mr. SANDERS. I sure did.

Chairman WALSH. Are you in favor of checkweighmen for miners?

Mr. SANDERS. I haven't got any objections.

Chairman WALSH. Do you want them, or do you not want them?

Mr. SANDERS. I am getting as fair weight without checkweighmen as I think I would with checkweighmen.

Chairman WALSH. Have you noticed any difference in earnings when you had a checkweighman and when you did not have a checkweighman?

Mr. SANDERS. I never did; no.

Chairman WALSH. How many hours a day do you work?

Mr. SANDERS. Eight hours a day.

Chairman WALSH. Would you be satisfied to work longer hours if you were permitted to do so by law?

Mr. SANDERS. Why, I don't know; I think eight hours will satisfy me in a coal mine.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go to the last election?

Mr. SANDERS. I sure did.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have anyone talk to you before you voted, or undertake to influence you in any way as to how you should vote?

Mr. SANDERS. I never spoke to anybody.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you vote?

Mr. SANDERS. In Morley, Colo.

Chairman WALSH. Was there a question submitted there, as to whether or not workmen should be relieved of the assumption of risk for their own injury or death?

Mr. SANDERS. Why, I never heard of any.

Chairman WALSH. You never heard of any?

Mr. SANDERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any meeting held in the place where you were located? Any political meetings?

Mr. SANDERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any discussion—do you know whether they voted on what is called the initiative and referendum in this State?

Mr. SANDERS. I don't understand a word of it; I don't understand the meaning.

Chairman WALSH. When you went on strike, where did you go?

Mr. SANDERS. I first went to Trinidad and rented a house there.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay there?

Mr. SANDERS. Two weeks.

Chairman WALSH. Then where did you go?

Mr. SANDERS. To the Starkville tents.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay in the tents?

Mr. SANDERS. Three months and two weeks.

Chairman WALSH. What strike benefits did you receive?

Mr. SANDERS. Three dollars for myself, $1 for my wife, and 50 cents for my child.

Chairman WALSH. What were the circumstances under which you returned to work in four months?

Mr. SANDERS. I didn't think it was enough to keep me in living at $4.50 a week.

Chairman WALSH. What was the reason you went back; give us all the reasons why you went back.

Mr. SANDERS. One reason I went back was because I didn't get treated right in the tents, and the second reason was because I didn't get enough money, and for the third reason I didn't think there was anything but a graft to it, and I went back to work.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any person in the tent colony that made an effort to prevent your going back to work?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Who?

Mr. SANDERS. They didn't me; they told me I better stay out; but they told my wife, when I went to Morley to look for work—they told my wife that if she leaves me, I am a scab, and they used some other dirty names, and they tell her if she not live with me, they give her a fair home and give her all the money she wants and she don't have to work the rest of her life. The union offered that, some that came from town.

Chairman WALSH. What were their names?

Mr. SANDERS. I can't tell you; I did not ask her.

Chairman WALSH. She declined, of course, to do that; she refused?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir; she refused.

Chairman WALSH. Was there anything said to you by anyone about going back to work?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was it?

Mr. SANDERS. They told me if I go back to work they get me later on.

Chairman WALSH. Who said that?

Mr. SANDERS. Jack Mott, for one; Jim Mackoway, for another; and three or four others, whose names I don't remember.

Chairman WALSH. Those were the same men who talked to you about going out in the first instance?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir; the same men.

Chairman WALSH. You say you went out because you were threatened in the way you have described?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you were afraid to stay in?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Why were you not afraid to go back; what change in conditions had taken place?

Mr. SANDERS. The soldiers was in the camp at that time.

Chairman WALSH. You went back, then, because you thought you had the protection of the militia?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir; from the soldiers, if anything happened to me.

Chairman WALSH. Were you armed at any time, yourself?

Mr. SANDERS. I was in the tent colony; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of arms did you have?

Mr. SANDERS. I had a 30-30 rifle.

Chairman WALSH. What did you do with the rifle; did you have it during all the time you were in the tent colony?

Mr. SANDERS. No, sir; I did not.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you have it?

Mr. SANDERS. About three weeks.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you get the rifle?

Mr. SANDERS. I got it from Jack Mott, the president of the Morley local.

Chairman WALSH. What did he say to you when he gave it to you?

Mr. SANDERS. I just borrowed it to go out hunting.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you have it?

Mr. SANDERS. Three weeks.

Chairman WALSH. Had it been your intention to shoot any person with it, any of the officers or militia or mine guards?

Mr. SANDERS. I think I would, if they came to attack us.

Chairman WALSH. How many rifles were in the camp?

Mr. SANDERS. I think about seven or eight.

Chairman WALSH. How many men were in the tent?

Mr. SANDERS. I don't remember exactly; there were about 38 or 40—from 38 to 40 members.

Chairman WALSH. When you went back to the company, did you have any arms?

Mr. SANDERS. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any arms except this rifle you had for three weeks in the camp?

Mr. SANDERS. I did.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you get that?

Mr. SANDERS. I fetched that with me from Oklahoma

Chairman WALSH. What was it?

Mr. SANDERS. A .32 Smith & Wesson.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have that in the camp?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come to borrow this other rifle, then?

Commissioner BALLARD. The one he brought with him was a revolver.

Mr. SANDERS. The other was a pistol, and I also had a shotgun.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have the shotgun during the time you were in the tent colony?

Mr. SANDERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is all; thank you, Mr. Sanders.

Fred Sommers.

TESTIMONY OF MR. FRED SOMMERS.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, please?

Mr. SOMMERS. Sommers.

Chairman WALSH. What is your first name?

Mr. SOMMERS. Fred.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Mr. SOMMERS. Morley, Colo.

Chairman WALSH. What is your age?

Mr. SOMMERS. Thirty-seven.

Chairman WALSH. Are you married or single?

Mr. SOMMERS. Single.

Chairman WALSH. You are a native of what country?

Mr. SOMMERS. Gerinany.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived in this country?

Mr. SOMMERS. Since 1904.

Chairman WALSH. By whom are you employed at the present time?

Mr. SOMMERS. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been working for them?

Mr. SOMMERS. Since 1906.

Chairman WALSH. Did you work in any other camps in this country?

Mr. SOMMERS. I worked in Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. Whereabouts in Pennsylvania?

Mr. SOMMERS. In Luzerne County.

Chairman WALSH. Were you a member of the United Mine Workers of America there?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You were there from 1904 to 1906, were you?

Mr. SOMMERS. Along about that.

Chairman WALSH. What was the first mine you worked in in Colorado?

Mr. SOMMERS. The Midway.

Chairman WALSH. Have you worked in any other mines under union conditions except those in Pennsylvania?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go out on strike when the strike was called, September 23, 1913?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You have been working in the mines all the time?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did anyone solicit you or suggest to you to go out on a strike?

Mr. SOMMERS. I was questioned about what I was thinking about doing.

Chairman WALSH. Who asked you?

Mr. SOMMERS. Some of the boys around Morley.

Chairman WALSH. What mine were you working in at the time?

Mr. SOMMERS. At Morley.

Chairman WALSH. How many men were working there along with you?

Mr. SOMMERS. I expect along about 100, or something like that.

Chairman WALSH. How many went out on strike?

Mr. SOMMERS. The day the strike was called there was hardly any left.

Chairman WALSH. How many went out finally?

Mr. SOMMERS. I couldn't exactly tell.

Chairman WALSH. You say there wasn't hardly any left; how many were there? Some of them went out?

Mr. SOMMERS. Oh, yes; along about—it was along about 20 or 21 men, I guess.

Chairman WALSH. Who was it asked you to go out?

Mr. SOMMERS. Well, I was not exactly asked to go out; they questioned me what I was thinking about the whole thing.

Chairman WALSH. You were just questioned as to what you thought about it?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Who questioned you?

Mr. SOMMERS. McAvee.

Chairman WALSH. Who was McAvee?

Mr. SOMMERS. A miner working there.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know that he was a union man?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know that he was a union man before the strike?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long had he been there?

Mr. SOMMERS. He was raised down there; born down there.

Chairman WALSH. He was born and raised around there?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What did McAvee say about going on a strike?

Mr. SOMMERS. We had a convention about going on a strike. I sees him after he come back and he told me that he went on strike; told me he want to know what I was going to do about it.

Chairman WALSH. And what did you say?

Mr. SOMMERS. I told him I hadn't seen no reason to go out; was doing all right.

Chairman WALSH. Did anyone else speak to you about it?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did anyone threaten you or intimidate you?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Threaten you with violence?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Sir?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How do coal miners' wages in Colorado compare with those in Pennsylvania, where you worked?

Mr. SOMMERS. Well, they are better.

Chairman WALSH. You say better? Would you say how much more you earn here than in Pennsylvania?

Mr. SOMMERS. I got several statements.

Chairman WALSH. How is that?

Mr. SOMMERS. I got several statements in my pocket, if you wish.

Chairman WALSH. I would like you to submit those, please. When did you make these statements, Mr. Sommers?

(See Sommers exhibit.)

Mr. SOMMERS. Along about when the strike commenced—a little bit before and after, I think it is. There is a couple that ain't here. I could get that if you wanted it.

Chairman WALSH. How is that?

Mr. SOMMERS. There is a couple of them, I think, I lost.

Chairman WALSH. Of what you earned in Pennsylvania?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. These are just statements of what you earned here?

Mr. SOMMERS. In Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. In Colorado?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. These are the bills, or the statements, made by the company, showing your account with them?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. For wages and deductions?

Mr. SOMMERS. And pay.

Chairman WALSH. And the pay?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I see they run along this way: Drafts, $3. What does that mean?

Mr. SOMMERS. I think that is what they call a two weeks' pay. I think they call that a draft.

Chairman WALSH. What was the $3 deducted for?

Mr. SOMMERS. Oh, it is probably a man needs powder or some such things.

Chairman WALSH. I see. But it says drafts, $3; hospital, $5; smithing, 50 cents; board, $27; bath, 50 cents. They deduct that from your wages? What was the hospital fund here? Why should there be $5 deducted? I don't understand that.

Mr. SOMMERS. That is probably a statement rendered. I made a little drawing on my pay.

Chairman WALSH. You made a little drawing—got a little money in advance?

Mr. SOMMERS. I got a little money at the time and that is probably what it is on that statement.

Chairman WALSH. There is a hospital fee of $5. Do you know what that was?

Mr. SOMMERS. No; that must be a mistake.

Chairman WALSH. That must be an error, you think?

Mr. SOMMERS. Put in the wrong place.

Chairman WALSH. Would you allow these to be put in here?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That must be a mistake of $5?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes; that is a mistake.

Chairman WALSH. How much did you actually pay for hospital fees?

Mr. SOMMERS. I believe 50 cents.

Chairman WALSH. Is that what you usually pay?

Mr. SOMMERS. I believe it is a dollar; I never looked.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether it is a dollar or 50 cents a month?

Mr. SOMMERS. I never—I think it is a dollar a month.

Chairman WALSH. Are you in favor of checkweighmen for miners?

Mr. SOMMERS. Well, it seems like the superintendent is coming around several different times, and if they wanted a checkweighman they could have one.

Chairman WALSH. No; but I am asking you, are you in favor of having a checkweighman?

Mr. SOMMERS. If the majority of the men, I would probably be along with them for a checkweighman.

Chairman WALSH. If a majority of the men would want one, you would go with them?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Why do you want a checkweighman?

Mr. SOMMERS. It would suit everybody, I think.

Chairman WALSH. That is, if there was a checkweighman everybody would be satisfied that their coal was properly weighed?

Mr. SOMMERS. That everybody would have no kick coming that he would not get the right thing.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe as a part of your experience that you got paid for all the coal that you mined?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Whether they had a checkweighman or not?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes; been several times in the weighing office watching it and always think I get the right thing.

Chairman WALSH. Why do you not belong to the union?

Mr. SOMMERS. Well, I didn't think that I had any reason in giving money, so I thought I didn't like to pay dues every month.

Chairman WALSH. You felt satisfied with the conditions that you were in and you didn't want to pay the dues?

Mr. SOMMERS. No; to help somebody else out.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any other reason?

Mr. SOMMERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Just simply that you were satisfied with your conditions and you did not want to pay the dues?

Mr. SOMMERS. I didn't want to throw no money away.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a voter in this country; are you a naturalized citizen?

Mr. SOMMERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever vote here?

Mr. SOMMERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Have you your first papers?

Mr. SOMMERS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you intend to become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. SOMMERS. I do now. I intended to go back to Germany first, only I didn't go.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live at the present time?

Mr. SOMMERS. At Morley.

Chairman WALSH. That is all.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you believe wages and hours and conditions of miners in Colorado could have been as good as they are if there never had been any unions in the United States?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes, sir; I believe they would.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you think the unions have not had anything to do with bettering the conditions of the miners?

Mr. SOMMERS. No, sir; I don't think they have. I think they make it worse sometimes.

Commissioner LENNON. All right.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Will you explain what this 50 cents a month for bath is for? Do they charge you 50 cents a month for bath?

Mr. SOMMERS. Yes; they got a washhouse there, they got some hot and cold water; regular bathhouse.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Every workman has to pay 50 cents a month?

Mr. SOMMERS. If he wants to. He don't have to if he don't want to go in the washhouse. He can go home or go wherever he pleases.

Chairman WALSH. That is all.

TESTIMONY OF JUDGE BEN B. LINDSEY.

Chairman WALSH. Please give us your name.

Judge LINDSEY. Ben B. Lindsey.

Chairman WALSH. And your business?

Judge LINDSEY. Judge of the juvenile court, Denver.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you resided in Denver?

Judge LINDSEY. Since 1880, I think, or 1881.

Chairman WALSH. I will get you to state whether or not you made any effort to bring about a settlement of the difficulty in the coal fields of Colorado.

Judge LINDSEY. I would like to ask, before I proceed, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for your indulgence, because I have been in bed with grip for about two days and suffering with some fever now, so if I do not make myself heard you will understand it is because of that difficulty. I am here under difficulty this morning. I will try to make myself heard.

I did make some effort as a citizen of this State, and in a measure as representing a good many other citizens, some time in the month of May, to do what I could to bring about an arbitration of this difficulty and a settlement as soon as possible.

On the 15th of May, in this city, following a number of meetings around the city, which meetings were called, in some instances, by sympathizers with the strikers, in other instances by those whose sympathies were against the strikers. Following those meetings there was considerable feeling here in Denver; I should say a feeling that approached real bitterness, if not hatred. That, I think, in a large measure developed somewhat into class hatred. You would feel it in the atmosphere, I might say. And growing out of these meetings, and this agitation following the Ludlow disaster, a public meeting was called at the statehouse here for the 15th of May. I had nothing to do with the calling of that meeting; knew nothing about it until it was brought to my attention by a number of gentlemen and one or two women who had charge of it.

I think the meeting was called under the auspices of the Women's Peace League, if I recall correctly. The meeting was held in the house chamber of the statehouse, as I recall it, or in the senate chamber; at least, one or the other of these rooms. It was very largely attended, and a great deal of feeling felt in what I would call the atmosphere of such a meeting. At that meeting there were resolutions passed. A copy of these resolutions I hold in my hand. I would like to file them.

Chairman WALSH. Just submit them.

(See Lindsey Exhibit No. 1.)

Judge LINDSEY. And would like to read one sentence.

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Judge LINDSEY (reading):

"In order that the facts and arguments which have led us to this conclusion may be properly presented to the President, we are resolved to appoint a committee of representative citizens of this State and proceed to Washington and request an audience. And furthermore invite representatives of the miners to appoint a committee of women who have personal knowledge of the horrors of the recent civil war to accompany our committee to interview the President, in order that he might be informed at first hand of the conditions against which this meeting protests."

These resolutions were passed. In substance they call on the people to urge that the Federal troops remain in Colorado; that a board of arbitration or committee of arbitration or mediation be appointed, or some sort of conciliation.

A day or two afterwards Mr. William Chenery, editorial writer of the Rocky Mountain News, with, I think, Mr. Randolph Walker; Mr. Newell, I think, of the Denver Express, and one or two other gentlemen at the time came to me with these resolutions. One of them, I forget which one it was, but I think it was Mr. Chenery, said that he had drawn or had assisted in the drawing of these resolutions, and that no committee had been appointed at this meeting; that they had certain reasons which they did not care to express as to why they did not care to have the committee appointed that night, for they were not permitted to know who they could get to serve; that they wanted to get some one who could get a hearing at the Capital, some one who was fairly well known in the Nation. And they wanted to create public sentiment in favor of arbitration of this strike. And Mr. Chenery called my attention to the News having advocated this in its columns as the best way out. I protested to those gentlemen that I did not care to undertake this mission, that I was engaged that week in helping the Denver University in a campaign that I was very much interested in—while the head of the university and myself have never agreed politically, I have always favored the good work of that university and helped it on all occasions that I could. And I had that work planned for the week. My wife was also ill, and about the latter part of June or July I expected to be away for my summer work, and it was a time when I did not want to go. I told them that I thought much more could be done if they could get some of the women who had charge of this peace league work to go on this committee. They said that they had consulted with a number of them who were influential and whom they thought might have some influence, but most of them were unable to go. There were many difficulties in the way and they felt that I was in a position to present the matter to the President, possibly, although they were not certain at all of seeing Mr. Rockefeller in New York. I discussed the matter with a large number of friends—quite a number—some of whom I supposed sympathized on both sides. I was urged by a great number of people—in the discussions of a day or two in the reluctance that I had expressed in my desire to get some others to go—that I could do what perhaps others could not do. What was needed was some publicity for both sides, especially the miners' side, of this difficulty. And the bigger questions, not so much who fired the first shot, the militia or the miners at Ludlow, but the big industrial, economic, and political questions involved, that had shaken our State more or less at different times in its industrial history. These things it was insisted I was more or less familiar with, and because they claimed that I was better known in the East than some others that I ought to go. I am merely stating their urgent reasons.

Among the people who urged me to go was the son of the late justice, Robert W. Steel, a number of women here in the city, and finally after several days' urging I want to say I never went into anything with more reluctance, on account of personal difficulties at home and other matters that I had already undertaken.

Up to this time I had taken no part in this strike controversy. But after it had been presented to me by these good people as a duty, as perhaps an opportunity to acquaint the country with the difficulties out here, and possibly urge through the public sentiment, we might create with Mr. Rockefeller and his friends in the East to consent to arbitration, and I decided to go.

There was but very little time in which to get ready. I had but very little time that I could give to the study of the case, but I had followed the testimony in the newspapers. I had read Mr. Costigan's brief in part, some of his notes—he was one of the attorneys of the investigation—and I was assured I would be furnished with many affidavits taken at first hand by some of these ladies, I don't remember who; that I would be furnished with the testimony taken before the coroner's jury, and with the visits that I had made to the southern coal fields in the years past, visits to their hospitals, the industrial work, and other lines of work that I had personally visited and my general knowledge of these things that might be of assistance in making some presentation of the matter.

So we left Denver on the night of the 17th, I think it was, of May—Sunday evening the 17th. I carried with me certain testimony that was sworn to, and also testimony before the coroner's jury.

I would like briefly to refer to just a few lines in this testimony, and then ask permission to file it.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. We would like to have that filed, as we do not want any matter read, but just give a brief description.

(See Lindsey Exhibit No. 2.)

Judge LINDSEY. One or two things as to who set the tent colony on fire.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon asks that you state who accompanied you on that trip?

Judge LINDSEY. Oh, yes; I intended to state that. I wish you would kindly ask me those questions. I am rather suffering from the fever, and I can not keep myself as consecutive as I would like. With us were Mrs. Lee Champion, one of the women who had gone down into the strike district, who consented to act as a member of this committee. I was told that Mrs. Judge Robert Steel had also consented to go. She afterwards expressed her regrets that she could not go because of difficulties at home that kept her—at least, engagements. These gentlemen asked them if my wife would not also go and accompany us; that Mrs. Champion would go; and when Mrs. Steel at the last moment, when I was informed that she could not go—she came to the depot to see us off—why, I prevailed upon my wife to go. She was really not in any physical strength to go, but she did. So that the committee consisted of these two women and myself. We agreed—Mr. Chenery, of the News, Mr. Newell, Mr. Walker, Mr. Costigan, Mrs. Steel, and several others I do not now remember—I have the notes somewhere—and perhaps we were a committee that might under the circumstances, since no committee was appointed, fairly represent a large number of people in this city who responded to these resolutions and whose feeling and sentiment was that something of that kind should be done.

On the same train, but not in the same car at the time, was a committee of the miners representing the miners of Ludlow. One of these women was Mrs. Jolly. One was a Mrs. Thomas. Mrs. Pearl Jolly is her name. Mrs. Thomas—I don't recall her initials—and her two children and Mrs. Petrucci, the woman who had been a victim, or supposed victim, of this so-called massacre, who had lost her children. I don't recall that there were any other of the women among the miners. Those were three that I recall.

When we found that they were in the next car—I didn't know myself until I came to the train for certain that they were going to accompany us or we to accompany them. In fact, I remember saying that as they were alone, and it seemed to me that they were on the train, that we invite them during the evening, under an arrangement with the Pullman conductor, to come back in the same car; that these women seemed to have no man with them, no one to look after them, and they had these children along. And Mrs. Champion and my wife, after consultation with some of them, thought it would be better that we go together, as long as we were going to be on the same train two nights and a day.

All day the next day on the train, or practically all of it, I busied myself in going over this testimony. I had some 16 affidavits and perhaps more, but 16 I remember counting and making a note of. These 16 affidavits, with the brief of the attorneys, and Mr. Brewster's and Mr. Costigan's; some newspaper files; statements from, I think, Rev. William McDonald and Rev. Mr. Cook, and a statement from Mrs. Lee Champion and others. It occupied the greater part of my attention during the day. I made copious notes on these statements and marked some of the evidence and just a few lines from a few of these affidavits, as I filed them. I would like to read from the affidavit of Maria Chaves, in which she says along the line of the Ludlow disaster: "And we stayed in the cellar all day until the soldiers took us out, about 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon. They would come inside of the tents and take the best things and then set fire to the tents. I don't know how they set the fire, but I know that they set the tents on fire. I lost all my personal effects in this fire. I had $250 in the sewing machine that my husband's people had sent, and I lost all of that." This was signed and sworn to by Maria Chaves.

Mrs. Jolly personally knew a great many of these people, and I consulted with them from time to time as to the reliability of these people.

Affidavit of Mrs. Alcarita Pedregon. She swears, among other things: "I seen a militiaman come over there and look inside the tent and strike a match and set fire to the tent. I stayed in the tent until it was all burned up. There were 11 children and 2 women suffocated with the smoke where I was. I lost two children in this cave when the tent burned. I don't know where my husband was at this time. I looked up out of the hole and saw the soldier set fire to the tent with a match. I lost everything I had in this fire." This last with reference to the Ludlow disaster, as some object to calling it, I believe, massacre.

This is the affidavit of Mrs. Ed Tonner—just a few lines from this: "Mr. Snyder came along and he said, 'My oldest son Frank has half of his head blown off,' and he said, 'If your children won't lay down slap them'"—

Slap them, I think it should be, if I may correct it—
 "'slap them and make them lay down rather than have them killed,' he said, and he held out his two arms like that [indicating], and they were full of blood, and it seemed that after he left his tent that the machine guns turned loose all the more. My tent was so full of holes like it was like lace, pretty near. It could have been about 4 when little Frank got his head hurt, and a little while after this they tried to set the tents on fire. I kept bobbing my head up and down, and Mr. Filer said, 'For God's sake, keep your head down, or you will get it blown off.' About 6 o'clock they turned around and tore the tent between the two tents, and they set the broom on fire with coal oil, and they set the tent on fire, with me right underneath with my five little children; then Gusta Retlich, she helped me out with the children, grabbed them up, and then we run to a Mexican lady's tent farther down, and then Louie the Greek helped me; he helped me down into a hole and threw water in my face, as I was fainting, with all the children."

Next, an affidavit from Mrs. James Fyler. Among other things, she says: "And when he got to the tent colony Mrs. Dominsky and I were standing there—we were the only two that were right out in the crowd—and I walked over to my husband—he was looking for a pair of field glasses—and I asked him if he had saw my boy, and he told me 'No; he had not,' so then they just shot off one of the bombs and one of the machine guns on the D. & R. G. tracks; those were the first shots that were fired, and Louis waved his handkerchief at us and said, 'Good-by, I will never see you any more.' So then we made our escape to the pump station."

This is an affidavit of Ometomica Covadle, an Italian woman, apparently, who, among other things, says: "And the soldiers came up and tried to shoot inside where we were, and then came out of the pump, when they tried to shoot with the machine guns, and went into the arroyo. There was two dead men, and they jumped right on top of them. Couple of soldiers came out of the arroyo, and was going to kill both of us, and little boy raised up his hand and said, 'Don't shoot, for my mother's sake.'"

The next is an affidavit from Mrs. Ed Tonner, evidently a second affidavit. It seems this was a supplemental affidavit: "When Mr. Linderfelt came into camp with his auto load of ammunition I heard Mrs. Costa crying, and she began praying Santa Maria, and begging him not to kill her and her little children, and he replied to her, 'There is no use of you crying and carrying on, as we have orders to do this, and we are going to do it; no mercy on any of you.'"

Next is an affidavit of Mrs. Florida Padilla: "I came out of the tent for a minute to get something for the children to eat, and while I was out there they began shooting again, and a bullet came close to me, and then I went back into the hole. At sometime late in the afternoon they started to burn the tents. When the tents were first fired they did not burn my tent; later in the evening the soldiers came back to fire the rest of the tents and they heard my children crying, and they said there is a family in there, and they helped me out and took me and the children to the depot; while at the depot three Mexican guards got mad at the women and said that they ought to be burned in the tents."

Here is an affidavit furnished me among others, signed by George R. Churchill. He is speaking of this commission headed by Maj. Boughton. I do not care to read it at length, it is quite lengthy and rather prolix: "On Thursday they asked us a few questions. They asked us if we knew anything about the fighting"—

This is the commission composed of Maj. Boughton and Van Cise—
"about who started it. We told them we did not know anything about it."

Affidavit of Mrs. Marian Derr—this is not an affidavit, it is simply signed: "About 9 o'clock Monday morning, the 20th, I was washing my hair when my husband came in and said to me 'Come here quick to me, come here quick, I want to show you something.' He pointed up the C. & S. E. track to the left side of the steel bridge. I looked and saw two machine guns and saw men fixing breastsworks, and men all along the track with rifles. Two men on horseback came galloping down from the direction of the steel bridge in a very great hurry. They passed me and met a number of other men, I presumed, to get orders, then all turned and started back in the direction of the steel bridge. As they passed us one of them, a Mexican, shouted 'Good, we're off.' I ran across to warn my neighbors. I noticed several men on the ball ground. I had not noticed any excitement at the tent colony. I came right back home. Then the bombs went off, and the machine guns and rifles began. We immediately went to the cellar. We occasionally put our heads up out of the cellarway and watched.

"Shortly after the bombs went off we could see men with rifles, with mining caps on, as though they had come out of the mines, come across between the cars, from the direction of the military camp. During the day my husband and I stuck our heads up out of the cellar, and a fellow in uniform cursed my husband terribly. He pointed a gun at my husband and asked him if he was a son of a b—— and a red neck, and said if he was he would kill him. I pushed my husband back into the cellar and told the man we were not strikers but railroad people. He said, 'What in hell are you hiding for?' I told him we had to, on account of the shooting."

Here is the affidavit of Mrs. Maggie Dominiske, that was furnished me, speaking of the Ludlow trouble: "Tikas then asked"—

Speaking of the soldiers—

"if Maj. Hamrock was up at the military camp. The soldier said 'Yes.'"

It seems that the soldier had arrested some man—

"Tikas told the soldier he would like to speak to Maj. Hamrock. Then they went away, the spokesman saying in a mean manner, 'All right, we'll be back again.' We went back to Mrs. Jolly's house to get the pictures I was looking at when I went home, put them in an envelope, and have them all ready to send, when some one called, 'Look out for trouble, the militia is coming.' My children had just got out of bed, and were not all dressed. I ran out to see if the militia was coming. When I got out I met Mrs. Thomas who said, 'We had better take our children and go to the pump station, for I think there is going to be trouble.' I did not think myself that there would be, but I told her to take my children and if anything did happen they would be there. I then went over to where my husband was in front of the tent colony, when I saw Tikas running toward the colony waiving a white handkerchief, and when he was near the tent colony one bomb was fired."

Those as showing who fired the first shot, if they were reliable at all, and I am sure they were.

Now, I would like the privilege of reading this paragraph from the affidavit and testimony of William Snyder, the father of this little boy, because when I was in the East, while I made no such statements as the newspapers attributed to me, I took particular pains to call upon the Associated Press and tell them I did not, I have been misquoted and maligned about it. My contention was that the affidavit in regard to the militia as alleged in this testimony was just about as bad as the rather mixed-up and confused detail that was published.

Snyder says: "I myself, not being armed, stayed on the tent-colony ground to protect my family to the best of my ability. About 4.30 p. m. the thugs or militia right flanked our colony and shot through my tent and killed our boy, showing clearly that they did not stop to see whether there were any women or children on the colony ground or not. Just previous to the time the boy was shot he got out of the hole or cave, where my children were, to get his sister a drink of water; and as the firing had slackened the children had left the hole, being out of the hole from five to eight minutes, and stepped into the bedroom of my tent. The boy Frank was sitting in the chair with his sister on the floor between his knees, and he was in the act of stooping to kiss or caress his sister, when the bullet struck him above the temple on the right side and blew his brains out.

"I was standing near the front door of my tent and I heard the impact of the bullet striking the boy's head and the crack of the bullet as it exploded inside of his head. The boy was killed by an explosive bullet. I went to the boy to render what assistance I could, and while falling caught him in my arms, and in the act of letting him down to the floor two more bullets passed over me in the tent. Then I went to the hole where my family and children were, and seeing the boy in his death struggle went to him again; was in the act of washing his face when another bullet went over me. The firing became so heavy that I went to my family and stayed in the cave with them until they burned the tents. They fired this tent of mine by standing by the south-east corner with a piece of paper on fire in their hands, and as the tent was blazing they came in the tent. This I observed by looking out of the hole where we were located. As the tent was in flames, they opened the door and came in, and then my wife pleaded to save her children, telling them they had already killed one, and, for God's sake, to save the others. Whereupon this officer assisted Mrs. Snyder from the hole, and the other children.

By this time there were five or six of the militia or thugs in the tent and wanted to kill me. And I asked them to let me get my dead boy to the depot, and to which this officer consented, after cursing me, putting a gun to my head and threatened to kill me; and on leaving the tent with the corpse I laid him down outside the door and put on my coat, and I requested of some one to help me carry this boy to the depot, when I was told that I was big enough to carry him myself, and which I did, over my shoulder, and my 3½-year-old daughter in my arms; when George Titsworth, sr., who, to the best of my knowledge, set fire to the tent, threw a gun on me and said, 'You God damn dirty son of a bitch, I ought to kill you right here; you have fired as many shots as anybody,' and he touched my head, or nearly so, with his revolver and said, 'I will kill you.' My wife pleaded in behalf of her dead boy to let us get him to Trinidad, and this officer escorted us to the depot; but on passing Snodgrass store, at Ludlow, Linderfelt threw his flashlight in my face and wanted to know what 'God damn red-neck S. B.' they had here; when Mrs. Snyder says to Linderfelt, 'Please don't shoot him, they have killed one of my children already,' when Linderfelt says, 'It is a damned pity that all of you damned red-necked bitches were not killed.'

Chairman WALSH. Are those affidavits—

Judge LINDSEY. Most of the originals were in Washington and given to a stenographer to be copied, and some of them were returned to Mrs. Lee Champion.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to say I am afraid we will not have time to read them all, as we want to finish by to-morrow noon. Will you just give a description of them—for instance: "Affidavit of John Smith, covering so and so"?

Judge LINDSEY. I will not read them further. I want to say that the testimony given before the coroner's jury was given here of Mr. Hall, that he heard—

Chairman WALSH. Is that the coroner's jury at Ludlow?

Judge LINDSEY. Yes. If you have the testimony, it is unnecessary to read it.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; we have the testimony.

Judge LINDSEY. I do not care to say anything further than I read the testimony of Mr. Hall, in which he swears he heard the militia giving orders to blow up the tent colony—set fire to it. Mr. McDonald, the stenographer, that he heard a member of the militia order the tent colony should be burned. Mr. Snyder testified to the killing of the boy. Riley said that he saw the militia fire the tents.

Further, I have a letter from Mr. Hendrick saying that is a correct copy of the testimony; affidavit of Mary Petrucci, a woman whose children were burned up; affidavit of Mr. Harriman, the railroad man, who said the militiamen told him they were going to burn up the tent colony.

When we got to Chicago we were received at the depot by a committee from the Hull House. Miss Jane Addams had wired me that a delegation of women would receive the ladies and expected the party to go to the Hull House, and all others, of course; but especially the ladies. That she would have some of her friends there to hear the story of Mrs. Jolly and Mrs. Thomas. My wife became ill on the train and I had to go with her to the hospital. I do not recall talking to any newspaper man until later in the day, and I was somewhat surprised to find myself, in an early afternoon edition, saying some things which I did not say, which was our common experience in these matters. Some things were so confusing, no doubt—honestly confusing.

They had a meeting at Hull House. I got there late. These ladies told their story. They also had a meeting at the School of Philanthropy that is conducted by Prof. Graham Taylor, of The Chicago Commons, and other people of that type. These ladies there told their story. I made a brief address, called attention to the fact that the coal companies and other large corporations in Colorado had been notoriously lawless in their methods in this State, politically and industrially; and, in my judgment, that accounted for a good deal of the lawlessness—and there was lawlessness on both sides, of course.

We were supposed to get into Washington early Wednesday morning; we did not arrive until Wednesday afternoon, on account of sickness of one of our party. I had a very cordial letter from Mr. Tumulty to come to the White House, that the President would be very glad to see us. Mr. Tumulty, because of the delay, wrote me that the President had intended to give us the better part of the forenoon on Wednesday. We were to arrive in the morning, and he had set it aside for our convenience, to present this evidence and any statement we cared to make, also a proposition of settlement, which was the important thing. He said owing to the fact we were unable to arrive on time the President could not give us as much time the next day as he had arranged for on Wednesday, but he would give us such time as he could, and to be at the White House at 12 o'clock Thursday morning. That, I think, was May 19 or May 20.

Before I went to see the President I discussed this matter with a number of Congressmen. One or two of these Congressmen told me that Mr. Rockefeller had treated the President of the United States with contempt, that he had ignored him, that he had refused to listen to anything—that they thought he ought to listen to the peace proposal of the President that had been attempted in the November before, and they were rather indignant about the matter. They simply made that as their own statement of the matter.

I was advised to see Secretary Lane and argue with Commissioner Lane—or Secretary Lane—the right of the President to appoint an arbitration committee and the right of the President to compel both sides to consent to that committee investigating the matter and planning some mediation or settlement.

I went to the office of the Secretary of the Interior by engagement and arrangement with a Congressman, about half past 9, I think it was, the next morning—Thursday morning I think that was. And Mr. Lane first said that he would give me 15 minutes; that he was very busy. When we got into the conversation he gave me more than an hour. He was very much interested. Mr. Malone, who was formerly secretary to Gov. Shafroth, happened to be in Washington, and was one of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the State, and when I went to see the Secretary I brought Mr. Malone along. For the better part of an hour we argued with Secretary Lane the constitutional aspects of the situation, the legal right of the President to appoint an arbitration committee, the right of the Government to force the contending parties to consent to have it arbitrated. I understood that Secretary Lane would present this matter to a Cabinet meeting. I do not wish to say that Mr. Lane told me that. I have a copy of the newspaper here in which it is stated that there was a Cabinet meeting held later, after we had seen Mr. Lane, and he had presented the argument to the President that we had made.

I then returned to the hotel after the conference and argument with Mr. Lane and going into the constitutional question, the right of the President, about which they seemed to have some doubt. At 11.30 we went to the White House. The entire committee—delegation—went along. The committee—that improvised committee, you might say—that grew out of the circumstance that I have mentioned is the only committee that ever did anything or went anywhere in response to a resolution mentioned, and the committee from the miners, with these miners' wives, Mrs. Thomas's little children. The President very cordially received us, and while he said that 15 minutes was about all the time he could give he extended the time very generously. I do not know just how long we were there, but we were there for some time. He showed the greatest interest in the matter.

I do not care to go into the conversation I had with the President of the United States, but to say briefly that I told him that of course there were rights on both sides and that we deplored violence and deplored lawlessness, but we believed that he was the man who had it in his power at this time to bring about peace in our rather distracted State, that there was a great deal of bitterness between all kinds of people that ought not to be, and that in our judgment it was the sentiment of many people in this State—and we believed the majority of the people, and that was our belief—that this should be arbitrated, that he should appoint a board of arbitration, and that if the two contending parties did not consent to it that he should use whatever means he had under the law and the Constitution to compel them to consent. He doubted whether he had any such power, and he asked me to argue it before him. And I argued it, and in doing so I gave him as the reasons—I will state them as briefly as I can—that the governor of this State had confessed, in calling in the Federal troops, that the sovereignty of the State of Colorado had broken down, a government that was guaranteed us by the Constitution of the United States, a republican form of government, had ceased to exist. And that while there was no direct power in the Constitution to authorize a President to take measures that would force parties to agree to arbitration of a difficulty like this, that in my judgment there were necessarily implied powers. I referred to that fact and to some things President Lincoln had said as his attitude on that. I got this statement of President Lincoln's afterwards, and I would like just to read it here, because it is the substance of what I argued to President Wilson. President Lincoln, in a letter to Mr. Curtis, in his The Republican Party (Vol. I, p. 406) :

"I did understand, however, that my oath to preserve the Constitution to the best of my ability imposed on me the duty of preserving by every indispensable means that Government—that Nation—of which that Constitution was the organic law. Was it possible to lose the Nation and yet preserve the Constitution? By general law, life and limb must be protected; yet often a limb must be amputated to save a life, but a life is never wisely given to save a limb. I felt that measures otherwise unconstitutional might become lawful by becoming indispensable to the preservation of the Constitution through the preservation of the Nation. Right or wrong, I assume this ground, and now avow it."

I told the President that in order to preserve our larger constitutional rights out here, in order to bring about peace and good order in this State, that it did seem to me that for the reasons mentioned, and possibly some others I do not recall now, that he would, if the necessity arose, as President Lincoln pointed out here, be justified in compelling the coal operators to consent to this arbitration.

The President was very much interested in this presentation, and said so. He said that one difficulty was that the States themselves, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, seemed to be the judges of what was a republican form of government. I argued that by the confession of the governor of this State, that the legislature had been in session—but even if he did not have the confession from the governor, he had it from the legislature, with all the authority of the State, the representatives of the people of the State—they had been unable to preserve law and order in this State, and therefore had called on him as the President. Now, he, as President, could take such measures as he saw fit and as seemed to him indispensable and necessary to preserve peace and order and the bigger rights of the people under the Constitution. He said he would consider that. He said that some foreign ministers—I think, of the Italian and Austrian Governments—had protested to him that their citizens were not safe in the State of Colorado, and that apparently, from this confession of the governor and this act of the legislature, that, in my judgment, amounted to a confession that the sovereignty of the State was broken down and the rights of these foreign citizens could not be preserved.

The President said that presented a nice question; that he was going to look into that and these other matters, and they would be considered. He said: "Judge Lindsey, I think this is a very important question with reference to all the people, and I want you to know that myself and others connected with the administration have done and want to do all we can within our legal rights to bring about peace and order in Colorado." I told him that I believed our people were thoroughly convinced of that, and we appreciated his efforts.

We had a big meeting at Rifles Armory that night in Washington City. This meeting was arranged for by Mrs. Medill McCormick, a relative by marriage, I understand, of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr. I think—I thought the circumstances were very interesting as indicating to me one interesting thing in this struggle that was, in a measure, a class struggle, to have a relative of the Rockefellers—one of their class—to meet these women in Washington, at the depot, as Mrs. McCormick did, and arrange for that meeting that they might have a hearing. It was, to my mind, a significant incident that ought to and deserves to go into the records of this commission. Mrs. McCormick and the other ladies are representative women of the suffrage organization in Washington, and they gave them every opportunity to present their side of it.

At the meeting at the Rifles Armory there were eight or nine Congressmen on the platform—Congressman Kent, Congressman McDonald, Congressman Evans, Congressman Bryan, of Washington, and others. I was told that in the audience were ambassadors from foreign countries. I was told, though I am not certain, members of the President's family were there. We received a very cordial letter from the President's wife—I refer to it with considerable feeling at this time—expressing regrets, because, as I have understood since, of the illness that proved to be fatal—at least, expressing regrets through her secretary that she could not attend the meeting. I understand the ladies had invited her. It was an interesting meeting, in that there were not only present very wealthy people, foreign ambassadors, consuls, Republicans, Democrats, Progressives, Socialists, and anarchists, I was told. And it was certainly a most interesting meeting. The floors were crowded to the limits. It was difficult, as I recall, to get in to the platform. The air was electrified and vibrated with feeling from both sides. Old-timers told us that not since the days of the Civil War had there been in the history of Washington City anything that seemed to take such hold upon the people and to interest them. Everybody said that if it did nothing else except to get them to thinking deeper about these questions, beyond the mere detail, they had not seen anything like this, and in fighting like this in an industrial struggle, there would be a good deal of good come out of it. There were congratulations showered upon these women from all sides. Mrs. Champion, representing the Women's Peace League, I think she said—I don't know—

Mrs. CHAMPION. The Women's Relief Association.

Judge LINDSEY. I beg pardon. Mrs. Champion is here, and she says it is the Women's Relief Association. I am glad to be corrected—the Women's Relief Association. Mrs. Champion, representing the Women's Relief Association, made a statement that was received with a great deal of appreciation and applause. The women told their stories, Congressmen made addresses. Congressman Evans, who was on the committee, talked at some length and told of outrages and lawlessness committed by the coal companies. Somebody else, I think, told the other side. Mr. George J. Kindel raised a commotion in the audience by getting up and making a fuss. At times we had difficulty in maintaining order, but on the whole it was a good meeting. Many prominent people sat on the front row, and the feeling, I must say, was quite a good feeling, a kindly feeling that this was a great and terrific struggle. There were no doubt faults on both sides, but it was one of the great social problems that had to be solved, and that was the general situation.

I came back to the hotel and I sent a telegram to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr. Before I sent that telegram to him I had written a letter to Mr. Fosdick, who, I understood, was one of the secretaries in charge of the white-slave traffic work that he has done so much good in trying to destroy. I wrote this letter to Mr. Fosdick particularly because I knew Mr. Fosdick. I have lectured with him at the City College in New York. He was a Princeton graduate and a friend of President Wilson's, so I am told, a very warm friend of Mr. Rockefeller, and a friend of mine. I would just like to read a sentence or two from that letter to Mr. Fosdick, if I may.

“ MAY 16, 1914.

“ MY DEAR MR. FOSDICK: I have been asked by a number of citizens to be one of a committee to go to Washington City to see President Wilson in connection with the unfortunate strike troubles in this State. I have taken no part in the controversies going on, but if I could be of any possible service in bringing peace out of what is certainly the most dangerous and chaotic situation we ever faced in this State I would of course count it a public service. If I should come, my idea would be that the only possible way to avoid further bloodshed, expense, distraction, and difficulty in this State would be for the President to appoint an arbitration committee fairly representative of both sides, or at least so fair that neither side could afford to refuse to submit the situation to them.

“ I am one of those who have grave doubts as to whether Mr. Rockefeller, jr., really appreciates the situation. While I can understand how he may be misled and how his education and training may make him very sincere in what others as sincerely regard as a mistaken attitude, it does seem to me that if some one in whom he would place some trust and confidence could present a somewhat different aspect of the present situation than that which seems to possess him—from some of the public statements that have come from him and his advisers—I think it would do much to bring about a settlement of the present difficulties. The matter has ceased to be a mere question of a strike, and its success or failure is of small consequence compared to some bigger issues that have arisen and for which Mr. Rockefeller should have some consideration. Whether rightly or not, the feeling of the people in this State is quite general that Mr. Rockefeller has it in his power to bring about peace for us or to continue the present chaos.

“I am one of those who have appreciated his work against the white-slave traffic and his interest in some of our social problems. Now, I was wondering if I accept the request that has been made by a great many to go to see the President, if I could come over to New York and have a personal conference with Mr. Rockefeller, jr. I think I can say that it would be of such a character as in no way to embarrass him, and I would be glad, of course, to have you or anyone else whom he would wish present, although it would be a pleasure to have an intimate sort of talk with him regarding some of our problems, especially as bearing on the situation out here.

“With kindest regards, I am.”

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would please describe the correspondence and offer it into the record.

Judge LINDSEY. Well, I didn't know if Mr. Fosdick had received that letter—I learned afterward he was away from New York.

Chairman WALSH. Please describe it without reading it into the record and then hand it to be put in the record.

Judge LINDSEY. I will do that. I would like to read the telegram sent Mr. Rockefeller.

Chairman WALSH. Have you the telegram? Just submit it after describing it.

Judge LINDSEY. I will. [Reading:] “I am having a conference with the President to-day over Colorado strike situation. Could I see you for a personal interview and chat over situation Sunday or Monday at time and place to suit your convenience? I earnestly hope you can grant this request. Answer Shoreham Hotel soon as possible.”

I received a telegram from Mr. Rockefeller of two or three lines, in which he said it would be impossible for him to arrange any interview.

I arrived in New York—well, before I went to New York I wrote to Mr. Rockefeller a letter in answer to that telegram. I will file the letter. I want to say that he refused to see us at all. And I wrote a pretty strong letter, so strong that I afterwards changed it, toned it down some. I shall give you a copy of that letter I wrote. I will put in such copies of my correspondence, and Rockefeller will have others, if you want to get at them. I went out of the hotel and mailed it about three minutes before I got to the train. That was Friday evening, the 22d of May. I mailed the letter Friday afternoon. I got into New York Friday night.

The next morning, Saturday, 23d, a reporter from one of the newspapers came around, told me a number of reporters all were trying to create public sentiment to get Rockefeller to see us, and they thought he ought to be forced to see us, some of them said. I told them he had absolutely refused to see us, but that I had agreed to come to New York to address a meeting to be held there under the auspices of one of the labor organizations, and one other society, but not as reported in the newspapers, either socialistically or anarchistically. Then a reporter from the New York Tribune told me he had been to Rockefeller's office that Saturday morning and he talked with Mr. Heydt—I wouldn't be positive whether from the Tribune, but I think it was—and Mr. Rockefeller had not been at his office that morning, Saturday morning—he was still out at his country estate, and he would not be in on Saturday. He said he thought Mr. Heydt might make an engagement if I would call him up. I called up Mr. Heydt, Mr. John J., jr.'s secretary, about 1 o'clock—just 1 o'clock on Saturday. Mr. Heydt said that Mr. Rockefeller could not see me, which confirmed the report I had in Washington on Friday, a report from various sources, that he would not see anybody unless they represented his own people. I talked to Mr. Heydt for 20 minutes over the telephone. A member of the Progressive Party headquarters happened to be in the room at the time. I went over a great many of the questions there, why I thought Mr. Rockefeller ought to consent to, arbitrate; I believed it to be to his own interest to help to allay some of the feeling against him; from that standpoint, if from no other, I thought he ought to consent to do that. He said once or twice during the conversation that Mr. Rockefeller had sent me a letter early that morning, that I should have received it that noon. I said, "Mr. Heydt, I have received no letter, and it is now 1 o'clock." He said, "That is strange; it was mailed early this morning; you should have had it by noon." I said, "I have not received it." At 3.30 in the afternoon, according to the envelope in which the letter came, it arrived at the Imperial Hotel from 26 Broadway. I may state its contents were very startling to me. I have it here, and I would like to file it.

Here is the letter, 26 Broadway. I wish particularly to have the stenographer note that this letter is mailed from 26 Broadway, Hudson Terminal Station, May 23, 1 p. m., 1914, New York City, and there is a certain reason why I want that noted; and please note on the back the stamp as received at the Imperial Hotel by the clock at 3.30.

(The letter and the envelope inclosing the same, stamped and postmarked as described by witness, were here submitted. The letter is as follows:)

26 BROADWAY,
New York, May 23, 1914.

HON. BEN B. LINDSEY,
Hotel Imperial, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 22 to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., is received. The telegram received at this office from you on May 21 was directed to Mr. Rockefeller, sr., and answered by his secretary. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., has received no telegram from you.

Mr. Rockefeller, jr., desires me to say that your letter of May 22 is of such a character as to make any conference with you impossible.

Very truly,

CHARLES O. HEYDT.

I immediately wrote Mr. Rockefeller a letter, in which I told him that I was astounded to have him say that my telegram had been addressed to his father and that the refusal had come from his father; but I denied that in view of some of the things that I had expressed in my letter that it made an interview impossible.

I knew that according to what the newspapers told me—the newspapers said Mr. Rockefeller had not been in his office at all Saturday morning. I knew I mailed my letter from Washington City at 15 minutes of 4 o'clock. The Congressional Limited left at 4. I put it in the mail box, and it could not have arrived in Mr. Rockefeller's office before Saturday morning; and I want to say here and now I do not believe Mr. Rockefeller ever saw that letter. I believe it was a trick of 26 Broadway, for the following reason: I showed it to one or two of the newspaper men and they laughed, and they said, "We have been down there at 26 Broadway to-day and in and out, and Heydt told us that Rockefeller was not in town, and he was not." Of course I don't know whether he was or not. They said, "We have been pounding the young man pretty hard and have created a lot of public sentiment here and he ought to know of it, and he is using this as a dodge for not seeing you."

I don't profess to the commission that I know that was the fact, but I wrote him another letter dated May 23, 1914, in which I called his attention to the fact that the telegram had been sent to John D. Rockefeller, jr., and not "sr.," as it was well known he was attending to this matter and not his father, and that if he wanted to see anyone who had any information about this, why, he could send for us or could see the women, at least, and that there was nothing in my letter, under the circumstances, that would deter him from seeing us, if he intended to see us. And I went on to say that unless he was willing to see us, I would take his letter as a subterfuge.

After being told that was probably what happened, I thought I would find out. So I called up the Western Union, at Washington, and told them what the difficulty was, and I said, I want to know just exactly to whom telegram of Friday—or Thursday night—was addressed and whom it was received by. They said they would look it up. They called me up and told me that it was sent to John D. Rockefeller, jr.; that it was repeated to John D. Rockefeller, jr., to avoid any mistake. I said, "Will you confirm that by wire?" and they did confirm it by wire, the original of which I will file, or a copy [reading]:

"Your night letter 20th addressed John D. Rockefeller, jr.; repeated junior. Mailing copy.

"WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.,
"Washington City."

I sent this report with a copy of the telegram to Mr. Rockefeller. I said:

"I wish you or your secretary in writing would state to me that you failed to receive the inclosed message sent from Washington here, that it was addressed to and received by John D. Rockefeller, sr., so that whatever grievance I might have, I can take it up with the Western Union office."

I did this because it was suggested by the Western Union people. They said, "You just call him up and ask him to show you that telegram"; and they said, "You directed it junior and we sent it junior, and we repeated it junior and he got it junior, and if there is any question about it, just let him show you the answer that he received."

Mr. Rockefeller and his secretary absolutely refused to even show me the telegram, and I concluded that he never intended to show it. The newspapers were filled with comments regarding his refusal to see either myself or the women.

Then an interesting thing happened. I think it happened on the morning of the 25th of May, or the 26th of May, perhaps. I think it was the 26th. I mailed the letter and the Western Union telegram some time on the 25th, and I received a telephone call from a gentleman whom I know well. He said he wished to have a conference with me over the Colorado strike situation at the Imperial Hotel as soon as I was able to see him—right away, if possible. I told him I could not see him right away, but could see him between that and noon. So we fixed the time for noon, but he was delayed.

Now, what I am going to say I shall have to say in part in a roundabout way, because I do not care to disclose who that man was. He came directly, in my judgment, from Mr. Rockefeller; but I should like to state what he said. I am not sure that he would object, but I have not had an opportunity to get hold of him to find out if he would object. I will try to get his consent, and if I do I will file it with the commission, for I think it is very important.

He told me that Mr. Rockefeller—of course, I won't be sure of all the details, but this is the substance of it. He said, "You know," calling me, I think, by my first name, for we were very intimate friends, "that I am a good friend of John's"—John, he called him—"and a good friend of yours." I said, "Yes; I know that." I had once met Mr. Rockefeller's sister at a dinner with this gentleman; and he said, "I have been over talking with John. He is very much stirred up about this thing. People have been threatening his life, and sentiment is being stirred up because he would not see you folks. And I think," he said, "that if he had his way about it, that he would consent to arbitrate. But," he said, "you know how things are up there. He is surrounded by a lot of people of the old reactionary type, who do not understand these questions at all, and have some of these notions that we do not believe in; and I do not believe they will let him do it. But," he said, "I believe that he personally would be willing to consent to some kind of arbitration, especially if he could have seen you."

I told him about this incident of the correspondence. He said, "Judge, I don't blame you a bit, and I put it up to him, and I know well enough that he can't blame you about that; that it was not your fault, and if he wanted to see you he could see you all right. But," he said, "they won't let him see you, in my judgment. But," he said, "I think a little later on when this excitement blows over, that it can be arranged for you to have a good talk with him, and I think he would appreciate it, and like to do it. I am not sure," he said, "but when you get back to Denver I want you to write me and present in writing what you have been telling me about—what you think ought to be done in this situation, and I will take it up with him again, and I will see if something can not be done." He said, "You know what the difficulty is, that the crowd up there are very bitter against Mr. Wilson. Why," he said, "why, you know the Rockefellers are sore on the President, and I don't know that you can get this thing through—if the arbitration committee is to be appointed by the President." He said, "I don't know—they are pretty sore; but they may come around all right." He said, "You know how people's passions are aroused, and their feelings, and how they get this feeling of bitterness."

I won't be certain when this was done, but another gentleman was with him, and then two others came to see me that day, and I believe one, and possibly three of them had come from Mr. Rockefeller. Something was said by one of these men, and I am making room for confusion as to which one it was—in fact, several things were said—that if it could be arranged, or if we could get a suggestion that the Chief Justice of the United States would appoint a commission or board of arbitration, that Mr. Rockefeller might be induced to consent. I said that I thought the President should appoint the board, and I urged and argued with at least two of these gentlemen, and I think three, that Mr. Rockefeller should give me permission, confidentially, if necessary, to go back to President Wilson and say that if he would appoint this committee as we had asked him to do, that he, Rockefeller, would consent to let the public know that he personally had given his consent; but at the same time—not pretending—as these gentlemen told me he did not—to control these other people, but, as I understood, they rather controlled him. I said to this gentleman, I think if you will tell Mr. Rockefeller that, that it will be to his interests, and will help to allay the feeling against him that I find is pretty bitter throughout the country and tend to avoid anything happening through this physical violence threatened that I heartily deplore and would do nothing to advance but everything that I could to prevent—it will add to his safety and to a better understanding, to recognize the rights of the parties and certain principles of justice that I think can be recognized only by him—by his consenting to let the President appoint this board of arbitration. I wished to do that because I believed it at the time, and I had told the President that I did not think it would ever be necessary for him to try to take possession of the mines if he would only let them know or have them believe that he had the power to do it, and if necessary, would do it; that that was all that was necessary, because I believed the force of public sentiment would be back of the President and would force these men into line. I was told that they had begun to pay a good deal of attention to public sentiment.

Well, that in brief was the hour's talk back and forth that we had, not with Mr. Rockefeller, but through people that I can not say positively came directly from him, but who I believe in one or two instances did come from him, and I believe, further, that they went back to him with these conferences. Well, I learned afterwards that Mr. Rockefeller on the same day or the next day sent a letter or telegram to Mr. Welborn, which, in my judgment, showed that he felt the effect of these conferences. Well, in that telegram or letter I understand, though I have not seen it, that he did state that he was willing or might be willing to have the Chief Justice of the United States appoint a board of arbitration. I felt, therefore, that our mission had accomplished a great deal of good; that it was in part largely responsible for arousing public sentiment and getting the help of the newspapers, through these conferences, in compelling, I might say, Mr. Rockefeller to take the question up with them, as he never had done from any other influence, namely, to consent to any kind of arbitration, but, on the contrary, had held out vigorously against it, as I understood.

That, in a general way, was the substance of the visit to Washington and New York.

Chairman WALSH. You had no further communication with Mr. Rockefeller then—

Judge LINDSEY. Except indirectly. When I got home I wrote a letter to a friend in New York, who, I believe, presented it to Mr. Rockefeller, for I was requested to write it for that purpose. And in that letter I stated substantially what I am stating here.

Chairman WALSH. Have you a copy of the letter?

Judge LINDSEY. I have a copy of the letter and can file it.

Chairman WALSH. Just submit it, then.

Judge LINDSEY. I wish to say that the gentleman to whom I wrote this letter is only one of the gentlemen with whom I conferred, and I want this record to show that I am not saying that he is the man of the two or three I conferred with who made the statements as to the attitude of the Rockefellers toward President Wilson.

(See Lindsey Exhibit No. 3.)

I then went before this commission and I stated some things then that are in the record, but I do not care to repeat them at this time; but I wish to refer—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes; we have that abstracted.

Judge LINDSEY. I wish to reaffirm my testimony before the commission—that is, in the abstract which I hold in my hand, which says, date May 27 and May 28, 1914. Whatever I have said there I wish to repeat, and if possible I would like to emphasize it.

(The witness here referred to the transcript of the proceedings of this commission held in the city of New York on the 27th and 28th days of May, 1914, on the subject of "The Colorado coal miners' strike," and containing, among others, the testimony of the witness given on May 28, 1914.)

I found afterwards that certain people in Denver, and certain people in New York around Mr. Rockefeller, resented bitterly what I considered the success of this mission, namely, in getting out of Mr. Rockefeller the first consent to arbitration whatever through these conferences; and, second, arousing the public sentiment that we seemed to have aroused all through the country, for, we were met everywhere at the stations by the newspaper people; and in New York I was told that for the first time they really began to get any sort of publicity. The fury of the people connected with Mr. Rockefeller, both in Denver and in New York, knew simply no bounds. I never in my 15 years' experience in public affairs in Colorado felt the hatred and bitterness that I did during this time. Just as a sample of it, one thing. I began to receive anonymous letters, some of which I sent to Mr. Harry Kelly, United States district attorney, and asked him to look into it, but I never heard anything from him.

One letter was signed by a prominent doctor here. I am told he is. He says that at a meeting here in a sanitarium in Denver, of prominent doctors and conservative ones, which sanitarium I understand is maintained by one of our very wealthy men; and this letter says the matter was discussed and decided that five men in Colorado ought to be killed, and that my name was at the head of the list. The most amazing thing is that this man should sign the letter. I have the letter here. I had read in the Pueblo Chieftain—

Chairman WALSH. Just offer the letter in evidence.

Judge LINDSEY. I will offer in evidence the original letter. Most of them were anonymous, but this man was bold enough to sign it himself, which surprised me. I have it here in these papers, and will offer it before I go.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Judge LINDSEY. The chamber of commerce met in Denver and proceeded to impugn my motive. They said I did this for political purposes, and many other things. According to the eastern papers an organization here that pretended to be a women's organization and the chamber of commerce together and the real estate exchange sent what purported to be—at least the newspapers reported it to us through the Associated Press and the United Press—a resolution that I was to be recalled from office; that I was notoriously unreliable and untruthful; that I did not represent anybody but myself; that I was doing this for political effect, and I was judged right and left and condemned.

But when I came home I came in on the same train as Mrs. Grenfell, who had been on the same mission, but represented, as it turned out to be, the coal miners. I was met at the depot by several thousand people who seemed to approve of this mission. I was not prepared at that time to tell them all that had been done, for I did not know until afterwards, its success, as I regarded it, in bringing about a reluctant consent from Mr. Rockefeller, jr., to consent at least to some sort of arbitration. Mrs. Grenfell was not met by anyone.

Chairman WALSH. Well, did you afterwards have a public meeting, or something at which you made a report?

Judge LINDSEY. Yes; we had a public meeting, at least down in the street there were several thousand people, to whom I spoke from an automobile and told in a general way about the mission. I told them that the thing that impressed me most about the industrial situation from my trip east was this: That there were two governments in this country; that there was an industrial government at New York City and what was called the Rockefeller interests were the head of the industrial government. I speak of Rockefeller as a generic term only. And that there was a political Government at Washington city. And that until there were changes in our laws, in the laws of property, as I regarded it, there could not be much hope for permanent peace in these struggles; and that political independence in this country was not going to amount to very much as long as there was economic dependence, and that had been demonstrated by the series of troubles and difficulties we had in this State, and if this mission that we had been on down there accomplished nothing else it would have tended or helped to show this big truth, that underlying these occasional and spasmodic eruptions between labor and capital were great economic problems and questions that had to be fought out in the industrial world, but could not be fought out and decided rightly until, through agitation and education, the people came to understand what they meant. That was, in substance, the report.

Now, one other thing—two other things, Mr. Chairman, bearing on this industrial problem and its relation to industrial unrest and the difficulty of people taking part in it that I would just like to comment on briefly as coming from my experience in this struggle that I think would be worth consideration by your board. One is violence—violence—violence of what I call capital on the one hand and the noisy violence of ignorance, generally the violence of labor, on the other hand; and then the misunderstanding that leads to the class feeling and threatens the annihilation of people on both sides; and that those who sympathize with what we regard as the “under dog” more or less, when they attempt to take any part in these struggles in order to get the truth out of sincere effort, and to settle these questions rightly, become the victims of the violence of capital. I constantly experience that on my own part in endeavoring to cooperate with others in a small way to help bring about a solution of these difficulties. And in order to get in the record something on that out of my experience I would like to read the letter I wrote to Miss Jane Addams, after we had been at Hull House with these—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Just as briefly as you can, Judge. Just simply sketch it. We have certain witnesses yet to hear, and we must get away—

Judge LINDSEY. Then I will not read it at all—

Chairman WALSH. You may read extracts from it, if it is not too long—

Judge LINDSEY (interrupting). I would prefer to state it, for I can state it more quickly.

Chairman WALSH. I would prefer that you state it.

Judge LINDSEY. Yes; I can state it more quickly.

I think one great trouble is that the public only see the violence of what is generally regarded as labor. My own feeling is, after years of experience in this matter, that that violence is only the violence set off by the injustice of what I regard as capital against labor. I am not against capital. I believe in the protection of property rights. But the use of government, the control of courts, the interference with the passage of laws, and, when those laws are passed, the dodging of those laws through the control of the public agents and public officers who are called upon to enforce those laws, the favoritism shown those who, generically speaking, are supposed to represent capital; I have seen it not only in my own experience but in the testimony here, of which I made some notes as you went along.

For instance, I understand that Maj. Boughton, who testified in New York that he was an employee of the mine owners' association and receives his fees from the mine owners, that in these investigations an automobile of the C. F. & I. Co. was used to bring in the witnesses. Now, I have been in among these men, both in the southern fields and the northern fields, but not in recent years in the southern fields, though in recent years in the northern field. I know how they think and how they feel. I know the fury that is engendered and touched off much as a match would touch off powder, among them when these men see what they regard as partiality and identification of government with one of the parties, when they see an automobile belonging to the C. F. & I. Co. being used by the men of the militia to gather in strikers and then see what is said about the knocking down of this man Tikas and the report that while he had practically been knocked down and murdered, as I understood the report, that, in substance, as the report read, there was no criminality attached thereto.

Now, come down more concretely in my own case. A mother of children coming before me to defend against an effort to take her children away from her, whose husband was blown up in the smelter amidst the fumes of the slag piles by an explosion, where he had been working 16 years in the smelter 10 and 12 hours a day, and where she got $500 on account of his death—and it incidentally came out that she got it from the railroad company. I couldn't understand why until one of the men in the smelter mills in a most indifferent sort of way said, “Judge, you know that the eight-hour amendment went into effect some time along there, but these men working on the slag piles work more than eight hours. So we simply transferred the men from the pay roll of the smelter company to the railroad company, where they may work legally for 12 hours or any number of hours they wanted to. I suppose you know there is no law against working more than eight hours for the railroad company." Now, I know how that rankled in that man's heart, and I know how for 20 years these men had fought to get an eight-hour law against corrupt and criminal aggregations of capital working through the control of the courts. For I know that personally to be true. And knowing those things, as they know them and have a right to know them, for there is no question about it, that is a sample of the things that touch off all the passions in these men and result in violence.

In my letter to Miss Addams I had her confirm the speech of Mr. W. C. Calhoun, a noted corporation lawyer of Chicago, in defending Rudowitz, a Russian nihilist, whose extradition was being opposed; but Mr. Calhoun got up before a great company of all sorts of people, which included, I am told, two Federal judges and district judges, and stated to them that Rudowitz was justified in bomb throwing in tyrannical Russia. Why? "Because," he said, "the Government had broken down and they hadn't any rights in the courts," and that sort of thing simply exploded that kind of violence among the weak and ignorant, and that Russia itself was responsible for these crimes. And that was applauded by those judges on the bench, and prominent people, as Miss Addams confirmed the report to me personally of that meeting.

But if someone in this country should get up and say because of the lawlessness in southern Colorado, because of the fact that the coal companies down there for years had controlled the district attorneys, the judges, and members of the legislature so that no man had any rights in the courts, and there was violence and would point to the laboring man as responsible for that violence, it would be accepted, while they forget that the workers were in the same position as the Russian nihilist was according to Mr. Calhoun's statement. It was interesting to me to note that that sort of sentiment would be expressed about the conditions in Russia, but not about the conditions in Colorado; yet down in southern Colorado it was just as bad when it came to getting justice down there. That is a fact I would like to have clear in this record, for I think it is high time that this commission, if they can do anything to educate the people on that subject, should understand the meaning of the violence that forces—that produces violence, just as hate produces hate. I have seen that throughout all this struggle in southern Colorado; and while I deplore violence and I am against it on both sides, I know from my experience that the violence of these men in the laboring class is simply the pent up feeling that comes from oppression and tyranny and lawlessness and the attitude of men like Mr. Osgood, who, if he is right, stands for masters in this country on the one hand and slaves on the other; and it is that sort of thing that does more to produce violence than all the anarchists and socialists that I know anything about. At least that is my experience with these people.

I am not going to take up any more of your time, but I have one or two things that I would like to file.

I would like to file a statement from the New York World of date of May 27, 1914, with an extract from Col. Roosevelt's testimony as to what he did, or was going to do in the coal strike of Pennsylvania. I want to say that, although the New York World intimates that I put Col. Roosevelt up to say that at that particular time as bearing on our trouble out here, I did nothing of the kind; but I heartily agree with what the colonel says as to the right of a President in a case of this kind, and I did urge President Wilson, for the reason I have stated, that if it came to the worst, I thought, in the interest of all the people of Colorado, that he should go and do likewise. I hope that will never be necessary. Here is the article.

(An article entitled "Roosevelt was ready to seize mines to end strike," from the New York World, Wednesday, May 27, 1914, was submitted in printed form.)

Then here is another thing I would like to file—this pamphlet issued by the State Bureau of Child and Animal Protection. The statement was sent out by this organization, of which E. A. Colburn, of the mine owners' association, was vice president. He said the statement I made before you at New York, to the effect that that bureau had endeavored to defeat a child-labor law, was not true. That statement was sent all over the country and it was published.

I am experienced in Colorado, and my experience is that the mine owners in Colorado have never been earnest in their efforts to prevent child labor, and I want to file this pamphlet or magazine, in which they say they don't want any child-labor laws in Colorado. These statements are absolutely inconsistent with their action as shown by the decision in forty-fourth Colorado, at page 445; as to how a legal child-labor bill should be drawn. They attempted to legalize the employment of children over the age of 13 years.

In opposition to this Colburn Society we succeeded in defeating that law and in putting on the books a statute forbidding the employment of any child under the age of 16 years in a mine.

(A pamphlet entitled "Child and Animal Protection," published by the Colorado Humane Society, dated Denver, Colo., January, 1911, was submitted in printed form.)

I also want to file this statement of children made dependents because of parents killed in coal-mine accidents. This was taken from the official reports of the State board of charities and correction. It shows that in five years in these coal mines in Colorado 730 children have been made fatherless and dependents.

(See Lindsey Exhibit No. 5.)

I would like also to file a copy of the report of Mr. Eli M. Gross, of the State factory inspection department, with copy from their official records, showing statistics as to child labor in southern Colorado, showing that there were children as young as 10 years of age working in the coke ovens of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and the excuse given by the company was that their parents employed them.

(See Lindsey Exhibit No. 6.)

I want also to file the testimony of the police department of Denver in regard to child labor in Colorado.

(See Lindsey Exhibit No. 7.)

I want to offer in evidence this copy of the child-labor law put through in this State in spite of opposition by this Colburn Society.

Chairman WALSH. That is the present law?

Judge LINDSEY. Yes. It is more stringent than the one they passed and forbids any child under 16 working in the mines in Colorado, and his society tried to defeat it.

(A pamphlet entitled "Child Labor Law of the State of Colorado, 1911," issued by Edwin V. Brake, chief factory inspector, Denver, Colo., was submitted in printed form.)

One final thing, and it will take only a few minutes, and it will show you the truth of these things.

Last spring a committee of business men, among others Mr. Osgood, Mr. Welborn, the president of the Denver City Tramway Co., and some other stockholders of that company, Mr. Phipps, and others, paid several thousand dollars to a committee in New York City, representing the Rockefeller Bureau of Municipal Research, to come out here to Colorado to investigate me. Curiously enough, at the time they were getting these people here, Mr. H. W. Allen, of that bureau, resigned, because, as he said, of the improper influence of the Mr. Rockefeller interests. Whether one of the things he had in mind was because it tried to get the committee to come out here to try to ruin me, I don't know—but that is what these business men of Denver tried to do, as I have the evidence here to show.

This committee from the Rockefeller bureau came out to Denver, and they did examine some of the departments. They told me they were ordered to pay no attention to the other courts, but they were told to get something on my court if they could. I don't think these gentlemen would object to testifying to that. I will furnish the commission with their names later on. I would like you to question them in New York.

One of them said, in a conference with these men—he asked them what they had against me, and they said, "Well, Lindsey tells things about us." He said, "Aren't they true?" And they said in reply, to use his own language, "Good God, yes; but we don't want him to be telling about it." He said, "Why not?" and they replied, "Because it hurts business out here." He said, "It is true, isn't it?" These things happen everywhere, and he is only talking about a condition. Of course, the old gag here is that to tell the truth about the exploiting of the city is to knock the town; but that old gag, of course, is being gradually understood. They said that they were not to make a report on my court unless they got something against me; that they did not want a favorable report of my court.

There was a business men's and chamber of commerce committee appointed, among whom was a nephew of Mr. Cheeseman, one of the promoters of a public-utility company, to investigate the courts, and I wrote them a cordial letter inviting them to my court. I have a copy of that letter. But they never came near me. I then wrote them a separate and individual cordial letter, saying that I would be delighted to have them come and learn the facts from the records of my court. They then appointed a subcommittee, that did not come near us, and then finally made a report that three-fourths of my court be abolished, and I take it they would have included me if it could be done.

I want to file these papers in that connection.

(See Lindsey Exhibit No. 8.)

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know the time you can give me is limited, and I do not care to go into any other matters unless you wish to ask me specific questions, which I will answer briefly, if you care to go into anything further.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner O'Connell requested me to ask you if you found that letter signed by some doctor containing a threat?

Judge LINDSEY. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Please submit all the matters you have in evidence. Now, was there anything else, any general topic, that you wish to mention? I know I have hurried you through, and I will have to do so on account of other witnesses, as much as I regret it; but is there any general topic you have been kept from stating on account of this hurry?

Judge LINDSEY. Why, Mr. Chairman, I notice that you have been in the habit of asking questions as you did in New York, and you asked some questions as to how we were going to solve this problem concerning industrial unrest. I know well enough there is always a temptation for anyone who has opinions to state those opinions. I am one of those who do not pretend to know how these things are going to be solved, but I have for 15 years been active in the public life of Colorado and I positively know that the general contentions and general claims of lawlessness against public-utility corporations are true, and they are responsible for most of the violence.

I have some conclusions, and I can briefly state them. I think there are some palliative things that the commission might do well to consider which would bring about more justice and equality in this country, and one of those things is a Federal board of arbitration, that has been presented to you in a better way, perhaps, than I can present it; it is along the line of the Newlands Act with reference to the railroad controversy. The suggestion, I believe, came from Mrs. Harriman, of your board. I believe that some such work can be done and ought to be done to bring about a settlement of such controversies as we have in Colorado, and not alone Colorado. I want this to go into the record: That Colorado is not worse than any other State, but is better than most of them, and that Denver is not worse than any other city, but is better than many cities in America. Our people are brave enough and willing enough to fight these things, and we are getting somewhere in Colorado, and the time is coming when we will be a free city and a free State; but I do say there can be no permanent peace unless fundamental changes are made in our laws. We have got to take over the natural resources of this country, and especially where they are exploited in the interest of a few men as against the welfare of the many. I want to say that I have come to this conclusion after much thought and a knowledge of the facts. I do not believe much in good people or bad people. I am almost convinced at times that there are no good people or bad people, but just people, and the conditions that make for good things and bad things are the things we must understand. We must do away with injustice and inequality.

I would like to relate a little experience I had in New York, which shows the attitude of some people on this subject. I was at a meeting in the house on Fifth Avenue in New York, where I do have some friends—I don't know how it would be in Denver. I was talking to some young boys and telling them of the conditions of these poor people, and I noticed one little fellow took a good deal of interest; I had been telling about the children, and he was very much interested and paid close attention. This young fellow's name was Arthur, and the vestryman of the church told me—he said, "Arthur is worth $25,000,000 in real estate, stocks, and bonds, and, at the usual rate of increase, by the time he is 35 years of age he will be worth $250,000,000. Can't he do a lot for charity?" This man could not see the injustice of the conditions that would make a little boy that never did anything worth $250,000,000. That is not true of all preachers, however.

Chairman WALSH. Can the commission call on you to just submit your constructive recommendations to our secretary?

Judge LINDSEY. I would be glad to.

Chairman WALSH. Growing out of your experience. I wish you would submit your constructive suggestions as to any changes in laws and what the Government should be.

Judge LINDSEY. Yes, sir; I will do so.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. Thank you, Judge.

Judge LINDSEY. One moment, if I may have it, Mr. Chairman, please, to find a letter which you asked me to submit. I thought I had it right here. I would like also to submit the correspondence concerning the editorial writer of a Boulder paper to the effect that Lindsey ought to be killed, and that a man like Prof. Marks had no right in the State university.

Chairman WALSH. If you can find that letter referred to, I wish you would present it. Mr. Dower will call on you for it.

Judge LINDSEY. I will give him the original letter, in which he said that there were five men in Denver that ought to be killed, and I was complimented by being put at the head of the list.

(See Lindsey Exhibits Nos. 9 and 10.)

Chairman WALSH. That is all; thank you.

TESTIMONY OF MR. NIELS JORGENSEN.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Niels Jorgensen.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Delagua, Colo.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived in the State of Colorado?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Four years the 17th of June.

Chairman WALSH. You are a native of what country?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Denmark.

Chairman WALSH. Have you worked in any other coal mines in any other State than Colorado?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where?

Mr. JORGENSEN. The State of Kansas.

Chairman WALSH. Any place else?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What place in Kansas?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Mineral, Kans.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever been a member of the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. When?

Mr. JORGENSEN. From about 1905, I think, to about 1909.

Chairman WALSH. What is your age?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Thirty-seven.

Chairman WALSH. Were you a member of the United Mine Workers of America while you were in Kansas?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you go out on strike when the strike was called September 23, 1913?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you not go on strike?

Mr. JORGENSEN. I was satisfied and was better pleased than I was when the union came.

Chairman WALSH. What difference was there? What made you better satisfied than you were in a union camp?

Mr. JORGENSEN. I got the same treatment and made more money.

Chairman WALSH. Were you threatened or intimidated in any way by any persons in an effort to get you to go on a strike on September 23, 1913?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did anyone ask you to go on a strike?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. How do the coal miners' wages in Colorado compare with those in Kansas?

Mr. JORGENSEN. They are better.

Chairman WALSH. About how much more do you make here than you did in Kansas?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Well, in company work a man will make about 28 or 30 cents more a day, but by digging coal a man makes a whole lot more; lots of them will make from one to three dollars a day more.

Chairman WALSH. Is that your experience, Mr. Jorgensen?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Are you in favor of checkweighmen at the mines?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. Why not?

Mr. JORGENSEN. I get the same weight as I did before.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever had any experience with checkweighmen?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any effort to get checkweighmen in the mine where you worked, in the Delagua mine?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you sign the petition which was circulated a short time ago to establish checkweighmen in the Delagua mine?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. You did not want any checkweighmen?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. And you have not noticed any difference in the earnings you have made with checkweighmen and without checkweighmen?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that the existence of the union had anything, or has anything to do with keeping wages up in the State of Colorado?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a voter in this country?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. You have never become naturalized?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. You came here when; what year was it?

Mr. JORGENSEN. In 1903.

Chairman WALSH. What is the reason that you have not become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. JORGENSEN. I have not called for the papers.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a married man?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you feel that you would have any benefit from citizenship in the United States?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Well, I don't know about that.

Chairman WALSH. Is it your intention to go back to Denmark at any time?

Mr. JORGENSEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. Is it your intention to maintain your residence in this country?

Mr. JORGENSEN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. Thank you.

We will now stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon, and I wish to announce that the next three witnesses will be the three young nonunion miners, and then Mr. Northcutt. Please be here on time.

(At this point, 12.30 o'clock p. m., of this, Tuesday, December 15, 1914, an adjournment was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. F. WELBORN—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Welborn, I just want to supplement your testimony given the other day. Now, since you left the stand you sent me some suggestions made by Mr. W. Mackenzie King to Mr. Rockefeller and submitted to you, about which you testified in your direct testimony.

Mr. WELBORN. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the correspondence between you and Mr. McClement was not, I think, copied into the record?

Mr. WELBORN. I do not remember as to that. You have had it.

Chairman WALSH. It was not. We had copies of it. Have you the originals here?

Mr. WELBORN. Yes; I brought the originals.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would submit into the record the correspondence with Mr. McClement.

Mr. WELBORN. It seems not to be in chronological order.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you to just read them in as you did before.

Mr. WELBORN. This file starts with a letter from J. F. Welborn to J. H. McClement, dated September 6, 1913.

(Said letter so offered in evidence is in words and figures as follows:)

DENVER, COLO., September 6, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: For 30 days or more officers and organizers of the United Mine Workers of America have been in Colorado attempting to induce the men to join their union, and threatening a strike of the coal operators will not make a contract with the organization recognizing it as the representative of the coal-mine workers employed here.

Our company and all other operators in southern Colorado have always been opposed to recognizing that organization. Wherever it has contracts with operators it has dominated the business to such an extent as to reduce the output, reduce the earnings of the men, and practically to dictate the general policy of operation of coal mines.

We know that only a small percentage of our men belong to the union, and that the southern Colorado miners earn more money per month and per annum than is earned in any important district elsewhere in the United States, whether dominated by the United Mine Workers or not. In spite of this, however, it is probable that in the event of a strike call most of the men would respond, although we believe a great many would later return to work when they found that we were determined in our opposition to the organization and were successfully operating our mines. We are very much concerned and on the anxious seat, yet there is nothing to do but wait.

Public sentiment and the attitude of the newspapers generally are favorable to us.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. J. H. McCLEMENT,
135 Broadway, New York.

The next is a letter from J. F. Welborn to J. H. McClement, dated November 11, 1913.

(Said letter so identified and offered in evidence is in words and figures as follows:)

DENVER, COLO., November 11, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: Messrs. Writer and Rogers are assisting me tonight in cleaning up my desk, which has accumulated practically everything that has come to me in the last two months, for the reason that I have not had 30 consecutive minutes during that time without interruption on account of strike matters. Every time I have thought of you I have hoped that the next day I could write you at some length on this situation, but almost without exception the following morning would bring trouble that required practically all my attention for the day, or if not that, put me in a frame of mind where I could not take hold of anything else.

A trumped-up convention was held at Trinidad September 15. Its delegates were composed of striking miners from northern Colorado, who had been idle for three and a half years, and others appointed from among the employees of the United Mine Workers' organization. No men whatever had been chosen by the miners whom the organization proposed to call out on strike. The natural result was a unanimous vote for a strike, which was set for September 23.

The demands were semimonthly pay, an eight-hour workday, checkweighmen, the right of the men to trade where they pleased, contract with the United Mine Workers of America, and an afterthought demand for an increase of 10 per cent in wages. The latter had never been suggested until during this convention, although the strike agitators, most of whom came from the East, had held a number of conferences with the governor and freely stated their position. They admitted to the governor, however, that all of the conditions, except recognition of the union and the afterthought referred to, were enjoyed by the men. Their sole purpose was recognition of their union and a contract with it under the terms of which every man working for us would be compelled to join the union and pay into its treasury such dues, fines, and assessments as the officers saw fit to levy against its members.

At no time since they first came to Colorado on August 1, up to this day, would they have been unwilling to declare the strike off if they could have but secured this recognition of the union. This, as you, of course, know, would mean placing our business absolutely in their hands.

There was every evidence that not over 10 per cent of our men belonged to the union, yet we new that a far larger percentage would respond to a strike call. Some of these would go out because of their natural sympathy with unionism, others because they did not want to be called scabs, another class, representing a large percentage of the best workmen, left the State before the date the strike took effect in order to have no connection whatever with it, and still another percentage, by no means small, left work because of the fear of violence that had been threatened and which they knew would be put into effect.

The result of the call with us was that practically 70 per cent of the miners and very few of the day and company men responded to the strike call. This meant about 50 per cent of the total mine employees, and has left us in a position where we could and have produced about 30 to 35 per cent of our normal output. The largest among the other operators suffered in a similar way, while most of the smaller operators having but one or two mines lost practically all of their men.

The strike has been one of the most vicious ever conducted by the United Mine Workers of America, whose record is one of extreme violence, with murder as the result of almost every attack. Up to date 10 employees have been killed, practically all of them in cold blood without any provocation whatever, except that they were willing to work, while those who attacked them were not. No attack has been made by mine employees or sheriff's officers on the strikers, except to repulse attacks that the latter made, usually with overwhelming numbers.

We now have the State militia in the field and are hopeful of improvement in the conditions, though they have not accomplished as much during the two weeks they have been in the mining district as we had hoped they would. At the best, however, we are not justified in anticipating normal conditions until well into next summer.

I am inclosing July, August, and September earnings sheets. The figures for the fiscal year you have already had in the preliminary report sent out with a notice of the annual meeting. The strike has prevented my getting out the annual report, although I hope to have it ready within the next few days.

Yours, very truly,

J. F. W.

Letter from J. H. McClement to J. F. Welborn, dated November 20, 1913:

NEW YORK, November 20, 1913.

Mr. J. F. WELBORN,

*President Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.,
Denver, Colo.*

DEAR MR. WELBORN: I thank you very much for your full account of labor conditions, contained in your letter of the 11th instant. I appreciate that you are very busy and do not wish to add to your burdens, but as we get no newspaper reports on conditions in Colorado, if you will depute some one to drop me an occasional memorandum as to how the strike is progressing, I will esteem it a favor. With kind regards, believe me,

Yours, very truly,

J. H. McCLEMENT.

Letter of J. F. Welborn to J. H. McClement, dated December 4, 1913.

(Said letter so identified and offered in evidence is in the words and figures following, to wit:)

[The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo. J. F. Welborn, president.]

DECEMBER 4, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: We feel that we have made substantial progress in the conduct of the strike since I last wrote you, although the increase in output during the three weeks has not been large.

At the urgent request of the governor and under some newspaper pressure, we met three of our striking miners in conference with the governor November

26. There has never been any substantial objection to meeting our own employees or our former employees for the purpose of discussing proper matters, yet we have felt that such a meeting might be construed as an indirect recognition of the officers of the union.

We succeeded, however, in yielding to the requested meeting in such manner as to have the selection of the men, nominally at least, in the hands of the governor, and when the meeting was called to order by the governor, who acted as chairman, the miners, in answer to questions, stated that they represented only themselves directly and would be obliged to take back to the miners for their approval or disapproval whatever understandings, if any, might be reached. We reached no direct understanding; in fact, we wanted none, as we were almost sure that had an understanding between the miners and ourselves been reached it would have received the stamp of approval of the officers of the organization and in that way been twisted into an arrangement between us and the organization.

Nevertheless, the conference accomplished a great deal of good, as it convinced the governor that the grievances of the men were of a trivial character and that we had already granted, even before demanded and before the strike was called, everything that the men had a right to ask or strike for, and as a result the governor issued a statement, addressed jointly to the miners and ourselves, recommending termination of the strike. I am inclosing a copy of this for your information.

I am also inclosing copy of a request made by Secretary of Labor Wilson, and which was under pressure from him signed also by the governor, asking for arbitration. We would not under any circumstances have arbitrated the questions proposed, but we were able to answer the Secretary's communication (in a more effective way than by absolutely declining to consider arbitration) by referring to his own statement in the conference, the latter part of which he attended. A copy of our reply is also inclosed.

Our letter was answered by the withdrawal of the arbitration request and a pretense of submitting the matter to vote was made, with the result that the governor's proposition was unanimously voted down by the miners. We are, however, beginning to receive reports of the manner in which the voting at the meetings was conducted. These reports show that the proposition was railroaded through and not fully explained to the men. Had a secret ballot been taken we believe the majority of the men would have voted to return to work, as we have the best of reason for believing that most of the men now on strike are staying away from the mines only through fear of attack from the organization's agents.

Our anthracite and bituminous mines at Crested Butte are both idle and we do not contemplate making an effort to start them up before spring, when we believe the old men, or such of them as we want, will return to work. Our three mines in the canyon district are also idle, but we believe that these men will return in a body when they find that southern Colorado mines are being operated in a substantial way. The miners in the canyon district have always been union sympathizers and have for many years been more or less independent of the southern Colorado men. There has been no violence in that district, probably for the reason that we have not attempted to work the mines, and we do not consider that it will be necessary to replace these men. In the two southern Colorado counties, Huerfano and Las Animas, most of the mines are working with fair forces, some of them having all of the men that they can now employ. Fifteen hundred miners in addition to those at work would give the operators in the two counties referred to all the coal that could be sold, although it would not be the normal production.

We have established an employment organization and have commenced very actively the movement of men from the East. Many of the mining districts have comparatively light work and miners are not difficult to secure. We feel, therefore, that within 30 days we will have almost as many miners as we require. It is my personal opinion that the shipment of a thousand men from the outside will bring half as many back to the mines from the strikers' camps. In normal times the winter production of coal in Colorado is about 1,000,000 tons per month, but the season has been open, people in the agricultural States have been economizing in the use of fuel, and dealers in those States stocked up well during the late summer. These conditions, taken with the lighter demand for steel, which will reduce our coal consumption at the steel plant at the rate of about 50,000 tons per month, will serve to reduce the demand for Colorado coal at least 20 per cent. Therefore, 750,000 or 800,000 tons per month at the outside would meet all requirements for Colorado coal during the remainder of this winter.

We are experiencing an unusual snowstorm to-day on top of an average storm about two days ago, and the result is from 18 inches to 2 feet of snow in northern Colorado as well as in the southern district. This ought to cause a good many of the strikers who are living in the tents provided by the organization to seek the comfortable houses and employment at the mines.

At Secretary Wilson's request, communicated through our governor, the operators' committee, composed of J. C. Osgood, D. W. Brown, and myself, met him this morning and devoted about two hours to the discussion of the proposition, for the reason that it could not possibly avoid leading to recognition of the union or its officers, and for the further reason that there are no substantial differences between our men and ourselves. Wilson says he expects to go back to Washington to-night, and we hope he will.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. J. H. McCLEMENT,

135 BROADWAY,
New York, December 19, 1913.

Mr. J. F. WELBORN,
President Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. WELBORN: A friend of my son has applied to me for a position. His name is Anthony Fehr. He is a native of Austria and a college graduate, 30 years of age. For eight years he has been in the United States Navy, advancing to the grade of chief petty officer. He has taken an honorable discharge, feeling that the Navy offered no further chances for promotion, and feels that he has made a mistake in his selection of a vocation. He is a man of good habits, good physique, and willing to work.

I thought in your present disorganized state, if he went to Colorado you might find some position where he could make a new start. All he wishes is a start and a chance to earn a living, depending upon his own merit and the opportunities which might be offered for advancement.

If you need such a man please wire me and I will send him out to you.

Yours, very truly,

J. H. McCLEMENT.

Copy of letter from J. F. Welborn to J. H. McClement, dated December 29, 1913.

(Letter so identified and offered in evidence is in the words and figures following, to wit:)

[The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo. J. F. Welborn, president.]

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: I have yours of the 19th instant, regarding a young Austrian gentleman, a friend of your son, who has applied to your for a position.

During the first two or three months of the strike nearly everyone connected with the company was engaged in whatever would best serve the interests at the time, much of the work naturally being of a very temporary nature. We have, in a way, gotten on our feet again, and now for several months to come will have to watch economies very closely. We probably ought to reduce forces more than we really will, as we can not entirely disregard the loyalty that has been shown to the company's interest by so many of our old employees.

As for taking on new men, I hardly see how it would be possible for us to do it in any department whatever, except, of course, the common laborers.

I might also say, that so far as Colorado generally is concerned, I think it a very poor place for any one to seek employment of an important nature. Business generally is at as low an ebb as I have ever known it here, and the reductions in working forces with the larger companies are very general.

Before closing I want to say that we have about all of the miners now in southern Colorado that we will be able to work, but do not anticipate full production from them for several weeks, as it will take some time for all of them to find satisfactory places and get into working trim. It is hardly probable that the mines in the canyon district or those on the western slope will reopen before the beginning of another busy season. Only a small percentage of their output could now be used if they were in operation, and if our expectations as to operations in the south are realized, we will have enough coal in that district to take care of all wants, although the tonnage may not be much above 60 to 70 per cent of our normal output from all mines.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. J. M. McCLEMENT,

MAY 23, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: I feel very guilty for not having written you before about the happenings in connection with our coal-strike matters since your were here. It has seemed impossible, however, to secure even 30 minutes of time to myself since April 20, when the outbreak at Ludlow took place.

The general press reports have been very incorrect and, in many cases, absolutely false. I assume, however, that you saw a copy of the operators' telegram to Dr. Foster, in reply to one he sent Mr. Rockefeller April 29, which was handled by the Associated Press. I am, however, inclosing a copy of this, together with copy of a second telegram we sent Dr. Foster, supplementing the first; also copy of a telegram sent to President Wilson and signed by all of the principal operators except the C. F. & I. Co.

Monday I will try to write a general résumé of events from April 20 down to date.

Mr. J. F. WELBORN,
President Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. WELBORN. I thank you very much for your letter of the 23d instant and have read the clippings inclosed therewith with great interest. Several of them were not published in the eastern papers.

I am waiting with much interest your further information as to how the mines are working and what progress is being made in production. With kind regards, believe me,

Yours, very truly,

J. H. McCLEMENT.

Copy of a letter from J. F. Welborn to J. H. McClement, dated May 27, 1914.
(Letter so identified and offered in evidence is in the words and figures as follows, to wit:)

MAY 27, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: The outbreak at Ludlow on April 20 was one of the most vicious things that has happened since the strike was called. There is abundant evidence to show that the attack had been carefully planned by the strike leaders to take place on April 21, but through indiscretion on the part of some of the Greeks, and, perhaps, others, it was precipitated on the morning of April 20. Many of the women and children had been sent away, and in point of numbers the strikers were sufficiently large to have completely annihilated the small squad of militiamen that had been left at and in the vicinity of Ludlow, which aggregated about 45. Only 12 of these were at Ludlow when the outbreak occurred, but the others were only a short distance away and soon came to the relief of their comrades.

Reinforcements were obtained from two troops just previously organized at Trinidad and Walsenburg and made up of mine employees. These troops had been organized by the adjutant general when the governor decided to call practically the entire force of the militia out of the field, in order that there might be a reserve force to call upon in an emergency. The wisdom of having these enlisted men available can not be questioned, as without them the 45 men previously referred to would have been entirely unable to cope with the overwhelming forces of the strikers.

In the first attack on the militia a private by the name of Martin was shot in the neck but not killed. First-aid bandages were applied, and his comrades started to carry him back to a place of safety, but were forced to leave him—as they thought only temporarily. They were, however, unable to get back to him for some time, and when they did reach him the work of destruction had been completed by the strikers. His face had been broken in a number of places, a gun discharged in his mouth, and his body from his neck down perforated with bullets. One can imagine the feelings of this man's comrades when they viewed his body in that condition, and it would not have been surprising if they had disregarded all rules of warfare when they had an opportunity to make themselves effective against the attacking party. All the evidence goes to show that, except that Lieut. Linderfelt broke his gun over the arm or head of Louis Tikas, the Greek leader, no acts that could be criticized were committed by any of the militia. The tents caught on fire while the militiamen were several hundred yards away, and was either the result of an exchange of shots between the militiamen and strikers located in the tent colony or started by the act of some one within the colony. As has been stated before, no women or children were shot. The 12-year-old boy who was killed was unquestionably shot by some one of the strikers, as the evidence showed that the bullet was of the explosive character used by the strikers and not by the militiamen. The evidence of a doctor of the Hastings mine showed that the 11 children and 2 women who were taken out of the pit the next morning dead had been suffocated probably before the tent caught on fire. While the tents were burning militiamen discovered some women inside, and rushed in under heavy fire from strikers entrenched a short distance away and rescued all of the women and children that they could find, supposedly all that had been left in the tent colony.

The next morning a large number of men attacked the Delagua mine of the Victor-American Fuel Co. and killed three men who were defending the property and lives of the workmen. They next moved on Aguilar, where they destroyed the top workings of three or four mines, and after driving several men, women, and children, including the president of one of the smaller companies, into one of the mines they sealed its opening with explosives.

Under heavy pressure we induced the lieutenant governor, in the absence of Gov. Ammons on a trip to Washington, to order the militia back into the field. Before they reached the real trouble zone, however, the lieutenant governor had established a truce with the attorney representing the United Mine Workers, under one of the conditions of which the militia were not to move south of Ludlow, and that the strikers would cease their attacks on the militia and mine property. This truce was, in my judgment, nothing short of a conspiracy, and I so informed the lieutenant governor when he told me about it. Results showed that my judgment was right, as the truce was not observed more than a few hours, if really at all, by the miners. However, the lieutenant governor continued to observe the peace pact, and on Ammons's return two or three days later he continued it. Had the militia been allowed to move without restraint under the direction of the adjutant general much, if not all, of the disaster and bloodshed that followed during the next few days would have been prevented, for I do not think the strikers would have engaged the enlarged military force at any point; if they had, the results would have been far different from those that have heretofore been reported.

Early on Monday, April 27, an attack was made on our Robinson and Walsen mines by a large force entrenched in what locally is termed a hogback or dike about a mile north of these mines. Our guards, that had been well armed and whose forces had been augmented somewhat, took up a position on a hill between the mines and the hogback, keeping the strikers far enough away from the mines to prevent their doing us any injury at those properties. They did, however, succeed in reaching our McNally mine, lying between the strikers' intrenchments and the position occupied by our guards, and drove out the small force of men we had there looking after the property, which was idle, and burned some of the buildings. The men ceased work in the Walsen and Robinson mines and came to the relief of the guards, a total of 160 of our workmen in and around those mines taking up guns in the protection of their lives and our property. Early on the morning of Wednesday, the 29th, assistance was given us from the military force that had been established at Ludlow, which is about 25 miles south of Walsenburg, and maintained there under the terms of the peace pact. These men were under what, I consider, a very incompetent colonel, and his work was of a negative character. He, however, responded to the attack of the strikers a little before noon, but the engagement lasted only an hour or an hour and a half until another truce was established between the governor and the representatives of the United Mine Workers. After the establishment of the truce, Dr. Lester, engaged in treating a wounded soldier and wearing a Red Cross badge, was killed. Because of what, I think, was cowardice on the part of the colonel in charge, his body was not recovered until 9 o'clock that night, having been allowed to lie on the field about seven hours. During this time it had been robbed, more shots fired into it, and the part of his clothing carrying the Red Cross badge had been removed. The truce was established between 1 and 1.30, and immediately the commanding officer in the field commenced to withdraw his men. At 5 o'clock the strikers went into our McNally mine and completed the destruction of most of the top workings.

Also, on the morning of April 29, at 5 o'clock, a large force of men, headed by between 50 and 60 Greeks, and composed entirely of foreigners, attacked the Forbes mine, which is between Trinidad and Ludlow and about 5 miles from the latter place, killing nine men in cold blood, burning the barn with 33 mules, and destroying much other property. Under the terms of the first peace pact referred to, the militia were not allowed to go south of Ludlow, although the major, Hamrock by name, in charge at that point, begged the governor, through the adjutant general, for permission to send the small squad to the relief of the Forbes workmen. He had learned during the night before that the attack was to be made, and at that time made the request for permission to protect the men. He renewed his request early the following morning when evidence reached him that the attacking party was at or near the mine. This was the most cold-blooded act of the entire strike, showing not only premeditation but a heartlessness that seems to be characteristic of the Greek race.

Federal troops arrived early Thursday morning, April 30, and since then we have had comparative peace. During the entire siege, from April 20 to April 30, we were fortunate enough to lose no men. The total value of the property destroyed at McNally was about $30,000.

No greater loyalty to employers has ever been shown than was demonstrated by our workmen, composed of, I think, practically all nationalities, when 160 of the regular mine employees took up arms in protection of their lives and our property at Walsen; a large number did the same at the Berwind and Tabasco mines near Ludlow. At the latter properties unarmed men accompanied those with arms into the hills to intercept the attacking parties, and did so with the expectation of taking up the gun of some one who was shot down in the event an attack was made.

The policy of the Federal troops is not entirely satisfactory to us, although we have about as many men at work to-day as we had before the outbreak of April 20. They will not, however, permit us to bring in any men from outside the State and require that all of those seeking employment shall go direct to the mines where they want to work and make their application, rather than making it through our office here or in Trinidad. I am sure that they are obtaining a large amount of valuable information, and that in a general way they know where the guns, which the strikers failed to deliver, are hidden. They are, however, unquestionably acting under directions from Washington, and without authority to search for arms until specifically directed by Washington to do so.

A so-called mediation committee, composed of an old active officer of the United Mine Workers of America and a former Kentucky coal operator, has been appointed by Secretary of Labor Wilson, and the gentlemen have been at work here for about two weeks. The coal operator shows strong sympathies for the operators here, and, if we can believe what he says, we have a right to expect a favorable report from him.

Our State legislature, as you doubtless know, was called into extra session on the fourth of this month and passed two or three desirable bills, one an appropriation for the military expense, and adjourned after a session of about two weeks. A legislative committee composed of six was appointed to investigate the strike and attempt to bring it to a termination. That committee has been divided into three subcommittees composed of two each, who will leave to-night and to-morrow to make preliminary investigations in three different parts of the State. It is too early to hazard a guess as to their course, but we naturally hope that they will report in accordance with the facts.

I have written this hurriedly, in a somewhat rambling fashion, as I have been unable to take enough time to myself without interruption since Monday morning to give you a clear and concise statement of affairs, and on account of the death of Mrs. Welborn's mother last night I find it necessary to leave the office between 3 and 4 o'clock this afternoon, and for that reason will not be able to sign the letter personally.

Yours, very truly,

New York, June 3, 1914.

Mr. J. F. WELBORN,
President Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. WELBORN: I am very much obliged for your interesting résumé of labor conditions contained in your letter of May 27, which I have taken the liberty of forwarding to Mr. Murphy for his and Mr. Rockefeller's information.

We fully appreciate the trying ordeal which you and all our loyal employees, officers and men, are undergoing during this war for a principle and sincerely trust that it will not last much longer. With kind regards,

Yours, very truly,

J. H. McCLEMENT.

AUGUST 18, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: I feel guilty of neglect in not having written you before this in connection with strike matters, and yet little of moment has happened since my last letter on the subject.

No change has taken place in the policy of the Federal troops with respect to the employment of men, although I do not think their rules are as rigidly enforced as at the beginning. Our gain in the number of men employed has not been material, though the efficiency of the men has improved somewhat, and consequently our production has increased a little over what it was in May.

The committee from the Secretary of Labor's office in Washington has made no report on the Colorado matter and probably will not for some time. One of the members of the committee recently underwent an operation for appendicitis at his home in Kentucky and is not now on duty. Our own legislative committee made what they considered an extensive investigation of conditions; held two or three interviews with the operators; made some recommendations which we could not accept; but have not made their report, and I am inclined to think will make none before the regular session of the legislature convenes this winter unless in the meantime some unusual condition should develop which would in their opinion call for an immediate report. It appears that when they were appointed they practically agreed that no report should be made that could not be signed by all members of the committee. If they adhere to this agreement, it is not probable that a report of any value will be made, as four of the members of the committee are disposed to a report wholly based on the facts, while the fifth member of the committee is a Progressive, closely allied with Costigan, the attorney for the United Mine Workers of America, and the sixth is a politically ambitious Democrat.

All of the reports that have come to us from confidential sources during the past few weeks indicate a growing dissatisfaction on the part of all the strikers, and threats have been made by many (some of which have been put into execution) to return to work. Our information goes to show that the officers of the organization are very tired of the strike and acknowledge to themselves that they have been defeated, yet I do not consider it probable that the strike will be called off. On the other hand, it is not improbable, in my judgment, that the benefits will be withdrawn or materially reduced. The effect of this would naturally be to cause a great many of the men to forsake the strikers' forces and go back to work. If the national organization of the United Mine Workers of America had sufficient funds I believe contributions would continue on a reasonably liberal basis at least until after election, and even with a broken treasury I think they will continue some benefits until after the November election in the hope that either the Democratic or Progressive candidate for governor will be elected, and as a result greater pressure than heretofore will be put on the operators to yield some point or points that will enable the miners' organization to call the strike off without admitting complete failure. The political situation is far from satisfactory. There seems to be a rather strong feeling in favor of law and order, and both women's and men's law and order leagues have been organized. There has not, however, been a complete and, in my judgment, effective organization perfected in the Republican Party. At any rate, many of us are fearful that the Republican candidate for governor will not be elected.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. J. H. McCLEMENT,
New York, N. Y.

JANUARY 27, 1914.

Mr. J. H. McCLEMENT,
135 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith statement of December earnings and earnings for the first six months of the fiscal year compared with corresponding periods of last year.

We feel quite sure that we have struck the bottom, and that from now on we will be able to show gains compared with the earlier strike months.

We are now producing enough fuel to operate the steel plant to a capacity sufficient to take care of all demands, and it is encouraging to note that the buying of steel products has materially increased since January 1. Prices, however, on practically everything we make, except rails, are much lower than they have been for years.

Yours, very truly,

J. F. W.

P. S.—Statement for November and five months of fiscal year also inclosed.

AUGUST 18, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: I inclose herewith statement of earnings for the year ending June 30 compared with the previous year; also statement of July earnings of last year. In each case the figures show a slight surplus. In June it was due to the adjustments at the end of the year, made up largely of dividends on stocks of subsidiaries, but in July the surplus was the direct result of the month's operations.

It is gratifying to again have a month's returns that do not show a large loss, yet with the unusual war conditions abroad, which are greatly interfering with all lines of business, we can not be optimistic as to the immelate future. Instead of booking new rail orders for winter and early spring delivery, as is the custom at this time of year, we have been asked a number of times during the past three weeks to suspend shipments on orders placed for what might be termed current delivery. Our rail orders for this fall's delivery were in the aggregate light and have been greatly reduced by these suspensions. The result is that we are now working our rail mill but half time in order to spread the small amount of business over as long a period as possible, hoping thereby to avoid a complete shutdown within a few weeks.

I anticipate that we would have a very good coal business in the agricultural States, which ordinarily buy large quantities of high-priced coal, if the strike were not interfering with our output.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. J. H. McCLEMENT,
135 Broadway, New York.

OCTOBER 21, 1914.

Mr. J. H. McCLEMENT,
135 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith copies of the August and September reports of earnings, compared with corresponding periods of the previous year.

It is very disappointing to have to report a deficit in each month, yet this can now be charged to poor business rather than to the strike. Not during the past 10 or 12 years, if since 1898, has the actual rail business in hand and in prospect been as poor as it is at this time. We are able to keep our rail mill going at about half capacity by working mainly on orders placed for delivery in the early months of next year. This is keeping our organization together at both the steel works and the coal mines, but operations on that basis can not be conducted at a profit.

Yours, very truly,

J. F. W.

Chairman WALSH. Now, have you copies of all those originals—have you finished with the McClement list?

Mr. WELBORN. Yes; I have.

Chairman WALSH. Have you retained in your office copies of all this correspondence which you have offered here?

Mr. WELBORN. No; I have not, because some of it was copied in your office here.

Chairman WALSH. I would like to leave all that correspondence with Mr. Dower. We expect to leave here to-morrow at noon, but Mr. Dower, our secretary, will be here until noon and will take it up with you and check it up, and, if necessary, he can give you copies now.

Mr. WELBORN. Mr. West gave me a file of copies, presumably complete, just a few minutes ago.

Chairman WALSH. Leave those, please, with Mr. Dower, and he will check them up and return them to you. All the original files you stated at this conference you had of a correspondence with Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. King at Tarrytown, and then the one you had when Mr. Hywell Davis and Neil were present, that, I understood you, was in the latter part of September?

Mr. WELBORN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Was it after the letter had been written to the President?

Mr. WELBORN. After I had been to Washington and from there gone to New York.

Chairman WALSH. It was the last week of September, then?

Mr. WELBORN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, that will be all.

Mr. WELBORN. This Mackenzie King correspondence has not been read in yet, that which I sent you yesterday.

Chairman WALSH. Just put that in, please.

Mr. WELBORN. The first is an extract from a letter from W. L. Mackenzie King, dated August 6, 1914, and the original letter from John D. Rockefeller, jr., to J. F. Welborn, dated August 11, 1914.

(The letters so identified and referred to are in the words and figures following, to wit:)

[Extract from letter of W. L. MacKenzie, dated Aug. 6, 1914.]

I agree with you in believing it to be extremely unlikely that the United Mine Workers of America will call off the strike. They might be willing to drop open, active support by degrees, but I am inclined to think that where recognition has been the principle for which they have been fighting, they will not openly abandon the struggle with anything short of what they may be able to construe as such.

It may be, however, that organized labor in the United States will realize the opportunities and handicaps likely to come to certain industries through the changed conditions of Europe, and will be prepared to cease hostilities where industrial strife at present exists, in order that on the one hand labor may reap with capital a fuller measure of the harvest, or, in industries that may be differently affected, protect itself against consequences that are certain to arise. I fear that the view likely to be taken by some of the leaders may, at the outset, be the shortsighted one of endeavoring to persuade their followers that the opportunities which may come to American capital through the crippled condition of industries elsewhere will induce a recognition which under less favorable circumstances might not be granted. This is almost certain to be the immediate effect, and I think you are wise, therefore, in dismissing altogether from your mind the possibility of the United Mine Workers calling off the present strike, even if under any circumstances short of recognition they would be likely so to do. It will not be very long, however, before the inevitable effects of the European war on American labor conditions are certain to make themselves felt, both because of the scarcity of capital available for investment and the crippled condition of industry on the other side, and once this becomes apparent the unions will have to revise considerably some of their present policies.

It would be fortunate indeed if, out of the changed conditions which this European war is certain to produce, a means might be found of restoring industrial peace in the United States in industries such as coal and fuel, where there is a certainty of a direct bearing. It may be that among those who are embarrassing the situation in Colorado there are many foreigners who may feel compelled to return to Europe, and that may prove an immediate factor of importance. Looking at the ultimate, rather than the immediate, effect, there is, speaking generally, going to be a large amount of unemployment as a consequence of this war, and once the war is over thousands of men and their families in the Old World are going to seek future employment in the New. In certain industries it is going to be easy for employers to find all the labor they desire, and unions will be confronted with a new problem. Recognition, simply for the sake of recognition, is going to be seen to be less pressing as an immediate end than that of maintaining standards already existing, and may rightly come to regard as their friends and allies companies and corporations large enough and fair enough to desire to maintain these standards of their own accord. For the unions to take a different view will certainly mean to lose the substance of fair conditions while wasting resources in fighting for the shadow of recognition. Here, it seems to me, lies a possible avenue of approach toward restoring normal conditions in Colorado.

The possibilities here set forth might be pointed out by employers in a perfectly frank and open manner. It might be said with equal frankness that were it desired to profit by such a situation, employers may seek later to enforce individual agreements with all men desiring to enter their employ; may even consider, as some doubtless will, altering conditions of employment to their supposed immediate advantage. Between the extreme of individual agreements on one side, and an agreement involving recognition of unions of national and international character on the other, lies the straight acceptance of the principle of collective bargaining between capital and labor immediately concerned in any certain industry or group of industries, and the construction of machinery which will afford opportunity of easy and constant conference between employers and employed with reference to matters of concern to both, such machinery to be avowedly constructed as a means on the one hand of preventing labor from being exploited, and, on the other, of insuring that cordial cooperation which is likely to further industrial efficiency.

Granting the acceptance of the principle outlined, the machinery to be devised should aim primarily at securing a maximum of publicity with a minimum of interference in all that pertains to conditions of employment. By this I mean that the hope of establishing confidence between employers and employees will lie more in a known willingness on the part of each to confer frankly with the other than in anything else. Similarly, the avoidance of friction, likely to lead to subsequent strife, is likely to be minimized by agencies which will disclose the existence of irritation and its cause at or near inception. Trouble most frequently follows where ill feeling is allowed to develop unknown or unheeded.

A board on which both employers and employed are represented, and before which, at stated intervals, questions affecting conditions of employment can be discussed and grievances examined, would appear to constitute the necessary basis of such machinery. The size of this board, and whether there should be one or many of such boards, would depend upon the numbers employed, the nature of the industry, and whether or not the work is carried on in one or several localities. Where, for example, there are different mines or refining plants as well as mines, it might be that the boards pertaining to each individual concern might be combined with provision for reference to a joint board covering the whole industry or group of industries to which matters not settled by smaller boards might be taken for further discussion and adjustment.

In determining the character of representation upon such boards, broadly speaking, a line might be drawn between those who are "paid salaries" on the one hand, and those who "earn wages" on the other hand. This is very rough and very general, for there are, in some industries, a class of petty bosses whose interests may appear to identify them more closely with wage earners than with salaried officials, but, broadly speaking, men who have authority to give orders and to direct operations fall into the salaried class, while the men who have no authority to direct others and whose own work is subject wholly to direction, fall into the category of wage earners. The selection of representatives on such boards should be made at a meeting or meetings of the employees called expressly for the purpose. It might be left optional for the employees to say whether they desired a permanent form of organization of which their representatives on a board would be the officers, or whether they would prefer the selection of individuals at stated periods, without reference to any permanent form of organization. It could also be left optional with the workers themselves to say whether they wished to allow the representatives so chosen a salary in payment of their services or whether such services would have to be voluntary. A company might, with propriety, offer to provide a place of meeting for the boards, and possibly go the length of supplying the employees with permanent office accommodations for their representatives, leaving it, however, to the employees themselves to provide whatever might be necessary in the way of salaries and expenses in the keeping up of such offices.

It would not appear desirable at the outset that these boards should have anything to do with benefit features. They should not be framed with a view of restricting, through possible benefits, the liberty of any man as respects the continuance of his employment, but should aim primarily at affording a guaranty of fair play in determining, in the first instance, the conditions under which men would be obliged to work and the remuneration to be paid; and, secondly, the carrying out of these conditions in a spirit of fair play.

One thing to be especially aimed at in the construction of such boards would be the making virtually certain of the possibility of grievances or conditions complained of being made known to and subject to the review of persons in authority over and above the parties immediately concerned, where the parties fail to adjust these differences between themselves; this to be carried even to the point that directors, if need be, should have, where the numbers to be affected are likely to justify it, a knowledge of the situation and power to pass upon it. This feature will probably not appeal to pit bosses and managers who may desire absolute authority. On the other hand, I am convinced it would be possible to so frame a constitution for these boards that the possibility of this review would in no way interfere with discipline, but would be a material assistance rather than a handicap to those who are charged with responsibility.

What might be expected of a board of this kind would be that employees, before taking up any question with the officers of the company, would try to adjust or settle it among themselves. Failing adjustment in this manner, differences and difficulties would be presented to the officers of the company, not by the individuals immediately affected, but by the duly constituted representatives chosen to safeguard the interests of all. Having had a preliminary sifting in this manner, cases could be brought before a committee of the board or before the whole board in any one industry for adjustment. If it should be found that an individual board could not definitely determine a matter of importance, there might be brought a further appeal on stated conditions to a board chosen to represent the industry as a whole, or a group of allied industries, the purpose here being to get away, to a degree, for purposes of adjustment, from the parties immediately concerned, but not wholly away from parties likely to be ultimately affected. This would make it an essential that all members of such boards, excepting possibly persons chosen as chairmen, referees, or umpires, should be persons actually employed in the industry or connected with it in some way, not persons chosen from outside. It should be possible, however, for workmen to select one or more of their number who could give their entire time to acting in a representative capacity and pay them a salary pending their acting in such capacity.

I think, in a very rough way, this covers the points mentioned in our conversation. I really hesitate to send this letter in such rough outline and without care in preparation. I believe so strongly in never advising in regard to any situation until one has made oneself familiar with all its phases that I feel I am running a great risk in even setting forth what this letter contains, as there may be conditions or reasons which will render its suggestions wholly inapplicable to some of the industries with reference to which consideration is invited.

26 BROADWAY,
New York, August 11, 1917.

DEAR MR. WELBORN: For some months we have been talking with different ones who are familiar with the subject about some simple machinery which would insure quick and easy access on the part of the employees of the fuel company to the officers of the company with reference to any grievances, real or assumed, or with reference to wages or conditions of employment, feeling that the officers of the company might think that the introduction of some simple mechanism of this kind would tend to promote kindly feeling between the employees and the officers, as well as be a further evidence to the public of the entirely fair and just attitude of the officers toward their men. Among the men with whom we have talked on this subject we have found no one more intelligent, more practical, or more experienced than Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King, who was a short time ago the secretary of labor of Canada. As deputy secretary, Mr. King himself settled 45 strikes. It is he who prepared and put on the Canadian statute books laws with reference to the handling of industrial disputes which have so materially reduced the number of strikes in Canada during the past few years. Mr. King is a man who has approached this subject from both the theoretical and the practical side. I fancy that his success in settling the strikes above referred to was due partly to his extensive knowledge of and wide experience in dealing with industrial difficulties and partly to the fact that he has the faculty of making men of high and low degree believe in his sincerity and genuineness. Having had several conferences with Mr. King during the past few months along these lines, it occurred to me the other day to ask him to outline briefly some simple machinery which would accomplish the result suggested at the beginning of this letter. I am inclosing a copy of that portion of his reply which deals with the subject. You will understand that as a Canadian subject closely related to the Government, Mr. King is overwhelmed with public duties at this time in connection with the European war. He has been unable to give the subject of my letter any careful or continued thought, but has dictated hurriedly some of the points which he made in his discussions of this subject with us.

I am sending this memorandum to you in the most informal way, without any conference with my colleagues, simply for the purpose of ascertaining whether you gentlemen in Denver believe that anything along these lines is worth considering for the fuel company. If you think it is, as we are inclined to believe, it occurs to me that it might be possible for us to arrange with Mr. King, should you so desire, to go to Denver, at your invitation, for conference privately with you gentlemen. The purpose of this conference would be for you to give him the many facts as to the fuel company's organization, a knowledge of which would be essential to enable him to outline a plan adapted to the specific requirements of that company. If there is any man available who could be helpful in working out such a plan as this, I believe Mr. King is the man. My thought would be for him to go to Denver in an entirely private and unofficial capacity as your guest, without its being generally known that he was there. I should not expect him to undertake to visit the coal properties of the company, but rather simply to confer with your gentlemen in your own office.

I shall appreciate a frank expression of your feeling on this general subject, and if I can be of any help in developing a plan, should the idea meet with your approval, or in securing such a visit from Mr. King, as I have suggested, I shall be only too glad to do so. I may say in passing that I had a few words with Mr. Lee on this general subject before he went West.

Very truly,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

Mr. J. F. WELBORN,
*President Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.,
Denver, Colo.*

I have also another letter which was missing from one of the files. You will recall, perhaps, some correspondence relating to a letter written by William Park Athey?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELBORN. Last night I was trying to take care of the correspondence that had accumulated in the last three weeks, and I find among a large mass of stuff the original letter from William Park Athey to Mr. Rockefeller, which had been forwarded to me by Mr. Rockefeller's secretary, Mr. Heydt. The letter from Mr. Athey is dated November 5, 1914.

(The letter so identified and referred to is in the words and figures following, to wit:)

HOLLY, COLO., November 5, 1914.

Hon. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.,
President Rockefeller's Foundation, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: While in the strike district helping to protect part of your property, I received two certificates of indebtedness from the State military fund, amounting to $41, which I have been unable to cash.

As I was trying to support a mother and two sisters previous to the call, therefore, after the call I was unable to meet my expenses and am now in a distressed financial condition. That is the reason for making this personal appeal to you.

Hoping that you can see fit to take these off my hands, thereby doing an act of kindness, I am,

Yours, respectfully,

WM. PARK ATHEY.

P. S.—I am not of age, therefore, can not borrow money, but if you doubt my honesty and character kindly refer to the First National Bank of Holly.

WM. PARK ATHEY.

The copy of Mr. Heydt's letter of transmission to me or to Mr. Athey is dated November 17, 1914.

(The letter so identified and referred to is in the words and figures following:)

NOVEMBER 17, 1914.

Mr. WILLIAM PARK ATHEY,
Holly, Colo.

DEAR SIR: In the absence of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 5 and have referred the same to Mr. J. F. Welborn, president Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Denver, Colo.

Very truly,

CHARLES O. HEYDT.

Chairman WALSH. Just one other thing. Commissioner Weinstock, who has gone away, has left a request for you to meet Mr. Grant at your office, who wants to go over certain letters with you and certain records about which you testified here—that is, as to arms purchased and where they were purchased, and certain things of that kind. Mr. Grant will take it up with you, and knows what the commission desires.

Mr. WELBORN. All right; when will I see him?

Chairman WALSH. We are crowded now; either to-day or after we go away.

Mr. WELBORN. After you go away will suit me better.

Chairman WALSH. That is all; thank you, Mr. Welborn.

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. E. BROOKS.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. BROOKS. W. E. Brooks.

Chairman WALSH. What is your age?

Mr. BROOKS. About 38.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. BROOKS. At the present time at Hastings.

Chairman WALSH. Are you married or single?

Mr. BROOKS. Married.

Chairman WALSH. Is your family at Hastings?

Mr. BROOKS. No, sir; in Alabama.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been at Hastings?

Mr. BROOKS. I have been at Hastings since about March.

Chairman WALSH. Are you working there at Hastings as a miner?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. For what company?

Mr. BROOKS. The Victor-American Fuel Co.

Chairman WALSH. You are a coal digger there, are you?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever followed that occupation elsewhere?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where else?

Mr. BROOKS. Alabama, Oklahoma, Illinois, and Washington.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever been a member of the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. BROOKS. I have.

Chairman WALSH. Whereabouts?

Mr. BROOKS. In all those States I have mentioned, except this State.

Chairman WALSH. When did you come into the Colorado field?

Mr. BROOKS. This last time I came in along in the winter, in December.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you employed?

Mr. BROOKS. First at _____ for the C. F. & I., and then I came to Hastings for the Victor-American.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you when you undertook to come to Colorado first? Were you employed to come here?

Mr. BROOKS. No, sir; I was in Washington when I came to Colorado the first time.

Chairman WALSH. How did you happen to come to Colorado?

Mr. BROOKS. I wasn't doing no good there.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know there was a strike here at the time?

Mr. BROOKS. The last time, I knew there was a strike.

Chairman WALSH. Did you come here for the purpose of working in the mines?

Mr. BROOKS. I did.

Chairman WALSH. When did you first work under union conditions?

Mr. BROOKS. About three years ago.

Chairman WALSH. What was your object in coming here?

Mr. BROOKS. I was trying to better my condition.

Chairman WALSH. Did you resign from the United Mine Workers?

Mr. BROOKS. I brought a card with me, but on my way from Washington here I could not get any work where the union was at, and I came on to where there was no union.

Chairman WALSH. You have quit the union, have you?

Mr. BROOKS. I presume I have; I have not been in it for three years.

Chairman WALSH. What objection have you to belonging to the union?

Mr. BROOKS. Well, I have two or three objections.

Chairman WALSH. State what they are.

Mr. BROOKS. Well, it is a detriment to me and my people, you might say.

Chairman WALSH. You mean to the colored race?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir; to the colored race.

Chairman WALSH. Do you say that they discriminate against you?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. In what particular, in what way?

Mr. BROOKS. When I was in Illinois and worked around Springfield, I could only work at three mines.

Chairman WALSH. They objected to you on account of your color, did they?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir; they objected to me on account of my color. They say they don't discriminate against any color, creed, or nationality, but when I went to the mines around Springfield, except two or three, I could not get work, and it is the same way at other places throughout the United States.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have any objection to the union otherwise than on account of racial discrimination?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir; I does.

Chairman WALSH. Why?

Mr. BROOKS. Where the union is organized at you get on an average of $3 a week, and probably not earn that much. And where there is no union we have the privilege of working sometimes the year round.

Chairman WALSH. In what places do you find they only allow you to work three days a week?

Mr. BROOKS. In the East, Illinois and Oklahoma.

Chairman WALSH. How was that determined? Who determined for the union?

Mr. BROOKS. The conditions were such that the operators could not get the cars in, I guess, and they would not have cars to load the coal in; and because whenever we were working regularly we were called out a certain season of the year, and there we would lose from one to three months.

Chairman WALSH. You mean when you were on strike?

Mr. BROOKS. On suspension and not on strike.

Chairman WALSH. Suspended while agreements were being made?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any other objection to it?

Mr. BROOKS. The other objection is that it seemed to me there were a lot of us keeping up just a few, I mean keeping them in a good position and making them wealthy, and the rest of us go lacking; that is another objection I had to it. There were so many different ways you could get shed of your money, through the union, that I naturally didn't care to belong to it.

Chairman WALSH. How do your wages here compare with what you received in the other States in which you worked under union conditions?

Mr. BROOKS. They are better here.

Chairman WALSH. How much better?

Mr. BROOKS. For instance, we get from $2.58 to $2.78 for driving like we did in the East, and the least I ever got since I have been here in this State is $3.08 up to $3.10 or $3.20.

Chairman WALSH. Is that the highest you have earned any place?

Mr. BROOKS. Three dollars and eight cents is the highest—is higher than I ever earned anywhere where there was the union.

Chairman WALSH. Have you earned higher wages any place for that work?

Mr. BROOKS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Are you satisfied with the conditions under which you are working now?

Mr. BROOKS. I am.

Chairman WALSH. What mine are you working in?

Mr. BROOKS. Hastings.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have checkweighmen there?

Mr. BROOKS. We had before he quit.

Chairman WALSH. Do you desire checkweighmen?

Mr. BROOKS. It is immaterial to me; I make about the same—get about the same weights, only you get less when there is a checkweighman there, because two or three hundred pounds are taken off of it to pay him.

Chairman WALSH. Has that been your experience that you get less where there is a checkweighman?

Mr. BROOKS. I always get that 200 less, but that is to pay the checkweighman?

Chairman WALSH. That is to make up his salary?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You had no object in coming to Hastings except to get a job in the mines?

Mr. BROOKS. Just seeking employment.

Chairman WALSH. And you came here because you were not working and a strike was on here and you wanted work?

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did anybody outside ask you to come?

Mr. BROOKS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Has anyone threatened you or intimidated you against coming?

Mr. BROOKS. Only when I came, there were some strikers on the train. I could not say they was intimidating me, but the fellow with me knew their language and he said that was what they meant, but they didn't bother us, because soldiers were on the train with us.

Chairman WALSH. Did any other man come with you?

Mr. BROOKS. Six or eight came from Trinidad over to the mine.

Chairman WALSH. You were employed at Trinidad?

Mr. BROOKS. No, sir. I came out to the mines. I tried at the mines at Trinidad—at the office at Trinidad—but the company would not send anyone out.

Chairman WALSH. Have you a memorandum with you as to your earnings in the mine?

Mr. BROOKS. I have not, but I have a very good idea.

Chairman WALSH. Just detail what you have been earning since you came here, four months ago.

Mr. BROOKS. There was two or three pay days when it was under $60, and the rest of the pay days it has been from $70 to $80 or $90, and pay day comes every two weeks, so I would average from $150 to $160 a month.

Chairman WALSH. Have you been working steadily?

Mr. BROOKS. Up to three weeks ago, ever since I was there.

Chairman WALSH. What occurred at that time?

Mr. BROOKS. Just slack work.

Chairman WALSH. That is all; thank you.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JAMES KOKINAKAS.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. James Kokinakas.

Chairman WALSH. Were do you live?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Frederick, south Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived there?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. About two and one-half months.

Chairman WALSH. You are a native of what country?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I came here about six years ago.

Chairman WALSH. You are a native of what country?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Greece.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been in the country?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Twenty years.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a coal miner?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You are working now at Frederick?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. For the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you worked at Frederick?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. About two and one-half months.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you before you came to Frederick?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I came about four months ago from south Colorado at Telluride.

Chairman WALSH. Have you worked as a miner in any other State than Colorado?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes; in Utah three years.

Chairman WALSH. Any place else?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I worked at the Vulcan mine, close to Colorado Springs.

Chairman WALSH. Do you understand what the miners' union is?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I don't understand.

Chairman WALSH. Don't you understand or don't you know?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Can you understand my language, what I am saying to you?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You say you do not know what a union is?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever hear what a union was organized for?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is it for?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. 1913.

Chairman WALSH. What—did you ever belong to a union?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what I mean by the word union?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Well, what is it? Can you describe what a union is?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Well, what is it?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. It is a union.

Chairman WALSH. You have difficulty in expressing it; you have difficulty in explaining it?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You know what it is, do you?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Sure.

Chairman WALSH. You never belonged to a union?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what a union is formed for?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is it for?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. 1913.

Chairman WALSH. What is a union organized for, if you know?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you belong to a union?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Why not? Why don't you belong to the union?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I don't belong to no union.

Chairman WALSH. Why not?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I don't like it.

Chairman WALSH. What is it that you object to? Why don't you like the union?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I work all the time in the strike.

Chairman WALSH. There was a strike on in Utah all the time?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. The whole three years?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. The union was out on a strike all the time?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Why do you work when the others are on a strike?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I work at Telluride.

Chairman WALSH. Was there a strike on at Telluride during all the time you worked there?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What pay did you get at Telluride?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I worked as driver, $3.50.

Chairman WALSH. What do you get down here?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. That is in the gold mines.

Chairman WALSH. What do you get down here when you work now?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I quit work there.

Chairman WALSH. What were you getting when you quit?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. The place is too high and pretty cold.

Chairman WALSH. How did you happen to go down to Frederick?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I came down from the Vulcan mine.

Chairman WALSH. Who hired you to go to Frederick?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. I got a brother down there.

Chairman WALSH. Does he belong to the union?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever worked any place where there was not a strike going on?

Mr. KOKINAKAS. The first time in southern Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. I think that is all; thank you.

TESTIMONY OF MR. GRIGORIO GINIKIS.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. GINIKIS. Grigorio Ginikis.

Chairman WALSH. How old are you?

Mr. GINIKIS. Thirty-seven.

Chairman WALSH. Are you married or single?

Mr. GINIKIS. Married.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any children?

Mr. GINIKIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How many?

Mr. GINIKIS. Five.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Mr. GINIKIS. Valdez.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been in this country?

Mr. GINIKIS. Thirteen years.

Chairman WALSH. You are a native of what country?

Mr. GINIKIS. What?

Chairman WALSH. Where were you born?

Mr. GINIKIS. I don't understand but only a little bit.

Chairman WALSH. Are you an Italian?

Mr. GINIKIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What part of Italy did you come from, the north or the south part of Italy?

Mr. GINIKIS. I don't understand—south.

Chairman WALSH. What city did you come from in Italy?

Mr. GINIKIS. The first time? There was no city where I came from, but a small town name S. Biagio Platoni.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GINIKIS. The tent colony.

Chairman WALSH. Before you left the old country, where did you live in Italy?

Mr. GINIKIS. That is my country.

Chairman WALSH. But where did you live in Italy, did you live near Naples?

Mr. GINIKIS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a Sicilian?

Mr. GINIKIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You understand that, do you?

Mr. GINIKIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. That is your country, you are a Sicilian?

Mr. GINIKIS. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever belong to a union?

Mr. GINIKIS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what a union is?

Mr. GINIKIS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what unions are formed for? Do you know why they run?

Mr. GINIKIS. I don't understand; everyone talks to me and I don't understand.

Chairman WALSH. Do you understand the word union? Do you know what that is?

Mr. GINIKIS. I don't work in the union.

Chairman WALSH. You never did work in a union?

Mr. GINIKIS. No.

Chairman WALSH. When did you work in Pennsylvania?

Mr. GINIKIS. Three years.

Chairman WALSH. Didn't you belong to the union when you were in Pennsylvania?

Mr. GINIKIS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Whereabouts did you work in Pennsylvania?

Mr. GINIKIS. Pulling coke.

Chairman WALSH. At what place in Pennsylvania were you pulling coke?

Mr. GINIKIS. Greensburg.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you work there in Greensburg?

Mr. GINIKIS. Three and one-half years.

Chairman WALSH. How old are your children?

Mr. GINIKIS. Five. Them childs don't work at all because one is 8 years old and rest from 6 to 5 and 2 years.

Chairman WALSH. How much money do you make as a miner?

Mr. GINIKIS. I don't count it.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Dower, will you ask Mr. West if there is an Italian interpreter we can get? I do not think the witness understands my questions. Are you an American citizen?

Mr. GINIKIS. No.

Chairman WALSH. Do you vote in this country? Have you ever voted?

Mr. GINIKIS. I don't understand.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know what voting is?

Mr. GINIKIS. No.

Chairman WALSH. How old were you when you came to this country.

Mr. GINIKIS. I don't know. I don't understand.

Chairman WALSH. Just stand aside, and wait here a minute.

TESTIMONY OF JUDGE JESSE G. NORTHCUTT.

Chairman WALSH. Your name, please.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Jesse G. Northcutt.

Chairman WALSH. What is your profession?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Attorney at law.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a member of the Colorado bar?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been such?

Judge NORTHCUTT. About 25 years.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a native of this State?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What State are you from?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Illinois.

Chairman WALSH. Did you practice law before you came to this State?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. At what point?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Kansas.

Chairman WALSH. At what place?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Morton County.

Chairman WALSH. What official positions have you held in Colorado?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Colorado?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I believe I was city attorney of Trinidad for 1 year and presiding judge of the third judicial district for about 11 years, and a little over.

Chairman WALSH. Have you held any other positions?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir; none that I think of.

Chairman WALSH. At the present time, Judge, are you connected with any of these coal companies?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Which one, and in what capacity?

Judge NORTHCUTT. In regard to matters growing out of the strike, I represent the three coal companies.

Chairman WALSH. What are they?

Judge NORTHCUTT. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., the Victor-American Fuel Co., and the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been in the employ—

Judge NORTHCUTT (interrupting). I said all matters growing out of the strike. I think that was limited to the southern field.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been employed by those companies?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Since about October, 1913.

Chairman WALSH. Are you employed by each company individually or were you employed by this committee I have heard spoken of here that has representatives in those three companies?

Judge NORTHCUTT. By the committee.

Chairman WALSH. Prior to that time you were practicing law where?

Judge NORTHCUTT. At Trinidad.

Chairman WALSH. How long had you been off of the bench at that time?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I resigned the 1st day of April, 1906.

Chairman WALSH. And at the time of your employment were you in private practice at Trinidad?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir; and am yet.

Chairman WALSH. Are you also engaged in the publication of newspapers?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What papers are you the owner of, or what relation do you bear to them?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I am president of the corporation, the Chronicle-News Publishing Co., which publishes the Chronicle-News, an evening paper, and the Trinidad Advertiser, a morning paper; and I own a majority of the stock in that corporation, practically all of it.

Chairman WALSH. Any other newspapers?

Judge NORTHCUTT. A weekly paper. Well, that same corporation publishes two other papers, for which it is paid a compensation, but has no interest whatever in the papers.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have anything to do with the editorial policy of the papers?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Not of the other two.

Chairman WALSH. Or of their financial policy?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I take it, the first one you are practically the owner and editor of that paper?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You dictate its editorial policy and manage its business?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes. I do not write the editorials, but if there is any change to be made I am consulted about it. Mr. Winsor is the editor of the paper.

Chairman WALSH. State what part you took as attorney for the operators as to the importation of arms down there, if any.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know of any that I took.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have anything whatever to do with having arms shipped into the southern country for any of those four companies?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think not, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were any of them shipped through your newspaper office?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think not. I think I know what you have in mind, and I will tell you all I know about it. There was an incident took place while I was absent. The first I ever knew or heard of it was during the congressional investigation. It was then testified to by a witness who used to work in the newspaper office that upon a certain occasion—I think it was toward the early part of October, 1913—a package of guns was brought to my office, or rather he testified that he saw them being carried out of my office across the hall and through the newspaper room downstairs. At the time this took place I was away; I was attending court over in Huerfano County. After the testimony of this witness I asked some of the boys, one of the clerks in my office, about it, and he said it was true, that upon one occasion a package of guns was brought to the office. When he found out what they were he began to make inquiries to ascertain whose they were and what was to be done with them. I think he called at the sheriff's office. Whether these guns were sent to the sheriff in my care I don't know; in fact, I don't know how it was that they were sent to my office. I never did learn and don't know to-day. At all events, they were shipped from my office to Ludlow, where the sheriff there had sent or was sending a number of deputy sheriffs to protect the railroad property at that point and likewise to protect the people who were going from Ludlow to the mining camps, or vice versa, from the camps to Ludlow.

Chairman WALSH. Who was the sheriff of Las Animas County?

Judge NORTHCUTT. James S. Grisham.

Chairman WALSH. Is he still the sheriff there?

Judge NORTHCUTT. He is and will be until the second Tuesday in January.

Chairman WALSH. What were the social and political conditions in the mining camps of Las Animas County preceding the strike, as to the form of elections and the carrying on of government in a democratic form? I am asking the question in that particular way because you have probably been over it before, and I would like to have you describe it in your own way.

Judge NORTHCUTT. You mean, generally speaking, what were the political conditions and privileges in the mining camps?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; in that county.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think they are very much the same as they are in any other place, particularly for the last two years. I may say that there has been a great deal of talk by people adversely interested about the political conditions down there; that is, the papers representing political parties adverse to the party in power in that county have said a great deal about political slavery and the denial of political rights, and so forth. It has been from time to time charged in contests which were filed that the people in that county did not vote their sentiments, that they were controlled by the corporations, that the corporations voted their men like slaves, and so forth. They have had ample opportunity to prove those charges.

I recall, in 1909 I think it was, in the legislature here there was a contest of the senator elected from that county in 1908, and they made these very charges.

Chairman WALSH. What was the senator's name?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Barela. He has been a senator from that county ever since it has been a county, or rather ever since we have been a State.

As I say, at that time the charges were very general, very sweeping, and permitted almost any kind of proof. A trial was had and a committee appointed out of this senate. That committee was of adverse political complexion to the party whose seat was being contested, so that it gave every possible opportunity, and the testimony elicited at that trial disclosed that the elections were absolutely fair.

Chairman WALSH. When was that contest?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That was the legislature which convened in 1909. They must have taken two or three weeks to take the testimony in that case.

Chairman WALSH. Prior to two years ago did the mining companies control the political situation down there?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think not. I think probably I had better explain to you about what that situation was.

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Judge NORTHCUTT. There was a great deal of criticism pro and con. It is true that there were local politicians in that county who claimed that they personally represented the political interests of the coal companies, and through such representations for a brief period wielded a power that they could not otherwise have wielded. They claimed that the companies did a great many things which I never discovered that they did do. I think it is likely that some of these subordinate officers—I don't know that they could be called officers, but were more in the nature of agents or employees of the companies, rather—condoned the circulation of the reports which were circulated, that these parties were the representatives of the companies politically. I do not think that the managing officers of the companies ever knew anything about it. They did not even know of the policies, or complaints, more properly speaking, which existed there until their attention was called to it in the year 1912. They had heard something of the complaints; and when it was called to the attention of Mr. Welborn I think he took some pretty drastic action in directing his superintendents and managing officers to be free from any inference of participation in politics. In 1912 he was very positive, and, as I recall, promulgated an order along there that there should be no political influence, and this order was published in the papers down there, and I think it had a good, wholesome effect in checkmating the efforts of those local politicians.

Understand, my contention has always been that the only matter complained of was the assumption of power upon the part of some of the local politicians who were seeking their own personal aggrandizement. I frankly confess that is what I complained of, and my complaints were open and notorious, and I complained as bitterly of men in my own party that did it as anyone else, and I think it was stopped.

Chairman WALSH. Is Huerfano County in the judicial district over which you presided?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is it true that the coroners' juries have been for years selected by the sheriff, and consisted largely of mine employees?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know that that is true; yet it might have been true and I knew nothing of it, because I had nothing to do with any matter of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know it by general report?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir; I never heard it until I heard some one say it here the other day.

Chairman WALSH. The district clerk read a record here of 90 cases of coroners' juries, dating back through the last 10 years, and stated that the records were very imperfect, and that he did not believe he had all of them, by any means, and that 89 out of 90 found that the deceased came to his death by reason of his own carelessness. Did you notice that?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I heard it when he read it; that is the first time I ever heard of it.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a fact that no plaintiff has recovered against any of the mining companies in Huerfano County in a personal-injury case for 23 years?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know whether that is true or not. While I was on the bench for 11 years, I do not now recall any personal-injury case that was ever tried before me in that county. Here is one thing I do know that will probably throw some light on that subject: I believe we can say that a large majority of cases which are instituted against companies—or private concerns—for damages growing out of personal injuries are settled before they ever come to the trial docket.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have anything to do now, Judge, with that portion of the legal work of the company that has to do with the settlement of cases?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I represent one or two accident-insurance companies, and a clerk out of my office very frequently settled a case; or, if a damage suit is brought, I defend it.

Chairman WALSH. For these companies?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir. I do not defend all of the damage suits of these companies which I am representing here now. I do one of them in the southern field.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see the list of 25, the last 25 cases furnished to the commission the other day, that were settled by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I do not think I did; I do not recall it if I did.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know anything about the details of these settlements?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Not a thing.

Chairman WALSH. Do you say now that the control of the companies in the way you have mentioned by the subbosses or assistants has disappeared in Las Animas and Huerfano Counties since 1912?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I should say so. I do not say that they ever controlled. I have had a free pitch-in, and I think everyone else does who wants it.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a fact that up to 1912 this condition existed that is described in a speech testified about before this commission which you made at Lamar in 1912, in which you stated that a few men get together in a room some days before the convention—I will read it to you:

"Up there a few men get together in a room some days before the convention. They have already fixed up who the delegates to the convention shall be. They have probably given the local superintendent of the mines the number of delegates to which that community will be entitled. They do not tell him whom to bring. He knows he is to select a certain number of delegates who are to come in and follow the dictation of a single man, whose name is given to them before they leave. He goes around and picks out Jim Archuleta and some others, and says to them, 'I want you to go down to a convention to-morrow, down to Trinidad to a convention, and you see Mr. So-and-so and do as he tells you,' knowing that these delegates will come in and do as they are told—a meeting of four or five leaders is held and they proceed to make the slate: 'We will take for county clerk so-and-so; he is a good man for the purpose.' Some other man says, 'But still, I think probably sometime within the last 8 or 10 months he had some trouble with some pit boss,' and there is just a suspicion if the company likes him. He isn't right with the company and they don't want him; he goes off the slate. And so it is from bottom to top. The candidates are selected, not with a view to their fitness, not with a view to their ability to discharge their duty, not with a view to their integrity, but 'are they satisfactory to the company?'" Was that the way it was done before the attention of Mr. Welborn was called to it in 1912, Judge?

Judge NORTHCUTT. For a brief period of time, yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was it you that called his attention to it?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I do not recall that I talked with him on the subject.

Chairman WALSH. You made this speech at Lamar, did you?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And that was true until 1912, until the fall of 1912?

Judge NORTHCUTT. It was true previous to that time; just how long I can not say.

Chairman WALSH. How long would you say that condition of affairs existed?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I should not like to guess at it.

Chairman WALSH. Was it for a number of years, or for a few years, or how long?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I would say a few years.

Chairman WALSH. Did it exist while you were judge down there?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir; at least, if it did, I did not know it. I must say this to you, that while on the bench I took absolutely no part in politics. I did not even attend the primaries.

Chairman WALSH. Did they, while that state of affairs existed, control the judicial as well as the legislative branch of the Government, so far as that part of the country was concerned?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't think they ever controlled the judicial, and I don't know that they ever controlled the legislative branch.

Chairman WALSH. I read again from this speech of yours:

"And so it is from bottom to top, the candidates are selected, not with a view to their fitness, not with a view to their ability to discharge their duty, not with a view to their integrity, but 'Are they satisfactory to the company.' If they are, that settles it. And they have a majority of your conventions, and when they come to select delegates they select them in the same way. They send them in there to nominate, regardless of your wishes, for the office of district judge or State senator, the man whom the companies want, and if you don't like it you will have to take it."

Is that correct?

Judge NORTHCUTT. It was correct at that time or I would not have said it.

Chairman WALSH. They controlled the judges and the election of State senator, and if the people did not like it they had to take it anyway?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I did not say they controlled the judges; I said they controlled the nomination of the judges.

Chairman WALSH. When reading, "They send them in there to nominate, regardless of your wishes, for the office of district judge or State senator the man whom the companies want." Now, was there also a species of terrorism at that time in that community exercised over professional men and others who might go against the expressed will of the mining companies? I had better read you that. You are quoted further as saying:

"You have got a case, and we will go into it for you, and we will recover for you if we have to fight it to the court of last resort in the land"—

That is referring to some candidate—

"Most of the lawyers are afraid to do that because they are afraid the company will blacklist them and be against them politically and every other way."

Judge NORTHCUTT. I said the lawyers were afraid of them, but that does not necessarily follow that the companies caused it. I have no doubt but what a great many of the lawyers down there were and I don't know but what they are yet, unfortunately. We often find lawyers who have not the courage of their convictions, and I apprehend you have observed them in your own town.

Chairman WALSH. You are quoted as saying: "Most of the lawyers are afraid to do that."

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think that was correct.

Chairman WALSH. That most of the lawyers are afraid to go into a court and demand justice for an injured man for fear that they would be blacklisted?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That was the fault of the lawyer and not of the company.

Chairman WALSH. The lawyer, you think, was mistaken about that and his fears were unfounded?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I sued them years ago.

Chairman WALSH. On 11 different personal injury cases in that county?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long ago.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Let me see, I think that suit was instituted—those suits rather, or actions at law properly speaking—some time in the year 1911.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you made that speech in the fall of 1912, did you, in the campaign?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you connected with the companies at that time?

Judge NORTH CUTT. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And that was true up until the time you said it at least?

Judge NORTH CUTT. Undoubtedly.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, there was no election until 1914, was there?

Judge NORTH CUTT. Yes; there was an election that year, in 1912.

Chairman WALSH. That was a campaign speech in the campaign of 1912, but that was going on at that time, that they were exercising that sort of domination or attempting to?

Judge NORTH CUTT. I don't know that they were at that time. We got a very square deal at that time and elected our man at that election.

Chairman WALSH. Then there has been only one election since?

Judge NORTH CUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You have observed the results of that election, have you?

Judge NORTH CUTT. Yes, sir; in a cursory way.

Chairman WALSH. Now, some precincts down there—as I understand it, whole precincts were inclosed during this election with a barbed wire fence, and they had what they called "closed precincts"?

Judge NORTH CUTT. I can not now recall any precincts which was inclosed by a barbed wire fence in Las Animas County. I do not say it is not true because I don't know. I do know that there is one precinct, or one mine up in a canyon, and across the mouth of the canyon—in the mouth of the canyon or across the canyon just below the mine, there is a fence and that comes more nearly to being inclosed than any other I know of. I don't know of any in Huerfano County. I have been at some of those mines but not all.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed how the citizens of those closed camps vote in a general way?

Judge NORTH CUTT. I have observed how they vote by looking at the returns.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed in the last election that the vote in those camps was overwhelmingly one way?

Judge NORTH CUTT. Yes; and it is a most natural thing that it should be.

Chairman WALSH. You may make any explanation you want to.

Judge NORTH CUTT. On that subject of closed camps, about which there has been so much said, I wish to make this observation, that many of the mining camps are built where there was nothing until the mine was opened; there was no settlement in that immediate neighborhood and probably not for miles around. There might likely be here and there a ranchman living far apart, or ranchmen living far apart, but when the mine was opened by driving a tunnel or sinking a shaft, and it was brought up to the point of operation and many men were employed, a little village grew up and there were no interests there excepting the mining interests and everybody there had to be and was in some way connected with the operation of the mine or waiting on the people who were operating the mine. So that accounts for there being no one else at those places except the people interested in the mine, because there was nothing else to do.

Now, as to the vote this fall. You can understand very readily that there was one issue in the election last fall, and that was: Shall law and order prevail and men be permitted to pursue their daily avocations as they please, free and unhampered; or shall the State be handed over to the United Mine Workers of America and we be required to go to them if we want to follow a particular vocation? This is not buncombe, but it is the absolute truth. The men in those mining camps realized—they felt, whether it is true or not—they felt that the men in the tent colonies were their personal enemies and that if they got up into the mines there would be a fight and that they who were working in the mines would be driven out, if not killed. They also believed, whether it was true or not, that if a certain ticket were elected that it meant that they would be forced to either leave the mines or work with the men who had been trying to kill them. In other words, they were led to believe—I do not know by what process, but they undoubtedly believed it, from their own expressions—that it meant success of the union if the Democratic ticket were elected, but that if the Republican ticket were elected the strike would stop and they would be permitted to pursue their avocation as they pleased; and that is the reason, in my judgment, why—and I think a great many of the miners will tell you that is the reason why they voted the Republican ticket.

Chairman WALSH. Now, previous to this election what was your observation? Was it or was it not that the mining camps practically voted solidly for the same candidate?

Judge NORTH CUTT. Not on all occasions.

Chairman WALSH. Was that usually the case?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I do not know that I would say usually. This must be borne in mind that men working at a particular vocation, where they are under one supervision, as a rule prefer to vote for what they believe to be their employers' interest. I think that is a general proposition.

Chairman WALSH. That the men usually vote for what they believe to be their employers' interest?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes; because they believe that to be their own interest, and I think that is correct.

Chairman WALSH. That is, they believe there is an identity of interest between themselves and their employer. Do you think that is correct?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you think that accounts for the fact that they have voted solidly in some instances in the mining camps heretofore, and that that is the reason they voted solidly this time?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That is not the sole reason, perhaps. It is not the reason this time—they were figuring strictly on themselves.

Chairman WALSH. You think they voted strictly in their own interests?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir; for the success of the Democratic ticket meant this time that they would be out of work and the striking miners would go back.

Chairman WALSH. And they would lose their places?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes. I think as a rule men that are working for another, if they are on good relations and the terms of their employment are pleasant, desire to please their boss; and if they know how he is going to vote, as a rule, they will vote that way. Some are different and have politics of their own and vote of their own volition.

I want to call your attention to the election of 1912, as speaking of their all voting one way. Take the camps of Hastings and Delagua, they were pretty much split up. There was not a straight ticket voted, apparently, for anyone. On the district judge in one of those camps they were divided equally, as I recall, 88 to 88; there was only a small majority for the Republican district judge. Both of those camps have a presidential elector and, I think, gave a pretty nearly solid vote for Mr. Osgood, who was at that time a candidate for presidential elector.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. John C. Osgood?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes; indicating there was no very bitter feeling existing between his men and him, as many parties testifying here would have this commission believe.

Chairman WALSH. You do not believe, as a rule, that in the last election or in the elections prior thereto any operator was—or that influence was exercised upon the men to have them vote their way?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I never have known it.

Chairman WALSH. You had at this time submitted certain proposed amendments to the constitution of the State, I think?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And certain laws that were referred to a vote of the people?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. One of them was known, I believe, as section 11 and was described upon the ballot—see if I can quote it right from memory—to relieve employees of the burden of assuming the risk of injuries to their persons and lives. Do you recall that?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That is substantially—

Chairman WALSH. That is substantially the way it appeared upon the ballot?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you notice that in, I think Hastings, I will not be sure, that the vote showed that 100 of these employees voted to assume that risk themselves, or place it upon their families in case of death, while something like six or seven voted the other way?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I had not noticed that, but I am not at all surprised, and my view of it is this:

A good many of the people have not sufficiently studied into that subject to understand just how to vote on those referred or initiated bills. They are not really certain whether "yes" means that the bill carried, or "no" would mean that it would carry. But this year in particular we had a great many initiated bills and referred bills; and a great many people advocated the negative vote on all of them. Some of the campaign speakers in their speeches advised the people to vote "no" on all these amendments. Other parties, interested in a particular measure, would advise everybody to vote in the affirmative on that measure, and "no" on everything else. I recall a great many people who were supporting the amendment on what was familiarly known as the "wet and dry" proposition who advised their friends to vote "yes" on number 2—I think that was the number of it—and "no" on everything else. So through that county in particular I think the votes were very largely negative on all those amendments. I have not examined it myself and don't know, but the chances are you will find it so—I will venture the assertion you will find the negative vote or every amendment in that precinct to which you have alluded was very large; and it is very possible that these men did not particularly understand the nature of the resolution on which they were voting. Likely no one had explained it to them.

-Chairman WALSH. Did you pay any attention to the situation so far as the swearing in of deputies was concerned prior to the time you were employed by these companies in October?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Not particularly. I had no occasion to.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know now how many deputy sheriffs were sworn in in Las Animas County?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I do not; but on that subject I wish to make an observation.

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Judge NORTHCUTT. The sheriff has talked to me about it. He did even previous to this strike. In that county I think there are about 50 precincts. I am not certain of the number, but that is not far from right. There are usually from one to three deputies in each precinct, and one, perhaps, moves out, or for other reasons another is appointed to take his place, and they are then reappointed when their year expires—the time for which they were appointed expires. Or if they have any special work to do, they are appointed for that. These things combined account largely for the apparent excess of deputies or large number of deputies in that county. Then often these deputyships are given out as a badge of confidence or respect, the party not expecting to do anything for it, but wishing to carry the deputyship as a compliment.

Then, again, just previous to the strike in each of those counties a great many people who lived in the valleys up the rivers, fearing the consequences of the turbulence which would follow the calling of the strike, asked for deputy's commissions to be enabled to carry guns for their own protection. They did not want to be in daily violation of the law, but wanted to carry the gun just the same, and would get a deputy's commission for that purpose. Why, I know of this, one of those sheriffs, I don't know which, I rather think it was the sheriff of Huerfano County, spoke to me on the subject one day and wanted to know what his liability would be with parties of that character, and I told him what I thought his liability might be, and suggested that we had a statute which permitted the mayors of cities or sheriffs of the counties to grant permission to persons, in their discretion, to carry, concealed on their person, firearms. After this was explained, I gave him a form of appointment which he had printed; and I think the sheriff of each of those counties thereafter used a great many of them, which stopped the necessity of appointing deputies for that purpose.

While on that subject some one testified here a few days ago that the sheriff of Las Animas County—and likely he applied this to both—was in the habit of signing deputy sheriff's commissions in blank and placing them in the hands of the mine operators to be used as they saw fit. The sheriff of Las Animas County tells me that that is not true, that he never did that; and he called my attention to the fact that many of the commissions which he had issued had been just as I have stated, for the purpose of letting the parties carry guns, and some of them complimentary.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of any instance where the sheriff of your county appointed deputies and sent them to the mines, there to be detailed under orders of the superintendent of the mine?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know of any such an instance, but I would see no impropriety in it.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I am just asking you regarding it.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Possibly.

Chairman WALSH. I am not characterizing it, but simply asking as to the fact.

Judge NORTHCUTT. May possibly have been done, but I don't know of it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know anything about bringing arms into the district for the coal operators except the one instance to which you have already testified, where you heard afterwards they came through your newspaper office?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No. All I know about it was what I have heard testified from time to time.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Northcutt, we intended to call Mr. Brown, who was on this committee, and he sent word that those matters that he would desire to testify about he would prefer just to have you testify about. So I suppose you have talked to him, and if there is anything that you think would enlighten the commission that you would like to submit I wish you would submit it in your own way. You see the trend of the examination and you know what would be germane to our investigation.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Unfortunately I have not talked to him and do not know just what he would want to say, but if any of the commissioners know what they want to ask me and will let me know I will testify to it if I know it.

Chairman WALSH. With what company is Mr. Brown connected?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.

Chairman WALSH. And where is its general office?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Denver.

Chairman WALSH. Where are its mines located?

Judge NORTHCUTT. It has a number of mines in the northern part of the State. It bought out some years ago the Northern Coal & Coke Co. It has mines in Boulder County and possibly somewhere—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Do you know what the capitalization is?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I had not finished. It has some mines also in the southern field, and I think has a mine in Garfield County and one or two in Huerfano County, and at least two in Las Animas County. I do not recall its capitalization, but that will be furnished you if you wish for it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what its bonded indebtedness is?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Please furnish me the capitalization and indebtedness of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.

Judge NORTHCUTT. That will be done. I will make a note of it—the bonded indebtedness and the capitalization.

(See Northcutt exhibit.)

Chairman WALSH. How many mines does that company operate?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, I could not state without counting them up; quite a number.

Chairman WALSH. About how many?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Oh, I should say—it must be in the neighborhood of 10 or 12. Understand, that is purely a guess, and I do not want to be bound by it.

Chairman WALSH. What is the size of the company and the production of the company compared with that of the Victor-American and that of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know, but that can be furnished. In fact, I think that is already in evidence in the congressional investigation.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know the number of miners in the employ of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I do not. That is likewise to be found there. It has all been testified to.

Chairman WALSH. Gen. Chase, when he was on the witness stand the other day, stated that you had called him up a great number of times and proffered advice with reference to his action in the field. Is that correct?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir. I appreciate your calling my attention to that. I regret that the circumstances require me to differ from Gen. Chase on that proposition. It is all the more regrettable by reason of the fact that he knows the statement is not true, and his departure from the facts is deliberate.

I had three very brief interviews with Gen. Chase. The first was the morning he arrived at Trinidad. I do not now recall the object of the visit. On my part it was largely a matter of courtesy. Mr. Weitzel was with me; he had some maps or something to give him. The second visit was that night, the first night in Trinidad, in which I went in company with W. J. Murray and George T. Pirt to inform him of the terror-stricken condition that had been reported from Aguilar, with a request to send a detachment of troops there. He declined to do so. The interview was very brief.

The next night, which was his second night there, I visited him in company with Mr. Weitzel, Mr. Murray, Mr. Pirt, and Senator Hayden. He had called for the first three parties mentioned, as I understood, to advise them of his program or policy which he intended to pursue. They requested me and Senator Hayden to go along. Senator Hayden was cooperating with me as one of the attorneys in the southern field—under the same employment. We went along, and Gen. Chase explained to us when we came in that it was his intention to go the next morning up into Berwind and Delagua Canyons and disarm the deputy sheriffs and guards and send them down the canyon. That, as I recall, was substantially his language; that from there he was going to some other place—I think up the river—and disarm the guards and deputy sheriffs and send them down the river; that following that—which would be Friday morning, I believe, likely later—he was going to the Ludlow tent colony and disarm the strikers. After he had stated his plan, he said, "I hope it is satisfactory." I said to him it was not satisfactory and gave him my reasons why I did not think it was; and I do not assume that it would be enlightening to the committee to indulge further in that conversation. Suffice it to say that the general and I differed in these interviews on every proposition that arose. Finding him pettish and whimsical, I mentally concluded to have nothing more to do with him, and I did not have anything more to do with him, and I do not expect to.

Chairman WALSH. So you had only three interviews with him altogether?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And those you have detailed?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you did not, then, of course, keep persistently after him with suggestions as to how to run—

Judge NORTHCUTT (interrupting). No, sir; and he knows I did not.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know Mr. Albert C. Felts of the Baldwin-Felts Detective Agency?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any conversations with him while he was down there?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I dare say I did.

Chairman WALSH. Did you give him any instructions as to how he was to proceed?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know as to instructions. Probably advised—certainly advised with him from time to time.

Chairman WALSH. Did he have an office in Trinidad?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't think so.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know anything about his employment of detectives or officers or employees to do guard duty in the field?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I do not. But let me observe that Mr. Felts has testified very extensively upon that subject. His testimony will be found in part one, I think it is, of the congressional committee record. It is there and I don't now recall that his testimony is disputed on a single item by anyone who was in a position to have any personal knowledge of the facts about which he testified.

Chairman WALSH. Well, do you have any personal knowledge of the facts about which Mr. Felts testified, Judge?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I might have on some of them.

Chairman WALSH. Well, do you know what means, if any, he took to know the character of the men he employed as guards?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Only from what he has said; no personal knowledge. I don't think he employed men as guards, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Well, what did he employ them for? To do what?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think he had a few of his own men there in a supervisory capacity to look after the interests of the company. My recollection is that he had only about six or seven of his own men in the southern field, though I do not want to be positive about that. The record will show.

Chairman WALSH. Was martial law declared in that district at any time, or proclamation made by the governor or legislature to the effect that there was insurrection existing in the south Colorado field?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't recall any proclamation. I have read the governor's order calling out the troops, but it has been a good while ago, and I do not recall the exact language of it. I do not believe that he expressly declared martial law; but it is quite probable that the order recites that it was made to appear to him that an insurrection or a riotous condition existed. However, the order will speak for itself; I presume you have it in evidence.

Chairman WALSH. Did you attend the hearings at any time of the military commission presided over by Maj. Boughton?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You were never present?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Not that I recall.

Chairman WALSH. Did you observe that the militia, after that commission was organized, used an automobile belonging to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., in which to arrest striking miners and other persons that they claimed were impeding the militia?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, I don't know that I made any observation on that subject. I don't think it is disputed that they used the automobile belonging to the company, but I do not believe the purpose which you have attributed to it in your question was ever admitted.

Chairman WALSH. What purpose was that?

Judge NORTHCUTT. The purpose of arresting striking miners.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I do not say for the sole purpose; but Maj. Boughton said that the men that were arrested were brought before the commission, as I remember it, in this automobile; that they had some distance to go out in the various places where they were arrested, and they were hauled in in this machine. That is the only place I got it, Judge.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I didn't understand—maybe that is correct, but I didn't understand him to say people who were arrested. I understood him to be referring to persons he would send for from whom he was seeking information.

Chairman WALSH. Well, did he send soldiers for them—members of the militia?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That may be.

Chairman WALSH. And were they some of the people that were detained from, say, 30 to 55 days?

Judge NORTHCUTT. It is possible. You understand, of course, I was not on very intimate relations with the militia.

Chairman WALSH. I know; but do you draw a distinction between the arresting of a person and what took place there?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know that I do. And I don't regard the bringing in of a person to interrogate him as necessarily an arrest.

Chairman WALSH. Well, suppose the person was detained for, say, 55 days?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think where they put a person in jail, it is undoubtedly equivalent to an arrest.

Chairman WALSH. Did you hear that discussed in Trinidad—the fact that they were so brought in to the military commission?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I might have heard it. I understood they were bringing in everybody who could give them information, which I thought was a very proper thing to do.

Chairman WALSH. Well, was the fact that they were being brought in by soldiers in the automobile of the mining company a source of irritation to the men out on strike?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know that I ever heard it discussed.

Chairman WALSH. Was the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.'s automobile trucks used to haul supplies for the militia while they were in the field?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Their trucks?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; automobile trucks.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Why, if they were, I don't know anything about it. I think it is quite likely that the Colorado Supply Co. sold provisions to the troops, as did every other concern of any standing in the town.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have anything to do with the publication of the bulletins and their publicity work of the mine operators' association?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you appear before the grand jury of Las Animas County that made the findings with regard to the alleged violence and crimes committed on the members of the union mine workers?

Judge NORTHCUTT. In what capacity?

Chairman WALSH. In any capacity?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I appeared there as a witness.

Chairman WALSH. Did you appear there in any other capacity?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I notice in the bulletins issued that the findings of the grand jury with regard to the alleged violence and crimes committed by the members of the United Mine Workers of America down there—those findings, did you observe that?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No; I did not know it. I have read a great many of those bulletins, but not all of them.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a fact, as found by this grand jury, that the State laws governing mining operations in that county had been violated in many instances?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Was there a practice of espionage—

Judge NORTHCUTT (interrupting). What grand jury report is that you speak of? The Federal grand jury?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; there was a Federal grand jury there, was there not?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Not in that county; and let me modify my statement, if you are speaking of the Federal grand jury. I never did appear before it in any capacity at all.

Chairman WALSH. Where did the Federal grand jury meet?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Pueblo. Now, there was a Las Animas County grand jury.

Chairman WALSH. I may have them confused in my mind.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think you have, because I don't think our grand jury made any such report.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the report of the Federal grand jury?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Part of it; possibly all of it at the time it came out.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a fact that the companies in that locality discouraged and opposed the formation of fraternal societies, or do you know anything about that?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Why, I know only what I have heard discussed here and on the witness stand during the congressional investigation and—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Do you know anything of your own personal knowledge?

Judge NORTHCUTT. And such investigations as I made by reason of those statements.

Chairman WALSH. What did you find about it?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, I found out this: The companies never have, as I understand, discouraged the formation of fraternal societies. I think they rather approve of it, because many of those societies carry a sort of benefit insurance with them which is a benefit to their members and enables them to take care of their members in times of distress. There was a society in either Hastings or Delagua that became disrupted on account of internal dissension, and upon one occasion they were quarreling about their disputes and issues and got into a fuss, and I am advised that the officers were called in to disperse them, and they did so; and it is upon that, as I am told—it was upon that occurrence that all this talk has been made about the companies discouraging the formation of fraternal societies.

Chairman WALSH. Were you aware prior to the time this strike was called off any violations of the mining laws on the part of the mining companies?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Indeed, there are none that I now recall.

Chairman WALSH. The eight-hour law?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, the eight-hour law as we now have it, I think, took effect only about October of last year. I think the companies adopted the eight-hour law before we really had what we regarded as a binding law requiring that. That is my understanding from what I heard here. There was no reason, as I am advised or informed of, no violations of the mining laws previous to the time of the strike.

Chairman WALSH. Were there any prosecutions brought in your court during the time you were judge for alleged violation of the mining laws of the State?

Judge NORTHCUTT. None that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Did they observe the law providing that persons should not be discriminated against for joining labor unions?

Judge NORTHCUTT. So far as I know, they did.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever heard that they did black list men?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I have heard that very frequently whenever there has been a strike on; then that is talked. I never heard it talked at any other time.

Chairman WALSH. You never heard it spoken of except at a time when there was a strike?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That was talked particularly at the time of the strike of 1904, and it has been talked at this time.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Judge, is there anything else that you would like to state that you think would be enlightening to the commission which you have not touched upon?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir, your honor; there are a few matters I would like to allude to.

Chairman WALSH. Very well; and be as concise as you can.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I am going to be as concise as I can, and I realize that a great deal has been said here that can not in any way enlighten the committee. And some of it, I am forced to allude to, even though not very material, for the reason that it reflects upon the people of our community and State. And I am not going to read all these books that are here, nor even from all of them.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to say, in that connection, just state any authorities you have.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Your honor will be satisfied with any reference I make to these books. It will not be burdensome. There is one statute I want to read before I get through, and likely a sentence from another of these books, and the others are merely for the purpose of citation.

Chairman WALSH. Very well, proceed.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I am going to take the time and speak, in a cursory way and briefly, of the strikes in Colorado, because it has not been told exactly as I remember it, and this will involve the organization of the United Mine Workers of America, and what, in my judgment, constitutes the cause of the present strike and when it began, and so forth.

The United Mine Workers of America was organized in 1890. I mention that because it has been testified to here as 1893, and as an authority upon that subject I refer to the twelfth volume of Nelson's Encyclopedia, page 266.

Shortly after that organization was brought into existence, and I think it grew up out of the ashes of the Knights of Labor, strikes were started in some of the Eastern States and went from one to another, which I shall not relate.

In 1894 there was a strike on in either Ohio or Pennsylvania and the miners of Colorado went out on a strike in sympathy with those who were striking in the Eastern States. I so state it because the miners themselves told me that was the reason why they were striking. The sheriff of our county took me with him and went to visit the miners in Sopris, where they were talking of a strike, and said to them that if they would give him a statement of their grievances and the reasons why they were striking he would intercede in their behalf and endeavor to obtain some concessions from the companies; that if the companies did not grant the concessions he would not appoint any deputies to protect their property. If, on the other hand, they did grant the concessions, that they (the miners) must go to work.

They conferred upon the subject for some moments and finally came back to us and told us they had no grievance, but were striking in sympathy with their striking brethren in the East, mentioning where it was, and I don't just now recall where. We merely answered them that when the miners there settled their difficulties they would not know there was any strike in Colorado, or any miners here, and we thought they were very foolish and left them. That strike, I think, lasted about 60 days and the details of it have been given here substantially in accordance with my recollection, and I will take no further time with it.

Now, I have stated, and I reiterate, that the cause of the present strike is the effort of the United Mine Workers of America to organize the coal fields of Colorado, and I think that is given out or corroborated by their own declaration from their organization. At page 2766 of the congressional investigation is set out a constitution of this organization, and it gives, as one of its first reasons for its existence, the following:

"First. To unite in one organization, regardless of creed, color, or nationality, all workmen eligible for membership employed in and around the coal mines, coal washers, and coke ovens on the American Continent."

They have gone from State to State in pursuance of this declared purpose of their existence and have, by the methods adopted in this present strike, succeeded in incorporating within their organization practically all of the miners of the United States save and except a few in district No. 15, embracing the States of Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico. What other territory they have in that district I do not recall.

In November, 1903, a strike was called in this State, which, with varying acts, was kept in continuance for about eight or nine months. I think it ended in June, 1904. By a letter which signifies the intention of this organization to renew its strike at the earliest possible date, and I call the attention of the commission to page 356 of a report on labor disturbances in Colorado, prepared and returned by Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, and as found in No. 4765, Senate Documents III, of the Fifty-eighth Congress, made in 1905 or 1906. The citation refers to a letter written on the 2d day of June, 1904, and signed by John Mitchell, the then president of the order, L. I. Lewis, vice president, and W. B. Wilson, secretary and treasurer, who I understand is the same in identity as the person now occupying the position of Commissioner of Labor. This letter, by the way, is explaining to the miners the inability of the order to carry on the strike, and saying to them that they would have to withdraw the benefits for the future, and advising them to call a convention for the purpose in a formal manner of calling off the strike; and the letter concludes as follows:

"It is our sincere hope that all those who have participated in the struggle may be able to secure speedy employment; that they may retain their interest in the organization and prepare themselves for a more successful movement at the first favorable opportunity. It is not our intention to abandon the work of the organization in Colorado and Utah. We purpose to continue our efforts to gain the men of these fields. Very truly, yours," or "Fraternally."

That was in 1904. The only thing gained at that strike was a contract with some of the mine operators in the northern field, which was renewed in 1908 with some variation; and in 1910, on the failure to renew that contract, the strike was called in the northern fields of Colorado.

After that strike and during the year 1913, as I now recall, the subject of the conduct of that strike was before the national convention of the United Mine Workers; and in the month of July of that year a committee which had the subject under investigation reported to the national convention as follows:

"Your committee further recommends that this board indorse the management of the strike in northern Colorado and reaffirm our indorsement of said strike and pledge our continued financial support in the future and authorize the international resident officers, if in their judgment it becomes necessary for the success of the strike in northern Colorado, that they be empowered and are authorized to call out on strike any part or all of the district. The matter of outlining policies to govern the future is to be left to the discretion of the resident international officials."

This, as I say, was on the 24th day of July, 1913. I should have observed in its chronological order that some of the executive board of the mine workers were sent into this field during the summer of 1912, and at that time they determined to call this strike in Colorado for that fall, and it would have been called that fall had they not been called back to West Virginia on account of the sudden uprising at that time and at that place, which they did not expect.

It was during the fall of 1912 that Mr. Lawson, who was then an executive member or a member of the executive committee of the Democratic Party which was in a campaign, told Gov. Ammons, as he has here testified, that they intended to call the strike—he didn't know just how long it would be.

Now, following this evidence comes this report of July 24, which I have just read to you, and following that, and on August 22, 1913, there was published this notice in the International Mine Workers' Journal, or whatever they call that paper, it is their official paper—and this is found on page 14 of the operators' brief—well, strike out that reference, if you please. It is in the Congressional Record, pages 292 and 293 [reading]:

"BROTHERS: During the past year we have conducted a most aggressive organizing campaign in practically every nonunion coal field on the American Continent. In all this work we have met with a large measure of success.

"Our accomplishments in West Virginia alone exceed the expectations of the most enthusiastic among our membership. We are conducting strikes in Colorado, Vancouver Island, and elsewhere, all of which are very important. We contemplate a continued campaign in West Virginia and southern Colorado, as well as in other nonunion sections.

"In order to provide funds for carrying on this campaign we are levying an assessment of 50 cents per member for two months, during September and October. Therefore, in accordance with our laws, you are hereby officially notified that an assessment of 50 cents per member per month is levied upon each and all members of our international union for two months, beginning September 1, 1913. If each and every member will respond promptly and cheerfully, you will increasingly help bring about success in establishing the organization everywhere.

"Please send all money to William Green, international secretary-treasurer, 1101-1106 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

"Fraternally, yours,"

And this is signed by John P. White, Frank J. Hayes, and William Green, with their respective titles following the names. That is dated August 22, 1913.

I draw attention to these matters because it has been so repeatedly stated here that this strike was called by a convention of miners which convened down in Trinidad on the 15th or 16th of September, 1913. These documents which I have read, as well as the preparations which I will hereafter allude to, disclose beyond the peradventure of a doubt that the matter of calling the strike in the southern field was determined upon and all preparations made for it upon the part of the national officers before ever the convention in the southern Colorado field was called.

Not only did they send out their notices of assessment, but previous to the calling of this strike they ordered their tents from West Virginia out into the Colorado field. They bought additional tents; they bought arms and ammunition, as shown by their admission in the testimony before the congressional committee, and as was known in the city of Trinidad and talked of on the streets as early as the latter part of August and early part of the month of September, it being frequently stated that the miners were buying all the guns and have bought all the guns in town, hardware stores being stripped of them.

These tents—these tent colonies were located by them. That is to say, the places were all picked out and designated before ever the strike was called, and immediately upon the calling thereof they began to establish them; and it will be noticed on examining the map that these tent colonies were all located with a view to their strategical strength in controlling some mine or mines. To illustrate, and having reference to our own county, which is a fair illustration, the tent colony at Rugby controls the view, it controls the road, it controls the means of ingress and egress to and from the mines around that town, like Rugby mine No. 1 and Rugby mine No. 2 and the Primrose mine and others near there, and the Jewel mine as well. The Aguilar or Lynn colony is located at the mouth of the canyon in which are located the Peerless and other mines. The Ludlow tent colony, located at the station of Ludlow, where the people take or leave the trains, doing business with the mines in Berwind and Delagua Canyons, such as the Tabasco, Huerfano Coal Co. mines, Berwind, and so forth, controlling some six or eight mines, and the Tolberg, I forgot to mention. Now, the purpose of locating these tent colonies in these strategical positions is clear to any rational mind. They were located there for picket purposes, for the purpose through force perhaps and remonstrance—forcible remonstrance, as we may say, as their acts subsequently disclose—to prevent any parties going up into any of these mines to go to work. Hence I say it is an insult to the intelligence of anyone who watched this thing from its inception to contend that this strike was called by a convention of miners held in Trinidad, Colo., on the 15th of September or at any other time. It was called by the officers of this organization, and it was called for the purpose of grafting into their organization the miners of Colorado, and I am surprised that they deny it.

While on the strike subject I want to direct the attention of the committee—this is a little digression, but I want to dispose of it now and not have to return to it any more—to certain documents, Volume III, for the Fifty-eighth Congress, being Subdocument 86 and Document 126, Volume V, which give a pretty succinct and complete history of the labor disturbances in Cripple Creek. I advert to that for this reason: Senator Patterson took considerable time to explain to this committee what a terrible condition of affairs obtained up there after the militia went into the field, and how they had overridden the courts and so forth. One of the documents to which I have referred the committee will disclose the causes leading up to the advent of the militia and shows that something over 20 people had been killed and numerous buildings dynamited and mines dynamited by the organization controlling in that field before the militia was brought into the field. The militia and the courts are severely criticized for what they did at that time in the way of arresting a man by the name of Moyer; and the opinion—the majority opinion of this court—is assailed and the court is traduced for rendering the opinion. Maj. Boughton has very fully and very properly covered that subject, and has called attention to—

Chairman WALSH. I am also having Mr. Hersey brief that to the commission.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir. I refer to this case, because I want it understood that we have respect for and pride in our supreme court. We think it compares very favorably and ranks very well with the courts of last resort of the other States. Let me refer to one fact, that this opinion was approved and affirmed by an express reference thereto by the United States Supreme Court. We do not have to make any further apology for it.

Chairman WALSH. We have been furnished with the brief about that—

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, I am through on that.

Now, I guess I will return to the subject of this strike. I feel that I ought to take up the subject of violence. I am not going to tell all about it by any means, but I am going to explain some matters which have been left, in my judgment, in an improper atmosphere.

It has been probably observed by the committee—if not it is a fact anyhow—that those representing the striking miners do not deny that they began the violence after the strike was inaugurated. The only justification they offer therefor is to call attention to what they construe to be the beginning of violence; and they invariably advert to what they call the killing of organizer Lippiatt. Now, the party still stands under indictment on the charge of the murder of Gerald Lippiatt, and ordinarily it would be very improper to make any statement of facts concerning a case which has been yet undisposed of, particularly involving a charge so serious in its nature, and I do not propose now to go any further than the showing made by the State's attorney in the coroner's inquest held over the body of Jerry Lippiatt; and I think it is fair to this committee, justice to the defendant and the State of Colorado that the facts thus ascertained be disclosed, that it may be seen that this was not a murder but a justifiable homicide.

The facts as disclosed at that inquest are, briefly, as follows:

A few days previous to the 16th of August, 1913, Gerald Lippiatt, an organizer of the United Mine Workers, came from the northern field down into southern Colorado. His purposes there can be established, but not having been established at this coroner's inquest, we pass it by. But on the night in question, shortly after dark, or about dusk I should say, Mr. Belk and Mr. Belcher, now deceased, in company with others, were walking down North Commercial Street toward Elm Street on the right-hand side of the street, going north. As they passed a vacant building near the corner of the intersection of Commercial and Elm, and near the headquarters of the United Mine Workers, Gerald Lippiatt stepped out from the recess or door of the vacant building right behind Belk, so closely behind him that it naturally attracted his attention, and he turned to speak to him, and as he turned he brushed him with his arm. Lippiatt at once threw his hand to his pocket, saying, "Be careful what you do." Mr. Belk returned with a similar expression, "Be careful what you do." There an altercation took place, which it is not necessary to repeat, but bad language was used on both sides. Some attention was attracted, and, finally, one of the men, I think Mr. Belcher, said to Mr. Belk, "Don't quarrel with him. It is attracting attention." Lippiatt departed with this remark: "You have got your crowd with you now but I will have mine pretty soon, and then we will settle this matter," or words to that effect. He then left him and went a few doors south on Commercial Street, and there told a party who appeared before the coroner's inquest what had taken place, and declared his intention of getting him or getting even with Mr. Belk, or words in substance that.

He then left the person to whom he was talking, crossed Commercial Street, went to the Packer Block, in which were then situated the United Mine Workers' offices, and went upstairs to the readquarters. Mr. Belk and Mr. Belcher remained on the curbing near where this altercation had taken place, where quite a little crowd of people had gathered listening to the Salvation Army, which was holding its exercises in front of the Coronado Hotel, a few feet above on Commercial Street. While they were standing there listening, and probably not more than at the outside 10 minutes after this altercation had taken place and closed, Lippiatt, with five other persons, came down out of the United Mine Workers' office, came diagonally across the street to where they stood. Lippiatt drew his six-shooter and placed it against Belk's breast and began to tell him what he was going to do. Whereupon Mr. Belcher struck his pistol with his left hand and knocked it down, and as he knocked it down it was discharged and went through his leg about 6 inches above the knee. And at the same time, as he knocked it down, he jerked his pistol with his right hand and shot Mr. Lippiatt in the breast, who ran backwards still holding his pistol and apparently trying to discharge it, and was shot I think three times more, maybe oftener than that. I believe he was shot six times. And he ran backward to the middle of the street, where he fell and expired.

Those are the facts concerning the Lippiatt shooting as told by the persons who stood by him, came down out of the headquarters with him, and stood by him at the time the shooting took place. That is the first, as they claim, of the violence.

Now, this strike was inaugurated—and I am not going to go at length into these various acts of violence.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would not, because we are not going to try to determine them all, you understand. We want to go into the larger and more general features of the situation rather than to go into these particular incidents, and yet it is very good to give the details of the Lippiatt one.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I can readily understand that that throws no light on the causes leading to this disturbance and will not aid this committee in its report to detail these acts of violence. I do feel, however, as to some of them that have been so grossly misrepresented, we should make an explanation to inform—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes; you might go into what might be called the highlights of them—

Judge NORTHCUTT. I am going to get through by time for adjourning.

Chairman WALSH. Well, we prefer you would give us a few minutes more—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We might want to ask you some questions.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I am not going to take up the time that Mr. Doyle did, or Judge Lindsey in advertising himself, or many other witnesses who have testified here.

Now, upon the inauguration of the strike on the 23d day of September, 1913, violence began and it was almost daily. Within the week—eliminating now the killing of Lee, the assaults upon people began.

The Ludlow hack, I think, within a day or two was held up, and parties who were suspected of being connected with the mines who were going to work at the mines were taken out. It happened that an old gentleman, who has been up there for 30 years or more, a respected resident of Trinidad and Las Animas County, and who had been for years, and probably is yet, superintendent of the waterworks at Hastings, was going to his work on the hack, as was his wont. He, together with the superintendent of the railroad company, were taken out of the hack, made to walk back, and kept at the depot surrounded by a mob of people, indulging in the most unbecoming language until they had satisfied themselves they were not strike breakers, and then they let them go and then they walked up to the mines. This was of almost daily occurrence.

About that time two negroes came in on the train and were captured and taken off and held in the tent colony overnight, and told to wend their way and not to go to the mine. This was almost of daily occurrence, to search the trains at Ludlow and La Veta and Starkville; going through the trains the miners would ask if there were scabs, etc.

We come to October 7. I mention this because it is the initial day, I think, of the hostilities. On that morning Mother Jones and Mr. Lawson made a speech at the Ludlow tent colony, in which speech Mother Jones told the miners that they could expect guards to be out there to shoot up their tents; that if they had a spark of manhood they would go and protect their families; they would get their guns and go out and win this strike. This is the substance of the talk as related. I only related by reason of that which followed. On that very day assaults from that camp were numerous, and not on guards alone. A man by the name of Farish, I believe, who is owner of a livery stable in Hastings, the evidence shows, was coming down the road toward the tent colony with his father-in-law, mother-in-law, wife, and little child—by the way, in the narration of these particulars heretofore by the miners, it seems to me every possible effort had been made to say something of a blood-curdling nature into the record; every opportunity has been seized to do that. I do not approve of that sort of conduct, but I am permitted, by reason thereof, to suggest that in this automobile were ages from 18 months up to 35 years. This auto was attacked as it came down the road by strikers, who fired at it. The shots were numerous but fortunately no one killed, though the auto was hit several times. On that same day a grocery man by the name of Sherman was coming down the road in the discharge of his regular duties. He was fired on. And likewise on that same day an auto coming out from Trinidad on its way to Hastings, having a clerk in a store and a machinist and one or two deputy sheriffs, was fired on. Quite a battle ensued; and as it returned from Hastings it was fired on again. They brought with them some guards from Hastings, anticipating they would be fired on as they returned. In this battle a man was wounded and a horse or two killed.

Now, adverting to this particular date on account of its being the first of the opening battles and by reason of the further fact that it has been carefully detailed on the witness stand before the congressional committee by numerous witnesses on the part of the operators and the parties who were there who were attacked, and this significant fact presents itself: That notwithstanding the fact that there were probably a thousand people in that tent colony on that date, the striking miners have never presented one single person to detail what took place. They have made the charge—persons who were not there have made the charge—that the guards started the shooting, but they never have presented the eyewitnesses, and I venture the suggestion that they never will.

The statement was made here that Mack Powell was killed by the guards, and the party making the statement referred to the testimony of Mrs. Mack Powell, found in the congressional record. If you will read further in that testimony, examine the testimony of the witness on cross-examination, she places the persons whom she supposed to be the guards at the overhead bridge, which everybody conversant with the fact knows to be the place occupied by the strikers at the time Powell was killed, while the guards were at the underground crossing, half a mile below the overhead bridge.

Powell was shot in the left side and arm. The strikers were on the left of him while the guards were in his rear, and had they shot him he would have been shot in the back.

No one conversant with the facts can with any degree of sincerity contend that the guards shot Mack Powell. They never have made any complaint against anyone; never have sought to have anyone prosecuted for it. I think some of the strikers have been indicted for the murder of Mack Powell. I could relate numerous assaults, of persons being beaten, etc., covering pretty nearly each day, but I am not going to do so.

Now, coming to the battle of the 24th, which is the Seventh Street riot, I am going to explain something of that, as it has been left in a beclouded condition before the committee and in a reflective condition against our guards.

I want to say before beginning it that what took place on that day and the days immediately following indicates that the war then opened in earnest and the strikers meant to make a finished job of it, in my judgment, and they either would have finished us or the guards would have finished them had the troops not come in, because it was a position of more than open hostility, a real war.

Now, Wahlmeir, on the 24th of October and for some time prior thereto, William Wahlmeir, I think his name is, was working in the Walsen mine, which is at the westerly end of Seventh Street. Going down, living in a house owned by a man by the name of Pisarsis, on Seventh Street, about a quarter or a half a mile from the mine, the assaults and attacks of the miners became so numerous on his going to and from work that he stopped living at home and started to board at the mine, and, as heretofore related, on the night of the 23d of October a placard was placed on the door of Mrs. Wahlmeir notifying her to leave. You will remember the placard which was read here. She telephoned to the mine the next morning and the superintendent instructed some of his men to take the wagon—three wagons—and go and move the furniture down into the camp, and sent three guards—it was either three or four guards—with the wagon to protect them. They had some mission to perform at the Rio Grande depot, I think some trunks which had been improperly sent there, to move over to the C. & S. depot. The significance of this will occur.

Word was transmitted to the sheriff to send deputies to the Rio Grande depot to protect this wagon. That was done; some 10 or 15 were sent. They went there to the C. & S. depot, which is not far from the miners' tent colony in Walsenburg. While unloading the baggage there the miners began to gather around them and began to abuse them in the usual way. Some, I think, of the deputy sheriffs remonstrated with them and told them these men were attending to their business, and to please let them alone. After they concluded their work there they started to Seventh Street, going down an avenue, the name of which I have forgotten, to Sixth Street, and then crossing over to Main, and from Main down to Seventh. All this distance the crowd which gathered at the depot—and which was augmented as they went along the street—followed, hooting and jeering and cursing and telling them that they would never get back to the mine alive. Many people heard this, and it came out on the witness stand. They followed them clear to Wahlmeir's house, where they began to load the furniture. The crowd which followed gathered around them, throwing rocks and pieces of coal and old tin cans and everything that they could get hold of.

The owner of the house ordered the deputies off of his premises. They went out of his yard and stood in the alley. But they kept throwing missiles until they could not complete the load. The drivers could not hold the mules. They got what they could and started away, the crowd continually increasing. They went out of the alley onto Isadora Street, and turned to Seventh, which is half a block, when the crowd started in a run down to that corner. Just about the time they got there a man from the crowd began firing with a six-shooter. Then it was—after several minutes of throwing rocks and coal and other missiles—when the shot came—in fact several of them—from the mob—that the deputies opened fire. Before they opened fire one of the deputies was shot through the ear, and it was about this time that they fired from the deputies and several men fell.

The case was tried within the last few weeks. Now, it has been suggested that 11 Mexicans were on that jury, and while on that subject we will dispose of the jury proposition. It is true there were 10 Mexicans—11 Mexicans.

When this jury was accepted the district attorney had about 30 or 40 peremptory challenges which he might have exercised. The jury was satisfactory to him and he accepted it.

When the case was concluded by the State he made the statement that we could make any motion or offer we wanted to and he would not resist it. We went ahead and put in our evidence. At the conclusion of the trial we did not argue the case, nor did he. The court instructed the jury, as is the rule here, before argument, and the instructions were concluded and handed to the jury; the case submitted without argument, and in about a couple of hours—I think it was about noon when submitted to the jury—the jury got their luncheon and came back to the courthouse and brought in a verdict of not guilty. I think the commission will agree that the facts stated disclose a clear case of justifiable homicide. It was the duty of these deputies to quell that riot, and if they could not do it except by taking life they had to do it. The law upon the subject is that it is not only right but the duty of the sheriff or deputies to quell the riot; and they may use such force as appears to them under all the circumstances, acting as reasonable men, to suppress riots—even to the taking of human life. And in this case they fired for a higher purpose, and that was to protect their own lives.

Now, some questions were asked as to the juries and the men being on the jury who could not speak the English language. For the vindication of the State and our laws I wish to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that the country in which these two counties are embraced was a part of the Republic of Mexico up to the Mexican War, and upon the solemnization of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo that country was ceded to the United States, and the treaty reserves unto the occupants of the territory thus ceded all the rights and privileges of American citizens; and as this country was settled up by the Americans, they were for many, many years grossly in the minority—I mean the Americans, American born. And when Colorado was admitted, or organized, rather, as a Territory in 1860 and the Territory divided up into counties in many of the southern counties there were practically no people except the Mexicans. This was particularly so in Las Animas, Huerfano, Costilla, Conejos, Rio Grande, Saguache, and other counties.

And when they desired to establish the courts and establish the jury system they had to take the material from jurors which they had. They could not have obtained English-speaking people enough for several years after Colorado was organized a Territory to do the jury service. So this statute was enacted; the section is 3668, Revised Statutes of 1908. I do not know how to get this into the record properly without reading. I want this committee to know it.

"All male inhabitants of this State of the age of 21 years who are citizens of the United States, or have declared their intention to become such citizens, and who have not been convicted of a felony shall be competent to serve as grand and petit jurors in all the courts and judicial proceedings in this State."

This is particularly the part I wish to direct your attention to:

"No county commissioner, judge, or other State or county officer shall, in the selection of grand or petit jurors, or in the empaneling of petit jurors to try any cause, whether civil or criminal, discriminate against, reject, or challenge any person otherwise qualified on account of such person speaking the Spanish or Mexican language and not being able to understand the English language."

So you will observe that by statute these parties are qualified jurors.

I wish to say after about 25 years' experience with them that they are very, very good jurors. I was indeed much surprised on investigation to find the clearness and accuracy with which they remembered the testimony. It did not seem possible that parties could gather through an interpreter all of the facts and circumstances of a cause as related to them and as though it came first hand in the language of the person narrating it. And I recall particularly in a civil case at one time, which I thought was a rather intricate case, talking with the jurors after the cause was over, Mexican jurors, who could not understand any English, as to their reasons for returning the verdict that they did, and I was surprised to find them mentioning the names of various witnesses who testified, relate what they had testified and what their estimate of the credibility of the witnesses was and the weight of the testimony as given. So my mind was then disabused of any idea that we were not getting good jury service from those jurors.

I think it is the chairman who asked some question yesterday as to who appointed the interpreter, etc., and whether or not the accused had any voice in the appointing of the interpreter. The court, of course, appoints the interpreter, as he does his clerk, bailiff, etc.

Chairman WALSH. Is he a regular attaché of the court?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. The same one all the time?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir; and he is usually appointed for his skill in each of the two languages, and the court usually tries to get a man of undoubted integrity. But if the interpreter wanted to be wrong in his interpretations, there are almost invariably numerous people in attendance upon the court who understand both languages; and if he should make an error he would be very quickly corrected in it. I have heard, through inadvertence, errors made, and some party immediately call attention to it. I do not think any prejudice has ever resulted through that particular matter. Besides, if a person, if the accused objects to the official interpreter and the objection seems well taken, the court for that particular case will appoint another interpreter, the official interpreter, of course, remaining to see that no imposition is inflicted upon the court.

On that subject of juries I think I ought to direct attention to the manner of selection of juries and the disqualification of the jurors.

In the congressional investigation, and it has been reiterated here, attention was directed to some person tried some years ago in which there were 11 Mexican jurors and 1 American, and some person prognosticated what the verdict would be before the case was tried.

On cross-examination of the party who testified to that it was disclosed that he did not know anything about the case, had no interest in the case, did not know any of the parties, and why the party had previously predicted the result of the verdict might have been that he knew the facts, and knowing that he would be certain of the verdict that ought to have followed that state of facts—nothing to that.

Now, as to the manner of getting the jury list in Huerfano County, our statute provides that for the purpose of obtaining juries the treasurer shall from time to time be requested to furnish to the board of county commissioners an alphabetical list of the names of taxpayers. The board of county commissioners select from this list, so furnished, in a county in the class of Huerfano, 300 names. They are written on slips of paper and deposited in a box. When a jury is to be called the clerk calls to his office the sheriff, and in the presence of the sheriff draws 24 names at random from this box.

Now, in Huerfano County, the number of taxpayers was figured up, calculated, and testified to in the congressional investigation. I do not now recall the number, after deductions, after examinations, age limit, etc., nonresidents, it left, as I recall, only about 1,100 persons subject to jury service. And when you took 300 names out, they were served and thrown back, it only takes about three drawings to exhaust the list, so, of course, when you begin again you are going to get some of the same old list.

This is just a general charge they make about professional jurors, etc. And yet, I think, it is significant and ought to be to the committee, they have not pointed to a single case in which they have even charged a miscarriage of justice.

I believe they call attention to the case of People against Miller, in which they say Miller struck a union man and broke his jaw. And on the jury upon the trial of that case there were seven deputy sheriffs.

Now, the district attorney had the opportunity to interrogate these jurors on their voir dire, and if it appeared that one was a deputy sheriff or otherwise, so interested to be an unfair juror, he could have excused him. The record in that case shows that he did not exercise a single peremptory challenge. So I don't think their objections are well founded. Nor are their criticisms just.

The charge has been made here that the coal companies own them, have owned the district attorneys and the judges, etc.

The man who is now on the bench was elected in 1912, was for eight years prior thereto district attorney. Now, so far as controlling him by the coal companies, while he was district attorney every time he was nominated he was nominated over the objection of the coal companies. Many people do not know this, but I happen to know it. It is a fact. When he was elected judge he was elected over the objection of the coal companies. I say objection. I mean by that he was not satisfactory to them. The man who had been on the bench made a pretty fair record and he was satisfactory. And those who were handling the party down there wanted him. So it does not stand to reason that the man who has never received even the friendly political cooperation of the companies would be owned by those companies. And the present district attorney can not be said to be unfriendly to the strikers. We feel that he is entirely too friendly to them, though we charge not the slightest corruption or impropriety in his conduct.

And also they make the charge, while on that subject, that what is the use to exhaust the regular panel by your challenges and ask for other jurors? The sheriff will go out and bring in parties who are unfriendly. That charge is unfounded for this reason: Under our statutes any party to a litigation may by affidavit charge the prejudice of the sheriff and the court is required, the statute is mandatory to remove him, handing the process for that trial to the coroner, and if the coroner is disqualified then the court appoints an elisor, under the old practice.

Now, I think that is all I care to say relative to the courts and juries unless there is some question which some member of the commission desires to ask.

Going back now, not to lose much time on it, however, to the matter of violence and beginning were we digressed.

As previously stated, on the 24th riots occurred on Seventh Street in Wal-senburg.

On the 25th the fights started down at Ludlow, very much as detailed by Lieut. Linderfelt while on the stand. I think his narration of it is about the most exact that I have yet heard come from the witness stand. Without dwelling on this subject, let me observe that on the 25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th a distinct and separate battle occurred; on the 25th, 26th, and 28th at least one man was killed for each battle.

All of these disturbances were by phone and wire continually poured upon the governor. The governor did not respond in the way of calling out the troops until the end of the four days' battle, when he sent the troops. And as a justification for the advent of the troops into the field, and it is unanswerable, that while there had been continual disturbance, battle after battle, destruction of property by dynamite and burning, and many lives lost before the troops came in, after they came in, as I now recall, there was not a single loss of life attributable to the strike, until they were practically all taken out of the field. The people of Trinidad and Las Animas County could sleep in peace after the troops came, which they had not done a single night prior thereto, after the calling of the strike. And so it seems to be pretty clear, to my mind, that the military arm is still necessary in our social existence, and its being brought into service often performs the same salutary and wholesome purpose that a surgical operation, timely and properly executed, does. And certainly it did in this case.

I might give in detail the various crimes that took place at that time, but I do not believe it would especially enlighten the committee.

I do, however, wish to call the attention of all the members to what appears to me to be a reason why this organization could not be a particularly attractive partner with which to deal; that is, their infidelity and disinclination to respond to favors shown.

It is a fact well known that previous to calling of the troops in the field, the strike leaders had the ear of the governor. We felt at the time, and we yet feel that the governor ought to have sent troops into the field upon the very first indication of violence. And we feel that had he done so, and sent them there without restrictions, sent them there with instructions to restore order, preserve peace, and enforce laws, that all of this violence would have been averted. I see no good reason why he should not. The fact that there was no killing after they went there is sufficient evidence of the correctness of my assertion.

When the troops came there they were maudlinly favorable to the strikers. That fact is evident from the manner in which Gen. Chase started out to disarm the people under arms. He first went to Huerfano County to disarm the sheriff and his deputies of that county, stating as his reason therefor that the strikers seemed particularly bitter to the sheriff of Huerfano County, and therefore he was going to disarm him first. Stating also that after he disarmed all of the guards in Las Animas County that he was then going up to Ludlow to disarm the strikers, observing that Mr. Lawson had promised that if he would first disarm the guards that he would look to it that all the strikers surrendered their guns. So, with great demonstration, the general at the appointed time took his army up to Ludlow to receive the arms of the strikers, and, to his great humiliation, I should say, and chagrin, they brought out, as I was told at the time, 12 guns and a miniature popgun, and he very narrowly escaped the appellation of "Popgun Chase." This was an abuse of the confidence which had been bestowed upon him particularly and all the way, and when in all the transactions up to that time they had received favors of the executive branch of the State and of the military arm. They showed their appreciation of it by condemning the governor, and continuing to condemn him the minute they failed to get every whimsical demand that they made from him. And Gen. Chase's conduct, notwithstanding his very kindly treatment of them, has been maligned by them ever since. I presume they will continue.

Now, I think I have disposed of the political question unless your honors care to ask some further questions. I think of nothing further on the matter of courts and juries.

On the matter of politics, I am going to say another word on a matter that I had forgotten. A great deal has been said about the participation of the coal companies in politics, and nothing said about the participation of this union in politics. It will only take a few minutes.

Chairman WALSH. We will wait.

Judge NORTHCUTT. For more than two years the United Mine Workers of America, through its officers, have been making efforts, aggressive efforts, to control the politics of the State of Colorado, and up to last fall they pretty nearly did it. In pursuance of their scheme to control the election, elect the officers of our county, they have put upon their pay rolls, or the benefit roll, many persons who never worked around any mines. They have gone out onto the farms and put ranchers on their benefit rolls and carried them for a long period up to election for the purpose of obtaining an influence over them to control them at the election. And last fall's election demonstrated the fact that their methods were very effective, indeed. In the spring election, the election held in Huerfano County last spring, they colonized the town of Walsenburg, bringing in there their union men from all over the county and other counties, so far as that is concerned, and kept them there long enough to establish a residence to vote in that election, and it was very close. They tried to control the election in both Las Animas and Huerfano Counties. I state these things to let you know these charges are absolutely true, by reason of the fact that they are now made in pleadings filed in the contest case pending in those counties there, and an issue is to be determined. In short, it is the coal company against the union. We have had some experience in this State of union-controlled counties politically. You take the county of Teller and the county of San Miguel, in 1903 and 1904, the sheriffs of those counties and the judges of the courts were elected by the miner votes. They were union-made politics, and when their difficulties arose they absolutely refused to make any attempt to enforce the law, so you are forced to the position of either taking the union-made goods, or those which you may claim are dominated by the companies; take your choice. Getting pretty near to that in Colorado. It was that way last fall. A desperate effort was made to control the State ticket on the part of the union.

I think I have explained the matter of deputy sheriffs, commissions, how they were issued, and why, etc.

Complaints have been made about militia arresting people without warrants, etc. That is fully responded to by the observation that the strikers did not seek any warrants for the persons whom they detained, and I direct your attention to the Karos boys, Kris Karos and his brother, who were working up at Tabasco, were assaulted and savagely beaten by the Ludlow colony inhabitants, taken into their tent colony there, detained until one of them got away and brought the matter to the attention of the authorities, got away on an excuse to get his trunk. And not until a writ of habeas corpus had been issued did they turn the other fellow loose. Many others might be cited, but this illustrates the point.

I have explained the matter of the Seventh Street riot.

Oh, I wish to direct your attention to the citation in our brief of the case of Hinchman Coal & Coke Co. against Mitchell, as some criticism has been brought by our citing this case which has been reversed, and that justifies the criticism if knowingly done. The preparation of this brief began about the last of May or before that. The authorities were collated, and the data arranged before the last of May, though the brief was thereafter dictated. This case about which this criticism was made, and to which we allude, was reversed and the reversing opinion promulgated on the 28th of May. Information of it never reached me until the advance sheets of the Federal Reporter came out in—later in the summer—I think about July or August I got it. It is in the Two hundred and fourteenth Federal. I have forgotten the date. However, even had I known of its reversal, I should have considered the case, calling attention to the reversal, of course, and would have cited it for its reasoning force. I think it undoubtedly was good law up until the time that the court of appeals reversed it.

One other matter, I think, ought to be called to the attention of the committee.

In all of this talk the effort seems to be to find who was right or wrong between the contending parties. Scarcely anything is said about the man at work. When this strike took effect, as has been heretofore testified, about 40 per cent of the men remained at work. I may be wrong as to the number. Other accessions thereto were added from time to time.

Now, a settlement of this strike at any time after it was called would mingle the two conflicting elements; the men who remained at work evidently did not want to do any different. If they had wanted to go, they had an opportunity. As they did not go, presumably friction would have resulted if you had attempted to put the two together. No fair-minded man is going to drive out one man equally qualified to give the place to another, particularly when one is friendly and the other antagonistic.

Much might be said on that subject, but I will leave it for the ingenuity of the committee to study it out.

They had a party on the stand this morning who read many affidavits and copies of affidavits. We all know the damage of hearsay testimony and of taking ex parte affidavits. These parties making affidavits, most of them still exist, and if the committee will bring those parties before them and interrogate them they will find quite a different, if not an absolutely contrary, story told to that which is embodied in the affidavits.

One observation on strike matters generally, which must be pretty evident to the committee's mind, I can conclude in about five minutes, I think, unless you prefer to call me in the morning.

Chairman WALSH. All right, go ahead.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I am simply going to observe that the tendency of strikes for the last 25 years has been drifting very much, it seems to me, in the direction of rebellion in this country. I do not say that the unions universally indorse it. But certain it is that all the persons who are promulgating a certain cult detrimental to organized government invariably indorse the unions and indorse the strikes. Take this people belonging to this new cult known as syndicalism and anarchism—they invariably sympathize with the strikes, sympathize with the violence growing out of them.

I think one danger now confronting us is the temporizing manner in which all these questions are dealt with. A prompt and firm and positive enforcement of the laws now existing on our statute books will prevent much of the violence that grows out of these strikes. Laws can't be enacted to prevent strikes, any bit more than you can enact laws to prevent occasional assaults, but much remedial legislation can be enacted. I have implicit confidence in the wisdom, patriotism, and energy of the American people, her institutions and form of government, and I have no doubt but what in time, and I think in plenty of time to prevent rebellion, wise statesmen of the United States and the various States thereof will discover remedies and apply them in such a firm and telling way as to prevent that which has taken place in many other countries.

But it can not be done by these sensational and harrowing publicities that have been given to this and other similar outbreaks. And it appears to me, while on the subject of rights and remedies, that some recommendation ought to be made which will lead to legislation that will prevent the serious abuses of speech—free speech and free press that exists in this country. I do not mean to curtail free speech or publicity, but I do mean to curtail the abuse of it. And I hold in my hand a book marked, "The American Citizen," which has been given some circulation in this part of the country, and I am going to introduce it at this time in order that this committee may peruse and read it. It occurs to me that circulation of documents of this character ought not to be permitted. It advises its readers to buy guns and prepare themselves to resist the enforcement of the laws of this country.

I don't think of anything more I want to say.

Chairman WALSH. We will excuse you for the present. I want to get through with the witness to-night who has to be examined through an interpreter. One of the commissioners wants to ask you a few questions. I have none. Will you just retire for a few minutes?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

(Witness excused temporarily.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. GRIGORIO GINIKIS—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him where he was born.

The INTERPRETER. Italy.

Chairman WALSH. What place?

The INTERPRETER. Provincia Di Georcente.

Chairman WALSH. Did he receive any education in Italy? Did he go to school there?

The INTERPRETER. He says "Yes."

Chairman WALSH. Does his boy live with him?

The INTERPRETER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he ever belonged to the United Mine Workers of America?

The INTERPRETER. I never hear nobody to talk about United Mine Workers of America.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how long he has worked at the mining business—how long he has been a miner.

The INTERPRETER. He said altogether about eight years and a half.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him where he worked before he came to Colorado?

The INTERPRETER. He was working in Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. Pennsylvania?

The INTERPRETER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I think he said Greensburg—he understood that.

The INTERPRETER. Greensburg, Pa.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he knows what a union is.

The INTERPRETER. He said he heard what the word union was, but he don't know what it means.

Chairman WALSH. Did he ever belong to any society in this country?

The INTERPRETER. He says not.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he ever heard of the United Mine Workers of America.

The INTERPRETER. He says he never talked to nobody. I never hear nobody talk about United Mine Workers of America.

Chairman WALSH. Never talked to anybody?

The INTERPRETER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Does he know what the United Mine Workers of America is?

The INTERPRETER. He says he understands, but he don't belong to the union. Chairman WALSH. Ask him what he understands the organization is for.

The INTERPRETER. He don't know; he says he don't know anything.

Chairman WALSH. He don't know?

The INTERPRETER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how he happened to come to Colorado, and who, if anyone, got him to come?

The INTERPRETER. He says he come himself.

Chairman WALSH. How did he happen to find out that he might get a job here?

The INTERPRETER. He says he heard there was a lot of work.

Chairman WALSH. How did he hear—he heard there was a lot of work?

The INTERPRETER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him who told him.

The INTERPRETER. He says he heard from everybody.

Chairman WALSH. Everybody. Where was he when he heard there was a lot of work here?

The INTERPRETER. He says in Chicago.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him who it was got his son to come, if he knows. Ask him if he got his son to come; put it that way.

The INTERPRETER. He says he come himself.

Chairman WALSH. What was he doing in Chicago when he heard that?

The INTERPRETER. He was working in a railroad station.

Chairman WALSH. How long had he been working in the railroad station when he heard of the work here?

The INTERPRETER. He says he worked two months before he came here.

Chairman WALSH. Two months?

The INTERPRETER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he went to an employment agency to inquire.

The INTERPRETER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if anybody asked him not to go to work when he came to Colorado, or attempted in any way to prevent him from going to work.

The INTERPRETER. He says he risk himself to come to Colorado and get a job.

Chairman WALSH. What is that?

The INTERPRETER. He risk it.

Chairman WALSH. After he came here, did any person ask him not to work, or threaten him in any way?

The INTERPRETER. He say nobody ever say anything.

Chairman WALSH. Nobody ever said anything to him?

The INTERPRETER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long has he been in this country?

The INTERPRETER. Thirteen years.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he intends to go back to the old country?

The INTERPRETER. He say if he have money some time he will; if not, he will stay here.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he understands that he has a right to become a citizen of this country?

The INTERPRETER. He said he was trying to be a United States citizen several times, but he don't know how to read and write English, and they refuse to give him papers.

Chairman WALSH. Because he could not read and write?

The INTERPRETER. It is his intention to be a United States citizen.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how much money he makes in the mine?

The INTERPRETER. He say sometimes some months he get $75, some months $85, some months $100.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he knows what a checkweighman is?

The INTERPRETER. A checkweighman is a fellow that check my cars.

Chairman WALSH. He don't know what a checkweighman is?

The INTERPRETER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him whether or not he is being paid for all the coal he mines?

The INTERPRETER. What he mines?

Chairman WALSH. Ask him whether he knows whether or not he is being paid for all the coal he mines?

The INTERPRETER. He said they pay what he done.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how he knows that, whether they pay him for what he does.

The INTERPRETER. He said he shall mark every time so much what he done and he knows what he do and also he figure the work at the end of the month, so he figure how much he got coming to him.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he would be willing to work more than eight hours a day if they made him do it.

The INTERPRETER. I only want work eight hours, what I know law is.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he deals in the company store, buys his goods from the company store?

The INTERPRETER. Only he bought groceries to the company stores.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how much they deduct from his wages for hospital dues?

The INTERPRETER. One dollar a month.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how much they deduct usually for powder?

The INTERPRETER. He say he never use powder, he work with the coal that— he said he worked in a mine, pillar place coal, that is softer and don't need no powder at all.

Chairman WALSH. What mine is he working in?

The INTERPRETER. In the Valdez.

Chairman WALSH. Does he know the name of the company who has the mine?

The INTERPRETER. He say he don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him what he gets paid for his work?

The INTERPRETER. He say he gets paid for the company. He say he get paid for the company, he heard the company, one the companies named Rockefeller, and that is all he knows about it.

Chairman WALSH. Does he know how much the company pays him, what price they pay him for mining the coal?

The INTERPRETER. They pay 55 cents a ton for coal.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he would belong to a union if he thought he could get more money by doing so.

The INTERPRETER. I don't want to belong to a union if even I get $10 a day.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if his boss speaks Italian.

The INTERPRETER. He says sometimes his boss talk very few words Italian language.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how he finds out what the boss wants him to do.

The INTERPRETER. He says he is experienced in work.

Chairman WALSH. That he is an experienced workman?

The INTERPRETER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That he, himself, is?

The INTERPRETER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Does his boss never tell him anything he wants him to do?

The INTERPRETER. He said when the boss ask him to do some work. if he understand, he do it, and if he don't, why the boss he goes and shows to him what should be done.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he would still work there even though they did not pay him as much as they do now.

The INTERPRETER. Please give me the question again.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he would remain at work if they did not pay him the same wages.

The INTERPRETER. He say, no, sir.

Chairman WALSH. He would quit?

The INTERPRETER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him who gave him the job out at the mine, who he talked to about going to work.

The INTERPRETER. He say he talked to the superintendent.

Chairman WALSH. He said what?

The INTERPRETER. He say he talked with the superintendent of the mine, and the superintendent give the job to him.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him if he told him how much he would pay him before he gave him the job?

The INTERPRETER. He said when he was working with the company he got $3.10 a day, but the most time he was working for himself in piecework.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how much he got for piecework.

The INTERPRETER. He said some days he make about $4—$3 or $4. or $5 or $6. something like that.

Chairman WALSH. Ask him how much the superintendent told him he would pay him for piecework when he hired him.

The INTERPRETER. He says that the superintendent don't know himself what the men in piecework—what a man make in a day.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Ask how much a ton for digging coal he was going to pay him.

Chairman WALSH. Did the superintendent tell him when he hired him how much he would pay him when he would dig coal?

The INTERPRETER. He said he hadn't said anything.

Chairman WALSH. Does he know how much a ton he gets for digging coal?

The INTERPRETER. Fifty-five cents a ton.

Chairman WALSH. What do they charge for the house he lives in?

The INTERPRETER. He said he live in a little shack, a house, and he pay a dollar a month for the rent of the house. I got three shack, and I pay $1.25 for each shack.

Chairman WALSH. How much?

The INTERPRETER. One dollar and twenty-five cents for use of the water.

Chairman WALSH. Twenty-five cents for water?

The INTERPRETER. Would be $1.25 a month.

Chairman WALSH. How many rooms are in that house?

The INTERPRETER. There are three rooms in the house.

Chairman WALSH. And who all live in that house?

The INTERPRETER. Him and his family.

Chairman WALSH. How many?

The INTERPRETER. Seven altogether.

Chairman WALSH. Seven altogether?

The INTERPRETER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. You may be excused.

(The interpreter didn't know as much as I did about talking English. There's where the mistake came from. Yours, truly (signed), Grègario Ginex, Box 148, Valdez, Colo.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. WALTER F. LENTHALL.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. LENTHALL. Walter F. Lenthall.

Chairman WALSH. What is your age?

Mr. LENTHALL. I am 36 years of age.

Chairman WALSH. Are you married or single?

Mr. LENTHALL. I am a married man.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any children?

Mr. LENTHALL. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Mr. LENTHALL. I reside at the present time at Rockland, Colo., the Solar mine.

Chairman WALSH. What county is that in?

Mr. LENTHALL. Huerfano County.

Chairman WALSH. What is your occupation?

Mr. LENTHALL. I am a miner.

Chairman WALSH. A native of this country?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir; of Tennessee.

Chairman WALSH. A native of Tennessee?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Of what parentage?

Mr. LENTHALL. German decent.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been a miner?

Mr. LENTHALL. All my life.

Chairman WALSH. You have been a coal miner all your life?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you work in the coal-mining business prior to coming to Colorado?

Mr. LENTHALL. The Webster Fuel Co., British Columbia.

Chairman WALSH. And before that? Give me the places you worked in the coal-mining business.

Mr. LENTHALL. The State of Washington, Idaho, Montana, British Columbia, South Africa, and Australia.

Chairman WALSH. What time did you work in Colorado, and where?

Mr. LENTHALL. I worked in the Walsen, Cameron, Robinson, Mutual, and the Solar.

Chairman WALSH. Are you working in the Solar now?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. As a miner?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is the Solar a union or nonunion mine, Mr. Lenthall?

Mr. LENTHALL. No; it is a nonunion mine.

Chairman WALSH. It is nonunion?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you work at Walsen?

Mr. LENTHALL. The first time I worked at Walsen from November, I believe the 11th until November 22d or the 23d. And through some dispute against wages I was transferred to the Cameron November 26, 1913.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you stay there?

Mr. LENTHALL. I stayed there until the 21st of March, 1914.

Chairman WALSH. Why did you leave Cameron?

Mr. LENTHALL. On account of conditions not being satisfactory—not satisfied with the store and the general working conditions.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe the objection you had to the store and the general working conditions.

Mr. LENTHALL. The objection I had to the store was overcharges regarding furniture, groceries, and so forth, and in not receiving sufficient payment for my work—driving entries—which is heavy work and contained lots of water. I was only guaranteed—

Chairman WALSH. What is that?

Mr. LENTHALL. I was only guaranteed $3.10 per day, while it really should pay—driving these entries, the kind of entries we had, the kind of wet work—it should at least pay $4 a day. And besides that, when I came down to the Cameron mine I notified the superintendent of that Cameron mine made application for some batch furniture, temporary, on account I had my furniture at Pueblo. I bought two chairs, one table, one range, linoleum to cover the kitchen, one dresser and bed, one mattress (so called), and quilts and some other things that amounted to $143. I signed a contract to have deductions made at $25 a month. Well, everything went well until the first statement I received of the Cameron mine—that was November 30—and my total earnings for November were $9.30, and this statement showed my deduction $13.45, so that, therefore, I was $4.15 in debt to the company. My second statement—

Chairman WALSH. For how long a period of time was that?

Mr. LENTHALL. That period was from the 24th; from the 24th of November. Then my second statement—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. From 24th of November to what other date?

Mr. LENTHALL. To the 30th; to the last day of the month. Then—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Six days?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes. Then the second statement I received on the 31st of December. That was the statement where I had a lot of trouble. The superintendent as well as the mine clerk; the superintendent directed the mine clerk—corrected the mine clerk's statement, and the mine clerk corrected the superintendent's. That statement is supposed to be copied off those books. There is a correction right here on the statement.

Now, I had an earning; I had a total earning of that day at the end of the month of $74.11.

Chairman WALSH. A total what?

Mr. LENTHALL. Total earning of $74.11. My deduction amounted in house rent, furniture, hospital, and fuel, amounted to $91.25. Naturally I went over to see the superintendent about it, and the superintendent corrected it, and it left me a balance which I owed the company of $63.09. Well, when I went with that statement to the superintendent, at the time he looked the books over himself, and he put down that balance due the company, instead of $63.90, was $75.74. He increased it. So I could not get any satisfaction. I had been three or four times to ask him to look the matter over, and he would say he would look it over. So I left it run on to January. On my January statement I had 88 hours, and I earned for the 88 hours $34.10. My store deduction was $34.10; therefore I didn't receive anything.

Chairman WALSH. How did it happen, Mr. Lenthall? Did you get the ordinary scale of wages and prices?

Mr. LENTHALL. Well, I had drawbacks. In that place I was working I had too much rock and what we call brushing. In driving an entry you have got to have the entry 6 feet from the center of the rail. Now, they had a heavy roof, a heavy roll of rock, and they must be given a certain pitch, and I had to gob the rock 4 feet from the left rib. That took considerable time, and I didn't get anything extra; just my day's wages.

Chairman WALSH. They do not pay for that?

Mr. LENTHALL. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you only work 11 days that whole month?

Mr. LENTHALL. No. I had an agreement with the superintendent that if I didn't make my day's wages he would give me enough hours to make it up in the month—to make the month up. So, therefore, that was the 88 hours which were missing. I made 2,549 hundredweight of coal and 15 feet of brushing, and the 2,549 hundredweight of coal paid me $50.90, plus 13 feet of brushing at 65 cents; a total of $57.48. Deductions on that were the preceding month—the previous month—$86.28, so I stood to the company $86.28 instead of $74.75 after deducting the drawing. My statement shows it.

Then, in February I had 128 hours, and the 128 hours I earned $49.50, and had 1,371 hundredweight of coal and 18 feet of brushing. That give me $36.42. That is the first time I ever drew any money, and my check amounted to 46 cents since November until February, according to this statement here.

Chairman WALSH. How many actual days did you put in in each one of these months?

Mr. LENTHALL. The whole month including Sundays.

Chairman WALSH. Working as hard as you could?

Mr. LENTHALL. As hard as I could.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Including Sundays?

Mr. LENTHALL. Including Sundays; yes, sir. My daybook will show all the time correctly—that I had so many cars to load; everything else written down—which I carry. They are here to be inspected at any time you may desire.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. LENTHALL. Now, of course I couldn't agree with the superintendent on these points.

Chairman WALSH. Does that take you to the end of your time at Cameron?

Mr. LENTHALL. Now, that took me up to the 24th—21st—and I had never received a statement from the 1st of March to the 21st. It was promised, because I could not settle with them, in the first place; and my superintendent told me I could not move until I paid absolutely every cent to the company.

Chairman WALSH. Told you what?

Mr. LENTHALL. Told me I could not move from that camp; couldn't go to any other place until I had paid everything to the company. I told him I was going to move away to Walsen, and so he told me to see the superintendent at Walsen and let me take my account bills over and be responsible for them and he would give me permission to move. I defied him.

Chairman WALSH. You defied him?

Mr. LENTHALL. I said, "I am going to move on Saturday morning," which I did. I defied him to put any obstructions in my way. Now, then, in the month of April I made $123 that month. That was the best pay I ever made in the C. F. & I. I had $30 in cash.

Chairman WALSH. How much?

Mr. LENTHALL. Thirty dollars out of $123.

Chairman WALSH. What did your bills consist of? What did you buy?

Mr. LENTHALL. Well, there were tools, and keep paying on these bills, and I could never get finished up with these bills; and I asked for a statement on several occasions. I could not obtain one.

Chairman WALSH. They would not give you an itemized statement?

Mr. LENTHALL. No. Here is a copy which I received from the Mutual Coal Co., and Mr. Anderson he forwarded me a letter about two weeks after I left the C. F. & I., and told me—he was a clerk with the Cameron store—and asked him to collect the bill of $40 after I left over four months. So I turned back and wrote him, and I have a copy of the letter.

(The letter referred to is as follows:)

"Mr. Davis, a clerk at the Mutual mine, handed me your letter of November 9, 1914—a store bill I should owe to the Colorado Supply Co., Cameron store, of $43.61 for you to collect. I herewith will reply briefly to the demands. Firstly, I don't think I owe the C. S. C. any such bill. I left Cameron mine in March. My bills were transferred to the Walsen mine, and to where I was employed after I left Cameron, and there my bills were paid by deduction from my pay. When I left Walsen last June for the Mutual mine I was informed that I was clear with the camp. It is rather strange for the C. S. C. to collect a bill from me after nearly five months. Well known to them, I was employed at the Mutual mine. Therefore I will not consent for any deduction from my pay to the demands of the C. S. C. I am in possession of all bills and statements except the itemized statement I so often asked them to furnish me with."

I haven't received any itemized statement from them since I left or during the time I stayed with them.

Chairman WALSH. Were there other English-speaking miners at Cameron and at Walsen when you worked there?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did any of the other men have similar experiences to which you have detailed?

Mr. LENTHALL. Oh, yes; quite a number of them.

Chairman WALSH. How general was it?

Mr. LENTHALL. Oh, it was a general occurrence. I can mention quite a number of names; but when you wouldn't pay their bills and couldn't make any money, you were down on them; they had been paying grocery bills and stuff all winter, and they couldn't make enough to pay their bills. One man named Harrington and one named Cochran, etc., quite a number, besides the foreign element which are employed at the mine; and they have always complained about that Cameron store.

Chairman WALSH. Where did the people get water for domestic purposes at Walsen?

Mr. LENTHALL. At Walsen, I believe, is the mine water; but the Mutual, that was the last time I worked, that was the reason I left the mine, on account of that water.

Chairman WALSH. What was your experience about the water at that mine?

Mr. LENTHALL. On October 15—they turned that mine water on October 15. Previous to that we had city water, and I didn't know anything different until a young man came to me during the noon hour on November 11 and asked me what we were going to do about that water. I said, "I don't know; what water do you mean?" "About that water we are drinking." I said, "What about it?" He said, "Are you aware of the fact that we are drinking mine water?" I said, "No." I immediately went to the superintendent and asked him why we were drinking mine water. We found that the mine was in the filthy state of polluted water. There were three diseased Mexicans working in the mine, and they had used this water that flowed into the sump as a toilet, and from that sump the water was pumped out for domestic purposes. That was the reason I left the Mutual mine.

Chairman WALSH. Did they charge you for that water?

Mr. LENTHALL. They charged me.

Chairman WALSH. Was it deducted from your pay?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes; it was deducted. I have the statement right here.

Chairman WALSH. How much?

Mr. LENTHALL. A dollar a month.

Chairman WALSH. Tell the commission about your experience with coal weights while you were with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Mr. LENTHALL. The Robinson mine and the Walsen mine, they had, practically speaking, the same cars; that is, wooden cars; and the Walsen mine has three different kinds of cars, and the wooden square car, and they have got them wooden cars that are built up sides, and steel cars. And there is a great difference in the Robinson mine in the weight of the wooden cars and the square wooden cars and what they have in Walsen. The Robinson mine has cars of from 27 to 28 hundredweight. That is the Robinson mine. The Walsen mine, the coal at Walsen mine runs from 34 to 56 hundredweight. I had a record of a car in June; this is my fourth car; I put down the weight, 5,600; and the lowest car I ever had in Walsen mine was the 13th of June, 2,600.

Chairman WALSH. What experience have the other men had there, that you know of?

Mr. LENTHALL. Had exactly the same experience what I had. There was a young man by the name of Bryson; he was up on the scales and he give us fair weight; and when Bryson was taken off, about the time the McNally mine burned, and they put a man to take his place, and the superintendent had to remove him on account giving us short weight.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a member of the miners' organization?

Mr. LENTHALL. No; I am not.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever been a member of the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. LENTHALL. No; I am not.

Chairman WALSH. Did you work there all during this trouble?

Mr. LENTHALL. I have; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you are working at the Solar mine now?

Mr. LENTHALL. Working at the Solar mine now.

Chairman WALSH. Do you exercise your right of franchise; do you vote at elections?

Mr. LENTHALL. I did; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What has your observation been at the elections, if you made any at the camps which you have worked, in Colorado?

Mr. LENTHALL. On the 3d of November, in the morning at 7 o'clock, I was the second man to vote at the Solar mine, and there was quite a disturbance about that election. There were several men there objecting to our vote, especially some Mexicans objected to the vote, and I asked one of them who he was, to show his credentials if he had them, and I objected to his vote. He showed me some credentials that I considered at the time were not genuine credentials. I saw down to Walsenburg and saw the district attorney or the sheriff about it. Coming to Walsenburg, or passing the store at Walsen, I saw quite a number of Greeks and Italians, which I knew at the time worked in the Walsen mine who were not citizens.

Chairman WALSH. How did you know they were not citizens?

Mr. LENTHALL. Because I talked to them. One of them was working with me previous in the mine, and he was in the country only about eight or nine months. I asked him if he was a citizen. There were Mexicans, a man that came from old Mexico, and he told me that he voted.

Chairman WALSH. He is not a citizen?

Mr. LENTHALL. Not a citizen of the United States.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever make any other observations with reference to the way the elections were conducted?

Mr. LENTHALL. No; I did not, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did anyone ask who you were voting for? Or ask you to vote for anyone?

Mr. LENTHALL. Well, I noticed that several gentlemen that were not known to me, they came around to the house and asked our wives to vote—were introduced—

Chairman WALSH. What?

Mr. LENTHALL. They were introduced as out of the party they were belonging to, the Republican or Democratic Party, and we were told, you know, the best party for the welfare of the country was the Republican Party.

Chairman WALSH. They told your wife that?

Mr. LENTHALL. Our wives. Of course I didn't see either of those gentlemen, because I was working. He was at our homes during working hours.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know who he was?

Mr. LENTHALL. No; I got a description. I asked my wife to give me a description and she said he was a young man, tall and stoutly built.

Chairman WALSH. What do you know about the actions of the mine guards located at the places where you lived?

Mr. LENTHALL. Well, some of those mine guards, especially after the McNally was burned down, they started to—I happened to be at the time just in the vicinity of the superintendent's house where they came by from McNally, and I seen one having a lot of shirts and other stuff belonging to the so-called home guards, which was formed on this occasion after the State militia was withdrawn from these camps. One of them was named Moore, and another companion I didn't know his name, he was a stranger. And I couldn't see why he should carry that stuff away, and so I asked him, and he said: "I am going to keep it." Then the second occasion I noticed that a Seventh Street saloon, after they had had that battle, the battle was over at Walsen, that was on April 28, I saw a lot of militiamen with some of the men imported from Joplin, Mo., going to that saloon. I saw a man come out with a box of cigars and gunny sacks of whisky, and so forth, and I said: "Where did you get that from?" He said from the saloon. So the camp marshal arrested them, and later they were released. Why it was, I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of the mine guards or militia committing any acts of violence in the camps where you were located?

Mr. LENTHALL. No; I can't say as to that.

Chairman WALSH. Did you know of any company employee using explosives, or anything of that kind?

Mr. LENTHALL. I know that four of the Joplin imported men had 16 dynamite sticks and tried to blow a saloon up, and they were stopped by Mr. Graham. Then there was talk in the camp that some of the buildings in the McNally were burned by the Joplin men.

Chairman WALSH. How do you know that some of those buildings were fired by the Joplin, Mo., men?

Mr. LENTHALL. Through the conversation I overheard.

Chairman WALSH. Between whom?

Mr. LENTHALL. Between some of the men, I don't know the names of any of them, I couldn't say.

Chairman WALSH. Can you give me the names of any of those men that fired the McNally mine.

Mr. LENTHALL. I know the Christian names. I don't know that I could identify them if I could see them.

Chairman WALSH. Give me those names.

Mr. LENTHALL. Tom, Harry, and Joe, three of them.

Chairman WALSH. Did any person have any conversation directly with you at any time with reference to committing acts of violence or depredation on the company's property?

Mr. LENTHALL. Not directly, but indirectly. I do not know if he said that in a kind of josh way or not, that they were going to blow up some more red necks. I said, "Blow up some more what?" He said, "McNally." That was the class of people which came from Joplin, Mo., which really did cause the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. a lot of trouble during that time, because of that kind of people, and I believe they have done more acts of violence than the company does know or ever will know.

Chairman WALSH. How many of these men came in during the strike?

Mr. LENTHALL. At first I don't know exactly the number. But I know that on the 4th of December, 1913, in Cameron at 7 o'clock—between 7 and 8—a whole trainload came in. They were divided somewhere, some at the McNally and some at Walsen and some at Cameron.

Chairman WALSH. About how many would you say came in on that train?

Mr. LENTHALL. Well, I should figure about between 50 and 80.

Chairman WALSH. When did you come from Solar; when did you leave Solar?

Mr. LENTHALL. I left Solar last night.

Chairman WALSH. Is your wife still at Solar?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes; she is.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LENTHALL. I interviewed an attorney, Mr. East, down there regarding this matter at this store. Of course, I am not very well acquainted in Walsen; I have not got time to go down to Walsen; I live 2 or 3 miles away from Walsen, but I want to protect myself. Furthermore, I heard they—that that same manager came around to the store where I am dealing at the present time and tried to get them to pay that bill. He tried to collect that bill of $40, but that bill had been transferred.

Chairman WALSH. What did you make last month at the Solar mine?

Mr. LENTHALL. On the 16th of November, $6.23; on the 17th of November, $3.94; on the 18th of November, $4.33; on the 19th the mine was on fire and we did not work; had a fire in the mine on the north, through gas. On the 20th I made $3.62; 21st, $5.80; on the 23d I worked a half day, and I made $2.09; the 24th I worked a half day and made $2.88; on the 25th I made $4.90; on the 26th I worked half a day, company work—on the 26th I made $2.81½; on the 27th I made $6.45. That concluded November. Then I made on the 30th—the mine did not work on the 28th on account of gas being too dangerous to go underground. Then on the 29th was Sunday, and on the 30th, the last day of the month, I made $4.34; amounting to a total in the 11 days, $47.44.

Chairman WALSH. Are you now dealing at the company store at Solar?

Mr. LENTHALL. No; there is no company store.

Chairman WALSH. No company store there? Are you getting along all right at Solar?

Mr. LENTHALL. Excellent. My bill never gets higher, and the company has the record to prove it; don't go any higher than about $18 or $19.

Chairman WALSH. You seem to have kept a very close account of your receipts and expenditures there. Is it or is it not your custom to do that?

Mr. LENTHALL. It is; it has always been my custom.

Chairman WALSH. Have you been doing that all the time?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir; at all the mines I have worked. I always keep every day what work I do.

Chairman WALSH. How does it happen, I have been requested to ask you, that you have worked in so many mines—that you have traveled so much?

Mr. LENTHALL. I was single and wanted to see the world, and I went to South Africa and other places.

Chairman WALSH. How have you gotten along with the other companies for whom you have worked outside of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.?

Mr. LENTHALL. Pretty fair. There is always some little grievances, but they were always settled by arbitration.

Chairman WALSH. What do you think of the necessity of the men having a checkweighman?

Mr. LENTHALL. I should say that would be a good idea.

Chairman WALSH. It would be a good idea?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think if checkweighmen had been employed that you would have been satisfied with the weights you were given?

Mr. LENTHALL. Yes, sir; I think it would cause satisfaction all around.

Chairman WALSH. How many men work in the Solar mine where you are now?

Mr. LENTHALL. Quite a number.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have any objection to letting us copy those records you have?

Mr. LENTHALL. None whatever.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would please turn them over to the stenographer.

(The papers so offered are printed as "Lenthall exhibit.")

At this point we will take an adjournment until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

(At 6 o'clock p. m. an adjournment was taken until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 16, 1914, at 9 o'clock a. m.)

DENVER, COLO., Wednesday, December 16, 1914—9 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh; Commissioners Ballard, O'Connell, Lennon, and Harriman.

Chairman WALSH. Gov. Ammons.

TESTIMONY OF GOV. ELIAS M. AMMONS—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. Governor, we are going to conclude our hearings to-day, and I thought perhaps you might have something further to say. Is there anything you wish to say? If so, just proceed.

Gov. AMMONS. I think I did not say what I intended to the other day about the other officials in the State capitol, and to correct what might be a wrong impression I desire to say that the State treasurer assisted me in a good many ways in connection with the financial situation during the strike. I spoke from memory as to the men that were at Ludlow at the time they were attacked by the strikers.

I have had a list of the men who were there, taken from the official records, showing how long they had been in the service and what their business was at the time they joined the National Guard. I will submit this.

Chairman WALSH. Please do so.

(The list so offered is printed among the exhibits at the end of this subject as "Ammons exhibit.")

Gov. AMMONS. There are two groups. The first group of 36 men, including the man whose name is written in pencil, were at Cedar Hill or near Ludlow at the time the attack was made upon them on April 20. The second group of 10 men, I think, were at Sopris. I had forgotten that there was a smaller group of men still at Sopris. These 10 were all Colorado Springs men. Now, this is the official list and it is very different from what the papers—the public press has given out—and I think it will be illuminating so far as the men in the militia at the time this attack was made is concerned.

This second group did not arrive at Sopris until 3.45 in the afternoon. There were two or three men who belonged to the National Guard, but not on duty, who came some time during the day and I don't know about those, but this penciled name in here was that of a cook, a former member of the Regular Army. He volunteered to go out and assist that morning, and to protect him in case he was wounded he was enlisted that morning. I would like to put that in the record, to show what the official records were at that time.

Chairman WALSH. It will be made a part of the record.

Gov. AMMONS. Now, Mr. Chairman, another thing I think I can clear up a little bit. The important feature of that indirect conference which was held just prior to the time the troops were called out had but one purpose. Whatever the understanding may be of the detail, either by the strikers or their friend, Mr. Patterson, or the operators on the other side, and I say I invited Senator Patterson there, and he was very kind to put in two or three days' time on that matter rather representing the strikers in the indirect conference—the real object in all these letters written, by whomsoever written, was to get a form of letter which I could submit to both sides of the controversy that might be accepted by both sides, and therefore terminate the strike. There is not anything else important about it.

I have read some of the statements concerning the duties of the governor and of the constitutional provisions. I want it understood I am not a lawyer. The constitution, though, does provide in very plain language that the governor is the chief executive, and in him is lodged the supreme power; that his duties are to see that the laws are faithfully enforced, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. It also provides, as was called to your attention, that the military arm of the Government shall always be subservient to the civil authorities. The head of the civil authorities of the State is the governor. And the military forces of the State are under his command. They are, therefore, just as the constitution says, subservient to the civil authorities.

As I have understood my duties, so long as the local authorities were capable of controlling the situation, during the strike troubles in all these counties, it was the duty of these local authorities to take care of the situation. Every attempt was made to assist these local authorities in controlling the situation in each one of the counties. When the local authorities broke down and were unable even to make an arrest, nothing could be done by the civil authorities, then it became the duty of the governor to use the other force provided for him, and the only other one, and that was the military, the National Guard, and that was done.

So far as the published statements and talk of unfairness are concerned, I want to say this: Every effort that I could make was made simply to enforce the laws of this State, to suppress violence and to prevent it.

I desire to suggest, referring to considerable of the testimony or statements here, that it is my impression that it is very largely true, from the experience during this strike, that the strike did depend somewhat on violence or picketing, on inspiring fear in those that remained in the mine or might want to go back there, and that anything that was likely to prevent that would be considered unfair. I am speaking only from the experience of this strike. I do not believe there is a fair-minded person in this State that will not agree with that statement. In other words, I was urged a number of times that I ought to keep the hands of the State off of the situation, with the idea that if the operators would not do certain things that the strikers should not be restrained.

Now, I want to say another thing as to those arrests. I see there is a good deal said about that. I took the best legal advice I could get. I listened to a good deal that was offered, and, as I said before, on the stand, my legal advisor was the one chosen by the people of the State—the attorney general.

It was impossible to arrest and try those charged with violence down there during those turbulent times. The attorney of the United Mine Workers, in my office, agreed with me in that, that that ought not to be done. I did not have any disposition even to attempt to try men by a military court. However, something had to be done to control the situation. My directions to the adjutant general were to permit no one to create a disturbance if he could help it, no matter who it was, and that anyone who made such an attempt should be locked up. I recollect that those instructions were very explicit and that it should apply to everybody concerned, whether it was an operator or miner or an outsider. A great many arrests were made necessary. No information could be gotten, that I know of, and the strikers would not reveal anything. We could not try those people, and the only thing that could be done was to hold them. There are a great many charges, evidence of conspiracy, like the instance where, at the ambushade at La Veta, and if we did not hold those people where they could not be talked to we could get no information whatever. The military commission was organized to sift these cases in order that we could get as much testimony as possible and not hold indefinitely those who were probably not guilty of serious crime. I know to-day of no other course that could have been pursued that than which I did pursue.

So much has been said of one particular arrest that I want to mention that—that of Mother Jones. In the early stages of the strike she was engaged in making inflammatory speeches down there. After every single one of them, as my recollection goes, there was a wave of violence. She seemed to exert a tremendous influence over those people down there.

When she went down there the second time—the first time she didn't stop; came on through to Denver, coming through the South. The second time she was down there she was sent to the hospital by the military forces and locked up, but told she could leave that district whenever she pleased. That was true just as long as she was down there. And I recall very well when Mr. Hawkins came to my office and wanted to talk over this situation with me, and we walked down town together, and he said he was thinking of commencing proceedings to liberate Mother Jones. I replied to him, "Horace, why don't you advise her to leave there? Hasn't she made enough trouble?" I said, "It is costing us $5,000 a day to keep the peace down there, and the sort of work she does will offset it all. She has no business there; she doesn't live there. Why don't you have her leave?" And the same sort of conversation occurred when she came back—I think it was before the time she returned to Walsenburg and was locked up there. I did my best to beg him to keep her from going into the district because of what I believed to be the very bad effect, and I could not induce him to do so. He said at that time she had a constitutional right to go and she was going to go. In other words—well, I won't say it. I said, "Now, her only object in going down there is simply to show her defiance of the State authorities," and I urged him that we had had enough trouble and he ought to urge her not to go back. She came up that time from Trinidad on her own request.

I do not see, Mr. Chairman, as I said a few moments ago, how anyone could have done any differently under the situation than to have locked these people up and kept them.

So far as their not seeing their attorneys is concerned, it did not make any difference whether there was a request for an attorney or not the same plea was made. This same man who shot Belcher—Sancannelli—never asked for an attorney, yet the papers were full about his not being permitted to see an attorney. These people—these arrested people were turned over to the civil authorities just as soon as they were ready to take them, and we urged them to take them before they did.

I think it is due to the commission that these statements should be made.

I want to say one thing more, and that is as to the National Guard. The National Guard was called out from all walks of life, from all over the State. It had in its membership very strong partisans both ways. There were union men in it—some; I don't know how many. There were, as I said, those who sympathized in every direction. Among the members—I want to say this, too, that we did not have enough, not enough men to carry out the original purposes when they were called into the field. There were among their members a number of students of our higher educational institutions, both private and public, and also quite a number that were in the high schools. When it developed that they had to be kept there some time I instructed Gen. Chase as fast as he could get reputable people to take their places that he should return these schoolboys to their homes, which was done, and he enlisted in Denver and I think everywhere he could men to take their places as fast as he could find those who would take them. It was difficult to do that, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that the question of their pay was challenged, and we could not even supply them with proper clothing, and it was very difficult.

There were probably, altogether, at different times in the field, with short or long terms, 1,500 or 2,000 men, and with whatever care anyone could exercise there was bound to be perhaps some in there who committed indiscretions. I want to say again in regard to criticisms that have been made that the strikers showed the same disposition toward the Federal troops that they exhibited toward the National Guard. We never had so many men as the Federal Government has had, and naturally the Federal Government is stronger and perhaps better respected on that account.

I sincerely hope, as I suggested the other day, that at some time the commission will have a report from the Federal officers in the field, because my information is that their experiences have been the same as ours. I have learned in connection with this strike that there is a strong sentiment against—a strong sentiment among the same class of unions against any sort of military control. I was recently East and I conferred with a good many men from different States at the governors' conference. I was over in Milwaukee and in Chicago, and I learned that the same sentiment existed, not only here but in many other portions of the country; that there is a strong prejudice against the military arm of the Government being used at all.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that people who sympathize with this—and I am suggesting this because I am looking to the future—are making a great mistake, to my mind. There are situations, and we had one of them, where anarchy is certain to reign unless the military arm of the Government is called upon to restrain it. I do say this: That I never did anything with as much regret in my life as I felt when I called out the National Guard, when I felt that I had to do it. I have been severely criticized because I did not call them out sooner, but, even waiting as long as I did, there are very respectable people in our community that will deny to-day the necessity at that time of calling out the National Guard.

I have urged in this State and I am going to urge again the establishment of a State police force under strict civil-service rules that can be called to the assistance of the local authorities at any time at the incipency of any trouble, realizing, Mr. Chairman, that they will be abused, just as the military is, but that things will not get into an absolute state of insurrection and that at the incipency of these troubles they will be much better controlled.

One other suggestion I want to make to you. There are 800,000 miners in the United States, and I am using this simply as an illustration of any other organization, and I do not know but that there are some that have more. There are 800,000 miners in the United States. They are not all organized, but they are trying to get them organized into one organization. If they are organized into one organization and they call a strike for recognition of the union, or for any other purpose, in any one of these Western States, at least, the States are absolutely powerless to defend themselves against any sort of campaign they may make. For instance, our whole population is only about 800,000, counting men, women, and children in Colorado, old and young, the aged and the babies, and an organization of that kind can not be controlled by any police force if they make such a campaign as was made in Colorado during this strike.

And I want to emphasize this: That I have no apology to make for calling upon the Federal Government to assist us at a time when nearly all our troubles came from beyond the boundaries of the State, and I believe that the Federal Government was not only justified in sending an armed force here to prevent the invasion of those who came here to make trouble, but to assist us in the fight that was not local but was interstate in every way; and I say this as applying not only to labor on one side, but to capital on the other, that if either side is to be permitted to come into a State with such power as was evinced in this contest no State of our strength can possibly cope with them.

And I want to say one thing more in regard to these Western States. Some of them have comparatively little of their property on the tax rolls, and there is approximately only 25 per cent of the territory of Colorado on the tax rolls, and nineteen-twentieths of the taxes come from one-eleventh of the property of the State. We have new institutions to build and a heavy load to carry, anyhow, and where this sort of a campaign, whether it comes from one side or the other of this industrial conflict, is carried on, and where the force of the entire country, on either or both sides, is brought to bear and the battle ground chosen purposely in one State, and not in the district at the time involved, it is the duty of the Federal Government to come in and assist, and I have no apologies to make for asking the President to do it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is anything further you desire to ask me, I will be glad to answer your questions.

Chairman WALSH. I was requested by one of the commission to ask you whether or not you made formal declaration of martial law in any district?

Gov. AMMONS. Mr. Chairman, the orders which were made were made down there under legal advice and were intended to cover any district where an outbreak might occur, even clear to the borders of the State. In other words, there was at first no disturbance that could not be controlled by the local authorities except in two counties, but it was threatened in many counties, and it was threatened to call out the men in the rest of the State, and the order was made so that if these new districts should come in with the military in the field that as soon as they went there martial law was in effect sufficient to control the situation. We did not want to break down the local authorities anywhere further than was necessary.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. Thank you, Governor; and we thank you for your cooperation also during our stay in Denver.

Gov. AMMONS. I will be glad to cooperate in any way that I can.

Chairman WALSH. Gen. Farrar, please.

TESTIMONY OF GEN. FRED FARRAR.

Gen. FARRAR. Do you wish me to be sworn?

Chairman WALSH. No; we are not swearing witnesses. State your name, please.

Gen. FARRAR. Fred Farrar.

Chairman WALSH. What is your position in the State of Colorado?

Gen. FARRAR. Attorney general.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been a member of the bar?

Gen. FARRAR. Since August 15, 1900.

Chairman WALSH. You were educated where?

Gen. FARRAR. In Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a native of Colorado?

Gen. FARRAR. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you held the office of attorney general?

Gen. FARRAR. I was inaugurated on the 14th of January, 1913.

Chairman WALSH. Were you in active charge of the office during the whole of the strike?

Gen. FARRAR. The attorney general's office?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Gen. FARRAR. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you, please, and I want to say, General, we would like to give you more time, but we are compelled to keep it within the limit of about an hour in order to get through our hearings to-day. I would like to ask you to explain briefly to the commission whether or not martial law was at any time declared in the State—whether or not any district was declared to be in a state of insurrection or what order was made that gave the military authorities force and authority in the State.

Gen. FARRAR. Before I can answer the question as to whether or not martial law was ever declared I would have to come to a definition or common understanding with the commission as to a definition of martial law. As I understand it martial law has never been declared.

Chairman WALSH. We have each in our own minds several definitions, and so we can not give such a definition as you ask. But we would like a definition from you as to what existed in the State.

Gen. FARRAR. As I define martial law it was not declared in any district in the State. I define martial law to be that condition of law or government which vests in the military authorities full, complete, and absolute jurisdiction over the people of any district where the law may prevail.

Chairman WALSH. Under your constitution here and decisions do they require any formal declaration from any source?

Gen. FARRAR. No; it does not. It requires a declaration, but not a formal or definite one. The decisions of this State—and I refer more particularly to the much-discussed Moyer decision—provide that the governor, as commander in chief of the military forces of the State, may go to any length necessary to maintain and preserve the State and the enforcement of its laws. Now, that would seem to destroy any border line between what might strictly be termed martial law and a condition which might not be martial law. In other words, the civil authorities might retain certain functions and the military have certain power and authority; and while it would not, strictly speaking, be martial law in the sense in which I have defined it, it would be nevertheless something which approached it, and the line of demarcation would not be clear.

Chairman WALSH. It was stated by a witness here, who was also an attorney, that the powers of the militia as defined by the Moyer decision was based upon the proposition that the district was in a state of insurrection. Was that correct?

Gen. FARRAR. I think not.

Chairman WALSH. There is no such necessity, then?

Gen. FARRAR. I presume that any condition which would render the local authorities powerless would be such a condition as to permit the action through the military authorities as defined in the Moyer decision. Now, that might be insurrection or might be something else.

Chairman WALSH. Is it necessary for the executive to make any formal declaration as to the powerlessness of the authority before the power vests in the militia to conduct the government so far as it is conducted in that way?

Gen. FARRAR. I believe not. However, one was made in this instance.

Chairman WALSH. Substantially what was that, General?

Gen. FARRAR. The order was to the effect that a condition of—I believe the term “insurrection” was used or “a condition of lawlessness and violence existed, particularly in the counties of Huerfano and Las Animas.”

Chairman WALSH. That was a call made by the governor for his troops?

Gen. FARRAR. Yes; that was the proclamation.

Chairman WALSH. What steps, if any, did you take to ascertain whether or not the military authorities of Trinidad and other authorities of the strike down there were acting in conformity with the constitution and statutes of the State, and whether or not the civil authorities were being deprived in any way of their powers?

Gen. FARRAR. Very little. During the time the militia was there I was not in touch with the situation in an official capacity, except as it came to me through the governor. With the exception of one or two instances, Gen. Chase and I did not have any conferences. He was at Trinidad, and during the time the militia was in the field I was not at Trinidad, although on two occasions I sent my deputy, Mr. Francis E. Bouck, down to Trinidad in order to be able to assist along certain lines which were then under discussion. And I therefore say that my relationship with the military authorities was largely indirectly through the governor. I did, of course, know in a general way what was being done down there and what lines were being followed, but it was not a definite daily report or information coming to me. I will say, further, in that respect that there were a number of attorneys in the guard—I mean the National Guard or militia—and that some of these were advising Gen. Chase as to the local situation. My advice was, of course, of a more general nature and was always to the governor, with the exception of the two occasions when Gen. Chase and I met in conference here.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether or not the testimony taken before the military commission, of which Maj. Boughton was the head, was preserved?

Gen. FARRAR. No; I know nothing of it. I have never seen the testimony, and can not answer your question, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Did your office make any effort to ascertain whether or not the civil rights of any person had been violated or abused?

Gen. FARRAR. You mean by this military commission?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; by the military commission.

Gen. FARRAR. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any such abuse or violation?

Gen. FARRAR. Not that I was able to learn. Now, I must qualify that by saying that I have not seen the testimony, and my information concerning it was of a general nature.

Chairman WALSH. What were your lines of investigation to ascertain whether or not such was the fact?

Gen. FARRAR. Gen. Chase, I believe, was advised, I do not know by whom, that a commission could be organized with power to try and punish. I believe that he first sent Maj. Boughton to Denver to see me in regard to the organization of such a commission; at least my conversation was with Maj. Boughton, and I advised against any such procedure.

Later on I saw Gen. Chase himself, and as I recall it, he then stated to me that he saw the thing as I had seen it, and that no attempt would be made to carry out that plan. It may be my understanding from him that it was not his original idea.

Now, then, answering your question further. A great many complaints were made to me by members of the union concerning the acts of the militia, concerning the acts of the military commission and with reference to matters generally in the district during the time the troops were there; and from those sources I was able to learn, in a general way, what was done by this commission.

Chairman WALSH. In case the lawful rights of any individual have been violated in the field, to his damage, what legal recourse, if any, would he have under the law of Colorado, and who would be responsible therefore, if anybody?

Gen. FARRAR. I assume your question is directed toward the violations of any personal rights which these strikers may have had; rights which had been violated or abused by the military.

Chairman WALSH. Which anybody may have had. Suppose it turned out that a man that was brought before that military commission—was brought there through the spite or ill will or malevolence of some individual—what recourse would the injured person have, if any, and against whom would his claim have to be made?

Gen. FARRAR. The person against whom the charge would be made would have to justify his act. By that I mean that every step which he took would have to be a legal step, and if it was not legal he then would be subject to such pains or penalties as might be appropriate to the actions complained of. It might be an action of false imprisonment, it might assume some criminal form, it might be an action in damages for various sorts of things.

Chairman WALSH. What criminal form might it assume?

Gen. FARRAR. It might assume several. It might go so far as to constitute an assault; it might take any number of various forms.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have a kidnapping statute, forcibly taking a person against their will?

Gen. FARRAR. We have.

Chairman WALSH. Does it apply to adults?

Gen. FARRAR. I can not say, Mr. Walsh, whether it does or not.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, is there any general responsibility? I am getting direct to the point of stating that the suggestion was made by some witnesses upon the stand here that if the rights of any person were violated under those orders that the responsibility would be upon the general, upon the brigadier general; that is, a personal civil responsibility? Is that your idea of the law?

Gen. FARRAR. It depends entirely upon the relationship which he bore to the act in question.

Chairman WALSH. Then the responsibility, if any, might be upon the private who arrested the man, or the judge advocate who ordered him held, or upon the brigadier general who was in command of the entire matter?

Gen. FARRAR. It might go further than that. It might reach the governor as a private citizen.

Chairman WALSH. It might reach the governor under certain circumstances?

Gen. FARRAR. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And he could be prosecuted criminally and proceeded against?

Gen. FARRAR. No; I don't think he could be prosecuted criminally, but he could be proceeded against as an individual citizen.

Chairman WALSH. That is, for damages? Or for a tort?

Gen. FARRAR. As a matter of fact, after the strike in 1913, the metal miners' strike at Cripple Creek, actions were begun by several of the strikers—I have forgotten exactly whom, but I believe Moyer and Pettibone were included in it—against the brigadier general and against the governor as private citizens and taken to the United States court. The cases were dismissed, not dismissed voluntarily, but thrown out of court.

Chairman WALSH. Was a demurrer sustained?

Gen. FARRAR. I understand that it took that turn; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. But there is authority, is there, for the proposition that you laid down that it might be a civil—a criminal liability in such cases?

Gen. FARRAR. In the event the officer violated the law.

Chairman WALSH. How many men are now under indictment, if you know, General, for acts growing out of the strike—alleged offenses against the laws of the State?

Gen. FARRAR. The grand jury at Canon City indicted 93, 27 of them for murder; 7 of them are now being tried, my office cooperating with the district attorney. One hundred and sixty-five are indicted at Trinidad. Those cases are not set for trial. Many of those are for murder. The grand jury is now sitting at Walsenburg, but it has not reported, but it is in charge of an assistant from my department.

Chairman WALSH. Who is the assistant in charge?

Gen. FARRAR. Mr. Frank C. West.

Chairman WALSH. What part is your office taking in the prosecution of these cases?

Gen. FARRAR. May I add one thing to your former question?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Gen. FARRAR. Indictments were also returned at Boulder, but I am not able to give you the number of men who were indicted; I have no information at hand. Those are cases which were commenced originally by the district attorney, and it was only after they had proceeded sometime, or to some length, that my office was called to assist. Now, then, your other question, please.

Chairman WALSH. What part is your office taking in the prosecution of those cases?

Gen. FARRAR. At Canon City, which is in Fremont County, I was requested by the local authorities, that is, the district attorney and other officers in that county, to assist or cooperate with the district attorney in that district, Mr. Gilbert Walker. At Trinidad my office assumed full charge of the grand jury, and the prosecution of the cases is entirely under my direction. The same thing, so far as it has gone, is true of Walsenburg; and at Boulder we are simply assisting the prosecuting officers there.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have authority, General, under the law, to take complete charge of the prosecutions, as attorney general, if you so desire?

Gen. FARRAR. No.

Chairman WALSH. Is your jurisdiction concurrent?

Gen. FARRAR. No; I have authority only when directed by the general assembly or by the governor.

Chairman WALSH. That is the only case in which you have been directed by the Governor, is it?

Gen. FARRAR. By the governor, in this instance.

Chairman WALSH. What were the reasons given for that?

Gen. FARRAR. There was apparently a condition which can be described solely as that of anarchy, particularly in those four counties.

Chairman WALSH. Who is the district attorney in that district?

Gen. FARRAR. Well, there are three different district attorneys in those three districts.

Chairman WALSH. The one in which you are conducting the prosecution?

Gen. FARRAR. John J. Hendrick is district attorney.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Gen. FARRAR. The situation had become so serious that it assumed a State-wide—I might even go further than that, even broader than a State-wide aspect; but so far as we were concerned in Colorado, it had assumed more than simply a local county aspect. And with the vast number of acts of violence which had occurred, it became so serious that the governor felt that the State should become in a measure responsible, at any rate responsible for the prosecution of the perpetrators of those acts or crimes.

Chairman WALSH. What are the legal qualifications for membership in the National Guard?

Gen. FARRAR. I believe the applicant must be 18 years of age, either a citizen or have declared himself for citizenship. Those are all that I recall.

Chairman WALSH. Any moral qualifications? Are they required to be persons of good moral character, or good repute, or anything of that sort?

Gen. FARRAR. I do not recall that the statutes specifically cover that.

Chairman WALSH. What steps, if any, have been taken by your office to investigate the acts of the officers and members of the National Guard with reference to the recruiting of the individuals in the militia, whether or not they were citizens legally qualified?

Gen. FARRAR. I brought it up several times with the governor and once or twice with Gen. Chase; other than that, none.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever gone over the list to ascertain whether or not the law had been violated in reference to the enrollment of the men in the mine?

Gen. FARRAR. Only through—through consulting the officers in charge of that matter.

Chairman WALSH. Who were the officers who had charge?

Gen. FARRAR. I spoke to Gen. Chase, because he was the head and really the responsible party; I also talked with the assistant adjutant general, Col. Lee, and it is possible I may have talked to two or three other officers.

Chairman WALSH. Please state the conversation you had with Gen. Chase.

Gen. FARRAR. I asked him whether or not it was true that one or two organizations which were mustered in at Trinidad and Walsenburg were recruited from men who had formerly been employed as guards in mines. He assured me that he had given instructions that that class of men were not to be recruited, and, so far as he had any knowledge, the two organizations in question were not composed of this kind of men, except that he did find after an investigation that 11 men in the Trinidad organization—Troop A, I believe they call it—had been at some time or other employed as guards about the mine.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make any further investigation about that to find out whether any, as a matter of fact, had been enrolled, and that Gen. Chase did not know anything about or anything of that sort?

Gen. FARRAR. Only in the same line of investigation with reference to that Walsenburg company. I believe there was something like 13 men against whom specific objection had been made or were made by the labor unions, and also by the secretary of state at the time the pay rolls for the militia were considered by the auditing department having them in charge, and these men were all either in the Trinidad or in the Walsenburg organization.

Chairman WALSH. What steps, if any, have been taken by your office to investigate the occurrence of Ludlow of April 20, 1914?

Gen. FARRAR. I have taken every opportunity or every step which opportunity afforded me. As stated before, I did not have and have not seen the testimony—the evidence—taken by the military court-martial relative to that question, but I did, however, undertake an independent investigation of my own after the governor had directed me to assume the prosecution of these perpetrators of the crime arising out of this condition, particularly in Huerfano and Las Animas Counties. I went down and met the grand jury as soon as it was called, and spent myself considerable time with them. At that time there were charges being freely made of the Ludlow affair. And if I may, this will just take a little time and may save time to come back again.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Gen. FARRAR. Charges were also made and freely made by the strikers of violation of the law by the militia and in other respects by the authorities or officers of that county. These charges went further than that, and I believe the strike itself was called upon certain charges as to the violation of the law by the operating coal miners. More specifically the violation of the eight-hour law, the violation of the law with respect to checkweighmen, company stores, scrip, and similar things. These were specific charges or grounds for calling the strike. Now, as your honor has elicited from me, I have no authority to prosecute except under direction of the governor or the general assembly. Therefore, when the direction was given to me to take charge of the prosecution in those counties it was for the first time an opportunity to enter into the prosecutions of the crimes or any if they had been committed. I will state that in the summer of 1913, before the strike was called, I had occasion to go to Walsenburg to make some investigation there with reference to certain questions that were pending between the State and that county with reference to taxes and some other matters. I found at that time that the unions were organizing, and it was apparent that a strike would be called in the event that they received a sufficient number of men to go out.

Now, at that time a good many people there, as I afterwards found out to be more or less directly interested in the union, were making charges against the authorities. Charges were made against the sheriff, Jeff Farr. Charges were made against other officers there. I got in consultation with the district attorney, Mr. Hendricks, and I suggested a certain plan to him for the prosecution of these officers. He declined to do anything whatsoever, although he was avowedly in sympathy with the people that were opposed to Jeff Farr and was avowedly in sympathy with the people who were organizing the United Mine Workers in that district.

Now, later on, in October of 1913, after the strike had been declared, I went to Trinidad and Walsenburg in connection with the governor. This was before any militia were sent into the field. I felt at that time that if a definite and vigorous prosecution was commenced against any offender that it might allay the situation and prevent further disaster. I saw the district attorney, and he declined absolutely to make a request upon the district judge for a grand jury. His words to me, in effect, were these:

"I am willing to prosecute; if they will bring me the evidence I will prosecute, but I am not going to turn myself into a detective agency for the sake of getting evidence; but if they will bring evidence in I will prosecute."

Now, then, getting back specifically to your question. When the grand jury convened I stated to that grand jury that they were called as an impartial body. I desire to say here that, regardless of the reports which have been made, I have never seen a more fair-minded body of men gathered together under conditions such as prevailed there than were the 12 men who constituted that grand jury. And the charges which have been made that they were absolutely one-sided and partisan are absolutely without foundation whatever. I stated to them that they were called together as an impartial body to prefer charges against any persons who may be thought to be guilty of the violations of the law, and it was our duty to investigate every charge of violation of the law, no matter by whom made or by whom committed. They agreed with me absolutely, and the plan was outlined that I should communicate to the strikers the fact that the grand jury was open for any complaint which they had to make and that we insisted that they should produce any evidence which they might have with reference to any violation of any law.

I returned to Denver before we commenced our formal work, and I notified Mr. John McLennan, the president of district 15, of this situation and told him that I insisted and that I demanded that if they had any evidence of violation of the law by any persons, or by any organization of any kind or any nature, that they should produce it before that grand jury, even evidence that might tend against the militia or the peace officers or any other officer of the State. He told me that he would communicate my demand to Mr. Lawson. Whether or not he did so I have not been able to learn, except that I understand and do know from reports made to me that this statement was communicated to Mr. Lawson through other sources. I called Mr. Horace Hawkins, chief attorney for the United Mine Workers, and made substantially the same statement to him, adding to it this: That in the event that the grand jury did not indict, and there was reasonable evidence, I would myself file an information, regardless of what action the grand jury would take, and would prosecute. Mr. Hawkins replied to me as follows: "Farrar, probably you do not intend it that way, but that is an insult."

A committee of the grand jury, headed by the foreman, went to Trinidad, to the union headquarters at Trinidad, and the same demand was made upon them there, but they got no specific answer. The same thing was taken up also with the local attorney for the union, Mr. Clark—Fred W. Clark—at Trinidad, and after a while we learned through Mr. Clark that the union would not present any evidence of any kind or character.

May I go a little bit further?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Gen. FARRAR. I have been endeavoring to get what evidence of the situation I could myself, but it was almost impossible to get any evidence, through the grand jury, out of any member of the union. While they did not openly refuse to testify, the few that were brought before the grand jury were very reticent to testify and gave practically no information upon those lines.

Now, then, if I may go further; my own investigation carried me a little further than that. It was apparent from the situation as it arose at that time that there was a joint conspiracy, which led to the burning of the mines above Aguilar; I refer to the Southwestern, Royal, Green Canyon, and the Empire, and the destruction of the property there; the attack upon Forbes; the attack upon the Chandler mine in another county; that is, in Fremont County; and the trouble which arose in Boulder County, and also the trouble which arose in Walsenburg; that there must have been some joint or common plan of action, and the work of investigation through the grand juries in the various counties has been directed toward finding out whether or not that was true. I have found out that there was a complete systematic organization which resulted in these attacks being made at practically the same time in four of the counties. I found that on the day, or two days, before the Ludlow incident, at least two automobile loads of ammunition were taken into that Ludlow camp by the strikers; armed men were taken from Canon City, or not Canon City, but Fremont County, below Canon City, into the Walsenburg district, and as far south as Ludlow. Armed men were brought in from New Mexico, and after the Forbes battle, returned in numbers to New Mexico. Coupled with that, this significant fact, that about 10 days or 2 weeks before the Ludlow incident happened, and before the troops were withdrawn, Mr. John Lawson, sitting in my office, talking over the situation with me, made the statement relative to the miners in Las Animas County, that if they ever got a chance they would wipe the militia off the face of the earth.

I put it down as merely an idle threat. I had heard many more of like character; but coupled with the fact that the militia were ordered out of the district and had been gradually withdrawn until there remained only 42 men, and also the fact that the arms and ammunition were taken into that camp two days before, and considering also the fact that there were 35 men, one of whom was a crook, at Ludlow, at the time the fighting commenced, leads me to the conclusion that it is against all human probability that 35 men who had been ordered home and would have been home in the next two or three days, would have commenced an attack upon two or three hundred or more armed men amongst whom were Greeks, Servians, Roumanians, Italians, and Austrians—men known to be armed and men who were desperate—some being men who were brought back here, or did return here, from the Balkan War—men who had certificates, certain health certificates, from ship doctors in 1913.

Now, I desire to say further that my investigation in this thing has not been that of the military men; it has not been that of the governor of this State; but as attorney general. I want to be distinctly understood as saying that I entered office with the most kindly feeling toward the United Mine Workers. That feeling still exists as to many members of that union. There are men in it whom I know are honorable and upright; but I want to say that there are others who, in my judgment, can be characterized only by the term which I have used before, "anarchists." It is not an industrial situation you gentlemen are investigating. It has passed beyond that stage. It has reached the question simply of whether or not a government was going to be maintained in Colorado, or whether it was not going to be maintained.

Now, there are one or two other phases of this question I would like to speak about. Your question did not go directly to it, but possibly I will facilitate the matter—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You are covering my questions very well, and I will ask you to just go ahead. I had a number to ask you as to this conspiracy that you believed existed, but you can go ahead in your own way and state it.

Gen. FARAR. Just let me add one or two more words there. Aguilar was practically dominated by the union, and it is to-day. After the Ludlow incident the troops returned to the field; and, by the way, this Ludlow situation occurred when Gov. Ammons was in Washington. I was also in Washington. Lieut. Gov. Fitzgerald was occupying the chair, and he ordered the troops back into the field. They returned, I believe, on the 24th, although of that I have no personal knowledge. Now, through some action or some influence that was brought to bear upon Lieut. Gov. Fitzgerald, he entered into a so-called truce, whereby he directed the militia to stop at Ludlow and go no farther south. Now, that left them tied up at Ludlow. As a matter of fact they were tied up at Ludlow. Aguilar is to the north, Trinidad is to the south of Ludlow. A vast number of armed strikers took possession of the city of Trinidad. They practically controlled it for some time. With the militia hung up, a reign of terror prevailed in Trinidad to such an extent that Fred W. Clark reported over the phone one night to Horace M. Hawkins, with whom I was in conference, that he, although attorney for the union at that place, was so fearful that violence was going to occur that he had just returned from taking his wife and babies into the basement of his house the minute before he answered the telephone call from Denver from Mr. Hawkins. On one day down there the strikers notified the people of the First National Bank to be out of that building in 30 minutes or it would be blown up. I do not know whether they got out or not. But strikers kept congregating in the city of Trinidad.

Now, then, they made an attack from Aguilar upon four mines, that many at least—the Royal, the Green Canyon, the Empire, and one other, I don't recollect just now. Now, with the destruction of those four properties and several persons killed, they looted the houses of the men working there and of the mine officials, and the furniture, household goods, and all sorts of things which they could find in the houses were hauled by the wagonload out of those camps down to Aguilar where some of it still remains.

When they made the attack upon the Forbes mine—I am not sure whether it was the 26th or not—there were no militia there. They came along the ridge above the camp, appearing at daylight, probably several hundred of them. There were no mine guards with the exception of two or three employed as guards, although I believe that certain workmen in the mine were detailed in the night to act as guards, word having been received that the attack would be made. It was snowing, and they finally took the camp, killing, I believe, eight men in the camp. But the point is that they dragged women and children out of their beds in a snowstorm and started them out barefooted in their night clothes down the canyon. I am speaking advisedly. They pulled mattresses off the beds, put them in the middle of the floors, jerked the lamps down and emptied the kerosene on these mattresses and set them on fire, wantonly burning house after house. There were no militia there; there were no deputy sheriffs there.

Now, on the 26th they made the same sort of attack on Candler, in Fremont County, the attack covering two days. There were no militia in that county whatsoever. They followed the same tactics there; went through the camp breaking in the doors and stealing the valuables out of the houses. I speak advisedly when I say this. All throughout those four counties this movement was simultaneous. Ammunition had been taken by load after load from Denver. Men, as I stated, came in from the south from New Mexico. Ammunition was taken even from Denver north to Louisville and Lafayette. So I have contended and do maintain that there was a general State-wide conspiracy which brought about an attack at a time which was very advantageous for them, the governor being out of the State and the militia having been withdrawn and being more or less disorganized. I believe that answers the question.

Chairman WALSH. That was in 1914—in what month? Commissioner Ballard wants to know in what month that occurred. It was in the month of April, as I understand.

Gen. FARRAR. Yes; April.

Chairman WALSH. 1914?

Gen. FARRAR. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And immediately following the Ludlow incident?

Gen. FARRAR. Yes, sir.

Now, I desire to call attention to another point which I did not emphasize. This truce had been entered into and was supposed to be a fact, and the militia were held up by reason of this truce. I can not understand why a truce should be made with anarchy, but it was made.

Chairman WALSH. Do I understand that under the law you do not take part in prosecutions in the counties of the State, or make investigations, unless directed by the general assembly or the governor?

Gen. FARRAR. There are one or two laws—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Briefly, what are the exceptions? Do they affect the industrial situations?

Gen. FARRAR. They do not; no. They affect trust questions. There is the general law and there are one or two exceptions in specific statutes.

Chairman WALSH. Then it is not your duty to make any investigation as to whether or not the election laws are obeyed in the counties of the State, or whether political corruption exists, or improper influences are brought to bear, or not?

Gen. FARRAR. Well, I did make such an investigation; whether my duty or not, I made it.

Chairman WALSH. In what county?

Gen. FARRAR. Las Animas and Huerfano; particularly Huerfano.

Chairman WALSH. When did you make it?

Gen. FARRAR. That was made as I stated, on my first trip down to Walsenburg, after I was inaugurated. Early in 1913, early in the summer, I believe, I made a partial investigation in that regard.

Chairman WALSH. Was it after the Ludlow incident?

Gen. FARRAR. Oh, no it was the year before.

Chairman WALSH. The year before?

Gen. FARRAR. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. In what month?

Gen. FARRAR. I can not recall the month.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make a personal investigation?

Gen. FARRAR. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And what did you ascertain, briefly, as to the condition there so far as the political control was concerned—alleged political control by the company?

Gen. FARRAR. I found a very perfect political machine, just as much a machine as Tammany in New York, as I have any knowledge of it; just as much of a machine as you will find in any of the places where a great many voters are susceptible to an organization of that character. I found that the head of this political machine is the sheriff, and that it was carried along lines very similar to those maintained in Tammany; that is, it had a system of relief in cases of need, had a system of giving rewards to its people, and I think, briefly speaking, the term "machine" covers the situation, just such a machine as you people may have in your own States or your own cities. Certainly, it was a machine.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ascertain from what source money came to assist in organizing and maintaining it?

Gen. FARRAR. I was not able to place that definitely. I believe that the machine probably—well, I can not say that it existed with the help of the coal companies; I believe, rather, it existed through its power as a machine over the coal companies. That is, I can not be sure which was cause and which was effect; but there was undoubtedly some relationship between the two. But whether or not any money was ever used, I have absolutely no knowledge at all.

Chairman WALSH. Is there a law in this State which prevents or prohibits the use of money by corporations in elections?

Gen. FARRAR. Not that I recall right now, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ascertain whether or not the result of the work of this machine was to control the actions of coroners' juries in cases where death resulted from accidents in the mines, and also to control the actions for damages, for personal injuries, that might be brought in the courts of those counties?

Gen. FARRAR. No; my investigation did not lead me into that at that time, and particularly with reference to coroners' inquests—at that time no suggestion was made with reference to that.

In fact, Mr. Walsh, my investigations were made largely from this standpoint and probably incidental to it. I am a Democrat; that organization was Republican; and for a good many years my party had been complaining of the control which they had over that county, and I went down there as a Democrat to try and work the thing out from a Democratic standpoint; and the evidence did not come to me from the industrial standpoint whatever at that time.

Chairman WALSH. This was purely an investigation from the standpoint of politics?

Gen. FARRAR. Well, that phase of it was; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did it come under your jurisdiction to make an investigation as to whether the mining laws of the State were being obeyed?

Gen. FARRAR. No; it did not. And, as I stated before, upon the occasion of my being directed to go into those counties that was the first time in which I had any jurisdiction to prosecute for that trouble or for that cause, if any existed. Never before had I had the opportunity, and I was anxious to see that there should be a full and complete investigation on that occasion. I got nowhere with it.

Chairman WALSH. Now, unless you have some statement you desire to make yourself, General, you will be excused.

Gen. FARRAR. I have one other specific one.

When the troops were ordered into the field on the 28th day of October, 1913, the order having been made along about midnight the night previous, I was not present. For some reason the governor did not call on me that night, but he sent a letter of instruction, one of which was to the effect that the militia should permit all striking miners to return to work who desired to go to work, and to give them protection; and that until otherwise ordered no strike breakers should be brought into the field. Now, it is a significant fact that just as long as that order maintained the militia were indirectly aiding the strike. Striking miners came to me and commented most favorably upon the conduct of the militia in the field. Reports came to me that they were playing ball together, they fraternized together, and everything was lovely. But that order of the governor was untenable, except as an absolute military necessity; that is, that it would be an absolute necessity to keep strike breakers out in order to maintain order. There was also a practical question involved, and that was that coal was prohibitive both in price and in supply. Winter was coming on and coal was selling here—and I mean lignite coal, such as we produce—at from $9 to $10 per ton and could not be procured in sufficient quantities at that price, and every industry depending on coal was in a serious condition.

I told the governor that the operators had a property right in their mines which they were entitled to enjoy; that men had a right to work; and that his position was tenable solely upon the ground that it was absolutely an imperative necessity in order to maintain order. I understand my view was not shared by Senator Patterson, but I will give you my views for what it is worth. The governor, therefore, modified that order and men were allowed to go to work. When he modified the order he gave specific directions that the militia should see that the men brought to the mines to work were previously informed that a strike was in progress, and so far as I learned the militia required in every instance that that should be done. They gave the men brought in to work safe conduct to the mines and the production of coal was resumed by the mines. From the minute that the order was changed the relationship between the militia and the strikers changed also, and the strikers began to abuse the militia and continued to abuse them from that moment on.

Now, in January the conditions over at Oak Creek, in Rout County, had become acute. So far as I had information, neither the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. nor the Victor-American Co. or the other large company operates over there. It is a small company that operates over there. I may not be correct, but it is my understanding. Trouble had occurred and become somewhat intense and the citizens had become somewhat impatient. They organized, I am informed, about 1,000 men for the purpose of seeing that conditions were restored to their normal state over there, and they gave a number of agitators in that strike so many hours to get out of town. That was largely brought about through several going to the town of Steamboat Springs and starting up agitation there. One by the name of Stiner, or Stinelhart, is reported to have said—and I got this report from good authority—"I am not an American citizen; I owe allegiance to no country. The United States is the worst country on earth," and then he used an expression relative to the American flag that I can not quote in evidence in public. That was the last straw that broke the camel's back, and they were given by the people a certain length of time to get out.

At this time the strikers were bitterly assailing the militia in the southern field, and on Sunday, January 4, 1914, the governor called me in the afternoon to come to his house because he was fearful that serious trouble would occur at Oak Creek. I went to his house and while I was there, Mr. Ed. J. Doyle, who has testified here, and some other man, who had been called an agitator and had been told to leave Oak Creek, came to the governor's house. Mr. Doyle came and told of the situation over there, that they had organized the citizens and they were going to drive the union miners away from Oak Creek, and he demanded that the governor protect them. I said, "Mr. Doyle, what do you mean?" He said, "I want protection." I said, "Be specific, what do you mean when you say you want protection?" He said, "I want our men's lives and property protected over there." I said, "Do you realize that the only thing the governor can do is to send troops over there for that purpose? Do you ask that troops go over there?" He said, "We want protection." I said, "Let us understand each other; the only thing the governor can do is to send troops over there. Do you want that?" He said, "I demand protection." And the next day a company of militia was sent to Oak Creek at the specific request of the union, who ever since have been complaining that the militia were abusing them every day.

I think that is all, Mr. Chairman, unless you have some other questions to ask.

Chairman WALSH. I have been asked to ask you this question—and we have but very little time: Was the terror in Trinidad caused by the fear that the militia would come on from Ludlow, in your opinion?

Gen. FARRAR. The terror was caused—was because of the striking miners who had possession of the town and were patrolling it with armed bodies of men up and down the streets day and night and the militia was hung up at Ludlow.

Chairman WALSH. Is it not a fact that a week after the Ludlow battle, Trinidad, which was absolutely in control of the strikers, was about the only peaceable town in that district?

Gen. FARRAR. It is not.

Chairman WALSH. Did Judge Northcutt help conduct the Trinidad grand jury, or what part did he take in it?

Gen. FARRER. He was called as a witness.

Chairman WALSH. And took no other part in it?

Gen. FARRER. No; but I consulted him privately from time to time about that and some other matters of which he had knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. I am asked to inquire of you if you know about the looting of saloons and the destruction and confiscation of liquors in the Snodgrass store at Ludlow, also the complete destruction of bakeries, rooming houses, and private residences at Ludlow by the militia?

Gen. FARRER. I know nothing of it.

Chairman WALSH. You have no information in regard to the matter?

Gen. FARRER. No.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, General.

Mr. Northcutt.

TESTIMONY OF JUDGE JESSE G. NORTHCUTT—Recalled.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Before beginning your interrogatories, I want to make a correction.

Chairman WALSH. I am not going to interrogate you further, but I am going to say that the commission has concluded to sit here all day and has a different program; and you would not have been recalled but for the fact that Commissioner O'Connell wants to ask you a question or two. I am compelled to restrict this redirect examination, as you might call it, to 20 minutes.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I will object to his questions if you will sustain my objections.

Chairman WALSH. I will cooperate with you in restricting it to 20 minutes.

Judge NORTHCUTT. One correction I want to make which was suggested to me yesterday afternoon. It was that in introducing the pamphlet which I introduced here, I denominated it "American Citizen." If I did so, I want to substitute "Armed Citizen" for "American Citizen."

Chairman WALSH. You did say, "American Citizen"; I remember it.

Judge NORTHCUTT. The paper itself showed "Armed Citizen."

Mr. Osgood went on the witness stand and explained about the houses in the camps; that the houses constructed by the companies and rented to the men were of a substantial, comfortable character; that some of the people constructed shacks which they owned themselves. In corroboration of that I hold in my hand a number of photographs which I shall introduce in evidence.

Chairman WALSH. Hand them to the messenger, please.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I will do so.

(The witness submitted 31 photographs of dwellings, churches, schoolhouses, boarding houses, and mining camp views.)

These likewise show the character of the schools in the camps and the churches. Rev. James McDonald testified as to the absence of churches. You will see some substantial churches.

Just one word in addition to what Gen. Farrar has told about the terror prevailing in Trinidad, when occupied by the strikers. It will be observed that the strikers had marched from the Black Hills east of Ludlow 12 or 15 miles to Trinidad and took possession of it. They occupied as headquarters for some time a hall called Castle Hall in Trinidad, and from this hall floated a Greek flag, which was there for some days and until the approach of the Federal troops, when their leaders told them they would have to take it down, because the Federal troops would not allow it to remain. They got quite indignant, but removed it. They had a tent colony or tent city out on the old ground previously occupied by the militia. I believe that is all I have to say in regard to that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Judge, you have got me up a tree as to what your position is as to the rights of organized labor. In your testimony of yesterday you read into the record a number of circular letters, actions of various kinds of the United Mine Workers' organization, its international officers, going back for several years, to show that, or to substantiate a later statement made by you—that the United Mine Workers were responsible for all of the struggle and strike in Colorado?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That is substantially correct, and I reiterate it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is boiled down in this one sentence [reading]: "Now, I have stated and reiterate that the cause of the present strike is the effort of the United Mine Workers of America to organize the coal fields of Colorado, and I think that is given out or corroborated by their declarations from their own organization."

Am I to understand that it is an unlawful act for the United Mine Workers of America to come into Colorado in an effort to organize the miners working in Colorado?

Judge NORTHCUTT. You ask me if it is unlawful?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes.

Judge NORTHCUTT. It is not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Am I to understand that it is your position that the organization of the mine workers in Colorado having members of the United Mine Workers not citizens of the State of Colorado is a violation of the laws of Colorado?

Judge NORTHCUTT. It is not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Am I to understand, then, from the expression contained here in the minutes, that you think the best interests of the mine workers of Colorado is served or would be served by the United Mine Workers of America keeping out of the coal fields of North America?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, I had expressed no opinion upon that subject, but if you wish my opinion upon the matter, gentlemen, it is this: That no set of men and no institution can be benefited by the methods pursued by the United Mine Workers of America. If you will observe, in every State in which they have operated, so far as my reading carries me, they have pursued the same methods that they have pursued in Colorado. The cases which have gone to the courts of last resort, in which they have passed on, which grew out of strikes inaugurated and conducted by them, disclose a state of facts precisely similar in character to their conduct in Colorado. Take the case reported in the 64th Southwestern that went up to the Supreme Court of Kentucky, and the "Shortoll" case. The Kentucky case, I think, was the case of Lindell v. Commonwealth, and there was a case in West Virginia, and in every case that has come to the supreme court growing out of strikes conducted by the United Mine Workers of America, the reports abound in details of violence and bloodshed. People in America ought not to be permitted to conduct their affairs in that shape.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then I take it from the testimony that you do not wish to convey the idea that the mine workers were not within their rights in coming into Colorado and attempting to organize the mine workers in Colorado?

Judge NORTHCUTT. It has been decided time and again, by the courts in the United States, State as well as Federal, that employees have the right to organize labor unions, and that they have the right to strike to enforce their demands.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I will get to that in a minute. The laws of Colorado, as I understand, provide that an employer can not discriminate or discharge a man because of his membership in a union?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Correct.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, the reverse of that must be true, that they have the right to organize?

Judge NORTHCUTT. No one disputes it; I never did.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, if they have the right to organize they also have the right to strike?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes; there is no question about that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, the mine workers, in passing resolutions, either at their national convention or district convention or by any means best suited to themselves, and deciding that there should be a strike of the miners in Colorado, were within their perfect right in doing it?

Judge NORTHCUTT. They committed no crime in doing so. It is not the ordering of a strike that constitutes a crime, but the accumulation of arms and ammunition and the gathering together of lawless men to go out and burn and kill; that is where the crime lies, and these people have never disputed it, and they have had numerous opportunities to dispute it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In your testimony of yesterday you gave evidence as to the treatment of Gen. Chase, particularly favorable to the men who struck. Have you in mind any particular case or instance in which he showed any special consideration for the men on strike?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, when he came there he was very free to confer with the leaders of the strike, which was proper. And when he went to get their arms his conduct was very different from his conduct in disarming the guards. He required the guards of the companies to deliver up their arms, which they did. The strikers treated him with utter contempt, and he very resignedly accepted the situation. I certainly regarded that as a great favor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is what you had in mind when you said he showed the strikers great consideration?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes; and I don't think the strikers will deny that they looked on the military as their friends.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know anything of the officers of the strikers entering into an agreement with Gen. Chase, or anyone else, to have the strikers turn over their arms which they had?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I only have Gen. Chase's word for it, I do not vouch for the truth of it. He said that Lawson had promised him to turn over the arms of the strikers, or have the strikers do it. That is my recollection. You might ask him, I may be mistaken about it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You cited and pictured for the commission in a most dramatic manner—

Judge NORTHCUTT (interrupting). Thank you.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The killing, wounding, and shooting of people during this trouble. I note you did not make any mention of the killing of Louis Tikas. How was he killed?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I thought there had been enough said about that. I do not know anything about it excepting what I have heard here from the witness stand. I was not there.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it a violation of law or ethics for a militiaman to kill a prisoner?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I should think so. It is a violation of law to kill any person excepting in self-defense.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you understand that Tikas was a prisoner at the time he met his death?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I know nothing about it excepting what I have heard related here. I presume he was. I think Lieut. Linderfelt said he was a prisoner.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you hear Lieut. Linderfelt's testimony?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you hear him say that he had declared martial law?

Judge NORTHCUTT. He said something about that, I do not recall his exact language, but he said he promulgated the declaration of martial law.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think it was within the authority of a man employed as a guard for a coal corporation even though a member of the State militia, which had not yet been called out, to declare martial law?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, I would certainly want to know all of the circumstances before I approved of that sort of action; but the mere fact that he may have been active as a guard for a coal company would not obviate or destroy any authority he might otherwise possess to declare martial law. If the governor of the State happened to be acting in that capacity and the circumstances justified a declaration of martial law, he certainly could so declare it. Also if Linderfelt likewise possessed the authority, he could so declare. I do not think the proclamation has much to do with the proposition, anyhow.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The governor would then simply designate a certain individual at a certain place to declare martial law, regardless of whether the militia of the State had been ordered out or not?

Judge NORTHCUTT. That is in this case certainly an academic question, because nothing of the kind was done. The governor did not designate anybody that I know of.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You did hear Linderfelt say that he had declared martial law?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I take it he merely promulgated what he understood to have been previously declared. That is the way I construed his testimony, not that the declaration emanated from him in the first instance, but I take it his testimony meant, and in fact that is the way I remember his testimony, that he had been advised by his superior officer that martial law had been declared and he gave out the evidence of it. That is my recollection of his testimony, and if he so understood it, even though mistaken, he was not acting improperly. Even though he might have been illy advised or erroneously advised, he is not to blame for inaugurating the order which he understood to exist.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, he might assume then and take it for granted that he was mistaken to say to the courts of these counties, "I am the law," and to the citizens of the county, "You must obey me," and state afterwards that he was mistaken?

Judge NORTHCUTT. He never did that, and I do not see the propriety of hypothecating any question upon it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think the testimony will show that was his position.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Perhaps.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. During your discussion you spoke about the necessity of a law to prevent a recurrence of the things that have taken place.

Judge NORTHCUTT. More the propriety than the necessity of it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I suppose you have in mind that if Colorado or the National Government had laws, for instance, that created a board of mediation, conciliation, or arbitration, or something similar to that now in practice now in railroad service, that the corporations, the coal corporations of Colorado would come in and act in accordance with such laws?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I have not the slightest doubt but what the coal operators of Colorado will obey any law enacted by legally constituted legislative bodies having jurisdiction over the territory where they operate. I have serious doubts, however, as to the other parties obeying it. That has been the answer that always presents itself to me when we talk of compulsory arbitration and tribunals to adjudicate these labor troubles. What is the use of legislating for people that won't obey the laws as they exist?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Let us see if we can not confine it to the side we are discussing and get the other fellows after a while. Do you think, yourself, that such a law or regulation as would require that a board composed of a number of reputable citizens, to be appointed by the President of the United States, to bring people together, would be in the direction of future peace and for the benefit and prosperity of the country generally?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Of course it is mere prognostication, any opinion I might express in the matter. I do not think that an experiment of that kind would hurt anything, and it might do some good. I have long entertained the idea that some law ought to be enacted to prevent changing conditions as they exist in the labor field without first appealing to some tribunal either now in existence or to be designated to adjust the matter. To illustrate very briefly: Before an operator could reduce wages he might be required to give notice to his employees that he intended to so reduce wages, and if they objected to that, let them specify, in some properly designated way, their objection, and let the tribunal investigate the matter and thrash it out, very much the way they do now rate questions and things of that kind. If the laborers desire a raise in wages and can not get it upon application, let them appeal to the tribunal and have the matter investigated. I have long thought that some proper method of that character was worthy of consideration and might be evolved.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know Jefferson B. Farr?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I am acquainted with the gentleman.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is Mr. Farr's standing in the community where he is sheriff?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Very good.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is his financial standing?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think Mr. Farr is well fixed financially—he is substantial financially. He is not rich and he is not poor. He owns quite a lot of irrigated land and reservoirs and canals and some cattle—just how many I don't know—and some bank stock. The tangible property that is in sight is of considerable value. I do not know how much he owes, if anything.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know of the corporation that he is president of? I think he said the corporation that owns buildings and property?

Judge NORTHCUTT. The mercantile company?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well there is a realty company.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is the one I refer to—incorporated for $50,000.

Judge NORTHCUTT. It is a speculative company, and he owns one-fourth of the stock in that, and it owns quite a number of town lots and, I think, some buildings.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know his method of carrying on the liquor business in that county?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, there are two mercantile companies there, one called the Spanish Peaks Mercantile Co. and the other the Good Night Mercantile Co. One of these companies, I am not sure which, owns some—one or two—saloons and probably is interested in the wholesale liquor business and, I think, is the agent for some brewery.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you ever heard as to the method or kind of leases that he makes with his tenants as to the requirement that they shall deal with his mercantile company or wholesale house?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I never heard of that until it was mentioned here yesterday. I do not know that I see any impropriety in it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it generally rumored in the county that he controls the wholesale and retail saloon business?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I never have heard of that, except upon an occasion now and then when some fellow is dissatisfied with the courts and makes application for a change of venue from the county or something. He then sets up a great story about Farr controlling the county through his liquor interests; but that is about to end and can not be maintained much longer, if true—and I do not think it is true.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The charge is also made that the political party that does not meet with your approval can not secure halls in which addresses are to be made, and that Farr looks after this.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Farr is a Republican and has been in the Republican Party ever since I knew him. That is likewise the party with which I have been affiliated up to a few years ago, when I made some change for my own reasons.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Farr was on your ticket last year?

Judge NORTHCUTT. He was in 1914.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I suppose, of course, fathered by the Republican Party as such, with the rest of the candidates?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is a good citizen and perfectly qualified for the position?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes; he is one of the best officers in the State of Colorado.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Perfectly humane?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes, sir; and as far as I know he is a man of generous nature and a companionable fellow and a moral man. I do not think anyone would raise any question as to Mr. Farr's morals. It is true that he is interested in the liquor business. Up to date it has been a legitimate business under the laws of Colorado, and many good people are interested in it directly or indirectly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Among those photographs you have handed up, you speak of churches and other things. I find a picture of just one church.

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think there are two or three more.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you any idea of the number of churches in these coal camps and the denominations of them?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes; it is very general, too, and not very specific. I think that in practically every coal camp of any size there is at least one church, and the most of them are Catholic churches, very properly so, as the employees are, a very large percentage of them, of the Catholic faith. There is a large Catholic denomination in our country. There is a large church in Trinidad and that is the parish residence, and there must be five or six priests living in Trinidad and they go out to these various mining camps. They are very energetic and faithful to their duty and do a great deal of good, undoubtedly.

Now, whether there are churches of the Protestant denominations in any of those camps, I do not know. Undoubtedly there are persons here who do know, and I think it would be well that the record should show it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is there any effort made that you know of to discourage the attendance of miners at the churches or other places of public gathering where they might get together?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Absolutely none. On the contrary, I am advised that one of the coal companies, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., has what it terms a welfare department and devotes a great deal of attention to church work. They have inaugurated Sunday schools in their camps, and sermons are delivered every so often. On the contrary from discouraging it, I don't know how much they encourage it. I believe the executive officers of the companies, so far as I know them, are church people, perhaps not all of them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you hear the testimony of Rev. James McDonald?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I did.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Whose testimony would indicate that everything was done to prevent the success of his efforts, his mission, and his Sunday school?

Judge NORTHCUTT. He is like every other man who is a failure in life, he is disgruntled. If you will read his cross-examination at the congressional investigation I think the reason for his statements are there disclosed.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is he disgruntled with social affairs, or in what way would you imply that he was disgruntled?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Apparently with his surroundings. In his testimony previously referred to he condemned some of the officials of Las Animas County, the school superintendent in particular, and when it came to ascertaining the reason for it, it was found that he had applied for a teacher's certificate, and applied for it without taking the examination, which the superintendent could not lawfully grant. That was the foundation for his antipathy to the school superintendent and to the schools, undoubtedly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Am I to understand from your testimony, Judge, that it is possible to obtain justice for the rich man and for the poor man alike in these counties represented in these mining districts?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think it is a possibility; yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it your opinion that such has been the case?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, I certainly could not answer in the negative because I can not point to any specific instance in which any person has been a victim of an injustice. There may have been such and likely, if my attention were called to it, I would recognize it, but I do not have in mind any such instance.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think the testimony offered to this commission of the number of deaths that have occurred in the mines and the fact that so few cases have been brought before the courts, would indicate that it is in the minds of the operators mining in these counties that justice can be obtained in the courts?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Well, it probably has not been disclosed to the commission, and it ought to be, that nearly all of those deaths which took place in what you may term a wholesale manner—that is, as a result of explosions, were adjusted by the companies.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As they have apparently been adjusted, from the list we have, on a $300 basis.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Those that I know anything about were much more than that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In one case the company was held responsible. The rest were settled.

Judge NORTHCUTT. On this subject of protection, and so forth, the men are not so poor in that regard as you may think. Nearly all of these foreigners who work in the mines of Colorado have the protection of their Governments on matters of that character. In fact, anything they complained to their consuls about, they will get relief.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am using the terms "rich" and "poor" in a general sense.

Judge NORTHCUTT. Of course, we all know the benefit of money in litigation or anything else. You can get the best counsel and—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). When you were on the bench, did any cases come before you in the matter of claims for accidental death?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Some few. I recall one case now, Sunberg against the Union Coal & Coke Co. Mr. Hendricks brought it, and it was tried. I do not have now in mind the title of other cases, yet there were evidently some suits.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is the present circuit judge a law partner of yours?

Judge NORTHCUTT. He was.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But not now?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Certainly not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He was when elected?

Judge NORTHCUTT. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How long after did you dissolve your partnership?

Judge NORTHCUTT. I think probably we dissolved our partnership relations the 1st of December, 1912. He was elected in November, 1912, and the following month we closed our affairs, and he left the office. The district judges in this State are not permitted to practice law at all.

Chairman WALSH. You will be excused, Judge.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN R. LAWSON.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, please?

Mr. LAWSON. John R. Lawson.

Chairman WALSH. What is your full name? What does the R. stand for?

Mr. LAWSON. Rankin.

Chairman WALSH. John Rankin Lawson?

Mr. LAWSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is your age?

Mr. LAWSON. Forty-four years old the 5th of next March.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived in the State of Colorado?

Mr. LAWSON. Nearly 20 years.

Chairman WALSH. Where did you live before you came to Colorado?

Mr. LAWSON. In Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. Where were you born?

Mr. LAWSON. In Schuylkill County, Pa.

Chairman WALSH. Are you of American parentage?

Mr. LAWSON. No, sir; my parents were Scotch.

Chairman WALSH. What business was your father engaged in?

Mr. LAWSON. Coal mining.

Chairman WALSH. What business have you been engaged in all your life?

Mr. LAWSON. Coal mining, principally.

Chairman WALSH. Please state briefly to the commission your experience from the time you went into business life up until the present time, I mean the positions you have occupied?

Mr. LAWSON. Well, I have occupied a number of positions, in fact, I think nearly every position in the coal-mining industry up to mine foreman.

Chairman WALSH. At what age did you go to work in the coal mines?

Mr. LAWSON. I went to work in a coal breaker, an anthracite coal breaker, when I was 8 years of age.

Chairman WALSH. Have you been continuously in that industry ever since?

Mr. LAWSON. Yes, sir; excepting a brief period of time.

Chairman WALSH. Describe where you worked and your duties briefly?

Mr. LAWSON. I worked first in the anthracite coal breakers in and around Mount Carmel, Pa. I also worked in the mines there in various capacities, and as a coal miner. I left Pennsylvania and came to Oregon and worked in the coal mines there, and went from Oregon to Wyoming and worked in the coal mines at Rock Springs, Wyo., and then went from there to Walsenburg, in this State, and worked in the Walsen mine. From there I went to the western slope around Newcastle, and worked in the mines in that field the most of the time until 1905, when I was elected a member of the international executive board of the United Mine Workers of America.

Chairman WALSH. What have been your duties in that capacity?

Mr. LAWSON. Representing the miners on the international district board, the miners of district 15, I meant to say, and as an international organizer.

Chairman WALSH. Are you married or single?

Mr. LAWSON. Married.

Chairman WALSH. You reside in the city of Denver, do you?

Mr. LAWSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Whereabouts?

Mr. LAWSON. 4652 York Street at the present time.

Chairman WALSH. Please give us a brief account of your connection with the Colorado strike from its inception to the present time.

Mr. LAWSON. Mr. Chairman, on account of the fact that my counsel has advised against my talking about the southern situation concerning the coal strike, I have prepared a document here for the purpose that it may be thoroughly understood, and that it can not be misconstrued, and with your kind permission, I would be glad to read it to the commission.

Chairman WALSH. You may proceed to do so.

Mr. LAWSON (reading):

“DENVER, COLO., December 16, 1914.

“To the Commission on Industrial Relations:

“I have pending against me in the courts of Colorado 19 specific charges, ranging from conspiracy in restraint of trade to murder in the first degree, and including arson and assault to kill, and I am as innocent of any crime against the laws of my State or Nation as any individual sitting upon this bench listening to me here to-day.

"Down deep in the hearts of my persecutors they know that I am guilty of no crime, unless it be that I am a coal miner, having been honored by my fellow workmen in selecting me to represent them on the international executive board of the United Mine Workers of America.

"The records of the State and Federal courts of the Nation bear witness to the power of John D. Rockefeller to destroy the property, character, and even the lives of those who oppose him in his mad pursuit of wealth. For these reasons, by the advice of my counsel, Mr. Horace N. Hawkins, who is now engaged in the trial of a case at Canon City, I must decline to answer any questions whatsoever bearing upon the incidents leading up to and during the strike in the southern coal fields, although it was my sincere wish to fully and freely do so.

"I have this message, however, which I desire to communicate to President Wilson through the medium of this commission: I would most respectfully direct your attention, Mr. President, to the record of the hearings of the commission on Industrial Relations in the city of Denver, for undeniable proof of the fact that there is but one human being responsible for the deplorable conditions in the coal industry of the State of Colorado—Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr. Fortunately, this assertion is not based upon any statement that can be contradicted or denied, for the evidence is found in the correspondence between 26 Broadway, New York, and J. F. Welborn, Mr. Rockefeller's agent in Colorado.

"When you, Mr. President, submitted your suggestion for a settlement of this industrial conflict, which has agitated our State and has awakened the conscience of the Nation, every citizen in the land, save Mr. Rockefeller alone, construed it as a command from the head of the Nation. The reply came, ostensibly from Denver, but as now fully exposed before this commission, was in reality from 26 Broadway, New York. I quote from the letter of Mr. Starr J. Murphy, the personal representative of John D. Rockefeller, sr., and the reply from Mr. J. F. Welborn, as showing the trick that was played upon you by Mr. Rockefeller, and the deception which they practiced upon the American people, viz:

"26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK,
"September 15, 1914.

"DEAR MR. WELBORN: I have taken the liberty of sending you, merely by way of suggestion, a draft of a proposed letter from you as president of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., to President Wilson, which embodies my personal view of what it would be proper to say in case it should seem wise for our company to make a separate reply to the President's letter.

* * * * *

"STARR J. MURPHY."

"And the reply, as follows:

"DENVER, September 18, 1914.

"MY DEAR MR. MURPHY: I am very thankful for your kindness in writing me on the 15th instant, and sending me draft of the proposed letter to the President. * * * I think you will find that our letter, a copy of which I am inclosing, contains all of your ideas, with two exceptions. * * * But for Mr. Lee's presence here, and the invaluable assistance he has rendered in the preparation of our reply, I should have gone to New York for consultation with you, and considering the probable public criticism of my presence at your office at the time when it would have been generally known that the answers to the President's proposal were being prepared, I think it very fortunate that we have been able to make reply direct from Denver with the public fully informed as to my presence here.

"J. F. WELBORN."

"The Lee above referred to is Ivy Ledbetter Lee. He is the personal employee of Mr. Rockefeller, as admitted by Mr. Welborn in his testimony, this admission having been forced from the reluctant lips of Mr. Welborn on the witness stand, after first positively refusing to answer, and then begging for time to consult counsel as to his legal rights in the matter, and finally receiving permission to do so from his eastern employers.

"If you require further proof, Mr. President, as to the sole responsibility of Mr. Rockefeller, allow me to point to the testimony of Mr. Welborn to the effect that, immediately after leaving your presence, at the time of the submission of this letter in the early part of September, he reported directly to John D. Rockefeller, sr., at Tarrytown, N. Y., in company with John D. Rockefeller, jr., W. L. Mackenzie King, of the Dominion of Canada—also on the personal staff of Mr. Rockefeller—and Mr. Ivy Lee, who acted as the go-between for Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Welborn in the preparation of the letter to you, as revealed by the correspondence quoted above.

“In view of the fact that you have appointed Mr. Seth Low, of New York, at the head of a conciliation board, I would respectfully ask you to suggest that Mr. Low call upon John D. Rockefeller, sr., in person at the earliest opportunity, and urge upon him the acceptance of your suggestion to bring about industrial peace in Colorado.

“In common with countless millions of my fellow citizens, I recognize the fact that perhaps no other President in the history of our country has been called upon to intervene in so many difficult and delicate situations throughout this country and the world, looking toward the happiness and welfare of mankind. If your suggestion is not accepted by Mr. Rockefeller when presented by Mr. Low, this master of millions will be but the second person in the life of your administration who has spurred your kindly offices in the cause of peace and justice—the other one being Gen. Victoriano Huerta, late dictator of Mexico, present whereabouts unknown.

“The testimony given before this commission last week by Mr. Welborn places the issue squarely before the world: Is John D. Rockefeller greater than the Government? Is he higher than the law?”

Chairman WALSH. Then you decline to make any statement, as I understand it, as to the incidents leading up to this strike?

Mr. LAWSON. I must decline on advice of counsel.

Chairman WALSH. Is there anything further you wish to say?

Mr. LAWSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Then you may be excused.

Mr. Frank Hayes.

TESTIMONY OF MR. FRANK J. HAYES.

Chairman WALSH. State your full name, please.

Mr. HAYES. Frank Hayes.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. HAYES. My people live in Boulder, Colo., at the present time. I am from Indianapolis.

Chairman WALSH. Are you married or single?

Mr. HAYES. Single.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. HAYES. National vice president of the United Mines Workers of America.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you held that position?

Mr. HAYES. For—I took the position April 1, 1910; I have held it more than four years.

Chairman WALSH. What is your age?

Mr. HAYES. Thirty-two.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would begin at the entrance into your business life—at the beginning of your business life—and sketch your places of residence and employment down to the present time.

Mr. HAYES. I was born in What Cheer, Iowa, May 4, 1882. I went to work in the coal mines at the age of 13 at Mount Vernon, Ill. I was initiated and given the obligation of the United Mine Workers of America by my own father, who was president of a local union at the time I joined this organization. I worked in the coal mines of Illinois until I was 21 years of age. At that age I was elected secretary-treasurer of the Belleville subdistrict miners' union. I continued in the capacity of secretary-treasurer of that district until I was 26 years old. At the age of 26 I was elected State secretary-treasurer of the Illinois Mine Workers Union. At the age of 28 I was elected international vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, the position I am now occupying.

Chairman WALSH. What education did you receive in your boyhood?

Mr. HAYES. A common-school education.

Chairman WALSH. In what schools?

Mr. HAYES. The Mount Vernon school and Centralia schools. My father was quite a union man and was blacklisted in the early days and was forced to move from one coal camp to another, and due to that fact, I attended the common schools in a number of places.

Chairman WALSH. What was his business?

Mr. HAYES. Coal miner.

Chairman WALSH. You were born where?

Mr. HAYES. At What Cheer, Iowa.

Chairman WALSH. Your father was a native of what country?

Mr. HAYES. A native of the United States.

Chairman WALSH. He was a native American?

Mr. HAYES. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would be good enough, Mr. Hayes, to give a brief account of your connection with the Colorado strike from its inception to the present time.

Mr. HAYES. I came to Colorado in July, 1913, at the request of the miners of Colorado and the officials of the Colorado Miners' Union, not for the purpose of fomenting strife, but for the purpose of endeavoring to settle peaceably the strike in northern Colorado, as well as to adjust the grievances of the miners in southern Colorado. And with that thought in mind I endeavored to secure a conference with the operators of this State. I, along with my associates, wrote a letter to all the operators in the State, asking them to meet us in conference for the purpose of working out an amicable adjustment of the grievances complained of by the miners. We received no answer to that communication. We waited for almost a month after that communication had been sent to them and then decided, at the request of the Colorado miners, to call a convention to meet in Trinidad September 15, 1913, for the purpose of letting the miners then decide whether or not they wanted to continue the old system or whether or not they wanted to declare a strike to secure their freedom.

That convention was the largest attended miners' convention in the State of Colorado, regardless of what the operators say to the contrary, and practically every mining camp in the State sent a delegate. It was a representative convention. The men, where they could elect delegates openly, elected delegates; but, due to the system of feudalism that prevailed in southern California, it was impossible to elect delegates openly in that region, because to do so meant persecution and discharge and possibly assault by the large army of paid guards that they had around their property for that purpose. It meant as much as a man's life was worth to say that he was a union man, but secretly hundreds upon hundreds of those men expressed their desire to affiliate with this union and quietly and secretly elected delegates to this convention—the only way they could elect delegates was in that way.

The convention met. We invited the operators to attend this convention. We wanted to do everything in our power to avoid a strike. That was my keen personal desire. The operators failed to put in an appearance, ignored our invitation for the second time; and then the miners, seeing that all hope for a peaceful settlement had failed, seeing that the operators had refused to even meet with them, or their representatives, had refused to even answer the letters we sent to them, seeing that all hope had gone to secure redress of their grievances, they themselves, in convention assembled, decided to strike. I attended that convention. I did not say one single word in that convention until after the men themselves issued the strike order, and when they did issue the strike order I arose in that convention. I said I did not care to impress my views upon this convention. If the miners of Colorado themselves wanted to strike, then that was their business, and they would have our support; and I said if I had tried to persuade the miners of Colorado to strike I would have been held solely responsible, but now "You have declared this strike without any influence from me or any other so-called agitators."

The convention adjourned. The delegates in the convention wanted to strike immediately. They wanted to give the operators 24 hours' notice. I personally talked to several of the local leaders of miners in Colorado and told them to postpone the strike date one week, because I was convinced that when the operators saw that the miners were determined to strike they would possibly then seek a joint conference for the purpose of settling these disputes. But as a reward for my suggestion, when the delegates went back to their homes, practically all of them were chased out of the camp, notwithstanding their families were living in the coal camps, and were discharged. A week after the convention adjourned the strike began. I remained in the strike field up until December 22, 1913, and then, owing to the fact that our international convention was meeting in Indianapolis, I was forced to leave and forced to remain in the East to assist in negotiating wage agreements for the eastern miners until along in July, 1914, I believe, as nearly as I can remember, at which time I returned to Colorado. I was not in Colorado while most of the violence was occurring.

Chairman WALSH. To what extent were the miners and the local officials urged by the national officers to organize and call the strike?

Mr. HAYES. In accord with our duties as organizers, when we are appealed to by miners we are expected to go to them, listen to their grievances, and if they desire to organize, if there is a sentiment for organization, to do everything within our power to secure an organization, and we did do that very thing.

Chairman WALSH. Irrespective of the interests of the miners in Colorado, what benefits would accrue to the national organization by the unionization of the Colorado mines?

Mr. HAYES. There would be no pecuniary benefit accruing to the international organization. The only benefit that would accrue would be that which might be given to the Colorado miners themselves.

Chairman WALSH. Well, it has been stated that the admission fees, the initiation fees, and dues would add greatly to the financial benefit of the national organization. Just explain as to that.

Mr. HAYES. The national organization receives not one single cent of any initiation—not one single cent.

Chairman WALSH. What proportion of the dues do they receive? What sort of per capita tax, or whatever you call it?

Mr. HAYES. Only 25 cents per month, the smallest dues, I think, of any great international union in the world.

Chairman WALSH. What would that amount to in a year if the organization was protected as designed in Colorado, approximately?

Mr. HAYES. Well, it would amount to about $30,000 a year.

Chairman WALSH. How are funds so collected, expended—

Mr. HAYES (interrupting). That is, if all the miners were organized in the State?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. How are funds so collected; expended by the national organization?

Mr. HAYES. They are expended in protecting the rights of the miners under their various wage agreements, expended in publishing our official paper, expended in organizing work—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Is there any sinking fund in your organization or any money that is not used in the ordinary carrying on of its affairs from year to year?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What are its receipts and expenditures per year, approximately, leaving out strike benefits for the time being?

Mr. HAYES. About $2,400,000; that is, basing it on a membership of 400,000. Of course, we won't average 400,000, I think for the year, but close to it. But basing it approximately on 400,000, our receipts will be more than $2,000,000 a year, including strike assessment.

Chairman WALSH. Please state where the men are now working as coal miners in the United States under agreements between the operators and the union organization.

Mr. HAYES. Please state the States, you say?

Chairman WALSH. How many men are there now working as coal miners under agreement—

Mr. HAYES (interrupting). Close to 400,000.

Chairman WALSH. In what States are they located?

Mr. HAYES. They are located in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Arkansas, Texas, Wyoming, Montana, and Washington. I think I have covered them all.

Chairman WALSH. What is the attitude of the large operators elsewhere under such agreements with your organization and toward the principle of collective bargaining which I believe underlies the entire fabric of your concern?

Mr. HAYES. The operators prefer the trade agreement to the old system of uncertainty that prevails in the nonunion fields. They think it insures security to their business and that when they sign a contract they know they will have peace for a certain period of years; that they do not have to hire a large army of armed guards for the purpose of watching and spying upon every man; and they feel better, from the standpoint of conscience, to treat their men as humans instead of like animals and slaves.

Chairman WALSH. You have heard the statement made here as to the alleged breaking of contract upon the part of the United Mine Workers of America, and a letter—a specific letter which was read into the record—signed by Mr. Gilday and others, and I believe perhaps by Secretary Wilson.

Mr. HAYES. I heard something about that letter; yes; I heard that.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would make any comment that you think pertinent on the charge that these contracts are not, in the main, beneficial to the employers on the—on account of the fact that they are so frequently violated.

Mr. HAYES. I want to say, Mr. Commissioner, that the contracts are violated more by the coal operators than they are by the coal miners. They continually parade the few violations of the contract on our part, but these so-called violations are due to the fact that the operators themselves do not avail themselves of the procedure laid down in the contract, and that they delay the settlement of cases sometimes two and three and four months, until the patience of the men wears out, and these little spasmodic affairs occur once in a while—but very seldom. But we have clauses in all our contracts that if the men do strike this way, no matter if their patience is exhausted, due to delay and evasion practiced by the other party, that they are fined and punished, and discipline maintained.

I have here some letters—Mr. Osgood testified here one day that he was forced to leave the State of Iowa because of the character of this union. I want to read some documents bearing upon our union. I want to prove that our union is a business institution, and has been recognized as such by the majority of the coal operators of the land. Mr. Baer, particularly, before he died, the great anthracite operator, admitted the mistake he had made in his earlier days, and if he had lived, I feel assured from what he told me and other members and officers of the union, that we would have a direct agreement in the anthracite field. Here is a letter from the president of the Iowa miners concerning Mr. Osgood. Shall I read it?

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. HAYES. I have several here, [reading]:

“DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 25th instant, requesting information pertaining to J. C. Osgood's connection with the mining industry in this State some years ago. Replying thereto will say that Mr. Osgood started his career in the mining world at Cleveland, Iowa, 1 mile east of Lucas about the year 1876. At that time he was not considered financially well fixed, so I am advised; however, mine No. 1 and later mine No. 2, each having extremely favorable physical conditions in the way of a thick coal vein, good roof, and so forth, it was said that a vast sum of money was made by the company at these two mines. At any rate, J. C. Osgood left Iowa for Colorado reputed to be a very wealthy man.

“In the late sixties after mine No. 1 had been worked out and mine No. 2 was near the end of its existence, this company sunk mine No. 3. This mine was sunk on what was called Whitebreast Hill, near Cleveland. My father worked in this mine as a miner. I was then but a small boy, but I can still remember hearing father speak of the poor vein of coal. It is said that as the company had vast earnings out of mines Nos. 1 and 2 they were able to interest eastern capital in mine No. 3, and had been able to get vast sums of eastern capital on this project. This mine proved a complete failure. This occurred a number of years before the United Mine Workers' organization became established in the Iowa coal fields. Later this company developed coal mines in other places, namely, Keb and Forebush, Iowa.

“The eastern bondholders who had become involved in the Cleveland mine No. 3 deal, finally forced receivership through the courts and the Keb and Forebush mines were taken over. Each of these mines was operating a number of years before the miners' organization was established; in fact, according to the average life of an Iowa coal mine each of these mines had passed the meridian of life—having been in operation about 10 years before our organization was established—consequently it could not be truthfully or conscientiously said that the United Mine Workers were responsible for the Whitebreast Fuel Co. relinquishing their hold on these mines.

“I am advised that Mr. Osgood was later interested in Cleveland mine No. 4, about 3 miles west of Lucas. This mine was abandoned about 1908. The unfavorable physical condition of the mine and of the vein of coal made this a very poor proposition. It must be remembered that every hole in the ground in the coal fields does not yield up coal as anticipated, but the United Mine Workers should not be held responsible for the work of nature.

"It can not be said that the United Mine Workers' organization is detrimental to the coal industry of our State, and to substantiate this statement I am inclosing herewith copy of letter received in our office from Mr. E. C. Smith, president of the Iowa Coal Operators' Association, also copies of letters received from several prominent coal operators of our State, giving their views in regard to doing business with our organization. As substantial business men they would not make such statements if the mine workers' organization was detrimental to their interest.

"I might also add that these gentlemen have been engaged in the coal-mining industry in this State for a number of years, and they are voicing the consensus of opinion of the Iowa coal operators generally, as attested to by the president of the operators' association.

"W. H. ROGERS,
"President of the Iowa Miners."

Now, here are the letters, Mr. Chairman, from the coal operators of Iowa, which I think will dispute entirely Mr. Osgood's claim about the United Mine Workers' Union not being a business institution.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, will you kindly state the substance of them, the date, the writer, and the substance to assist us, if possible, in saving time?

Mr. HAYES. The first is a letter from P. H. Waterman, general superintendent, dated October 10, 1913.

Chairman WALSH. And the substance of it is what?

Mr. HAYES. Well, it goes on to state—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). You may state it. Do these letters, or do they not, express satisfaction so far as—

Mr. HAYES (interrupting). Yes. Here is a statement by Mr. Waterman [reading]:

"Union labor in the Iowa mines has increased the cost of coal production, but in my own operations this is more than offset by the stability of service rendered through the absence of local shutdowns and strikes. My company has about 700 men and boys on its roll.

"Yours, truly,

"P. H. WATERMAN,
"General Superintendent."

Now, here is another from the Hawking Coal Co., W. G. Hodge, superintendent [reading]:

"My preference is to deal with union men, because at the time the miners were unorganized I have known the mines to be shut down for any mere trifle, and miners would fight for nothing at all; for instance, a few men would get together and some one would suggest that they go home as they were feeling indisposed, and off they would go. However, since being organized this, in my case, has been eliminated, and while we do not see eye to eye in everything, there seems always to be a tribunal we can come to and obtain a perfect understanding."

Here is one from Mr. G. W. Clarke, governor of the State of Iowa. I will read it in full, as a letter from the highest official of that State [reading]:

"Answering your letter of October 2, I have to say that it would have been answered earlier but I have been for so much of the time recently away from the city.

"You inquire as to what, in my opinion, is the more beneficial to the mining industry in the management of the mines—as to whether with union or non-union labor? I am of the opinion that it would be much more beneficial and satisfactory in every respect to deal with union labor, for the reason that contracts can be entered into by an organized body of men which will be recognized by them as binding to a very much better extent than with nonunion men; or, in other words, with men where you must depend upon an arrangement or contract with each individual man. It would seem to me that if I were managing a mine and were employing a large number of men I would rather deal with men who are organized as a whole than with individuals. I should anticipate a much more satisfactory result in this method of conducting the work.

"Yours, very truly,

"G. W. CLARKE,
"Governor of the State of Iowa."

Here is another letter from the Central Coal Co., by Secretary Thomas L. Evans. Concluding he says [reading]:

"We have had at various times 250 to 300 men in our employ, and will state further we prefer union labor at all times in the operation of our mines.

"Beg to remain,

"Very truly, yours,

"CENTRAL COAL CO.,

"THOMAS L. EVANS, Secretary."

Chairman WALSH. How large a mine is that?

Mr. HAYES. Employs from 250 to 300 men—the Central Coal Co. These are from the operators who own the mines.

Here is one from E. C. Smith, president of the Iowa Coal Operators' Association—the same kind of association, only much different in character and standing, with the "Big Three" out here. [Reading:]

"I am in receipt of your letter of October 2, in which you ask for an expression of opinion as between union and nonunion labor in the operation of coal mines.

"As president of the Iowa Coal Operators' Association, to whom your letter is addressed, I am strongly in favor of the employment of union labor and the joint movement.

"Yours, very truly,

"E. C. SMITH,

"President of the Iowa Coal Operators' Association."

Another one from Robert Heaps, coal operator [reading]:

"Replying to your letter of the 2d, will say that my experience in the mining business has been much more satisfactory dealing with union men than it is with nonunion men.

"We have from 100 to 150 men working for us about eight months in the year."

I have several others here.

Chairman WALSH. From whom are they, and do they or do they not—

Mr. HAYES (interrupting). One here from Alex Walker, indorsing his relations with our union, from What Cheer, Iowa—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). What is Mr. Walker?

Mr. HAYES. He is a coal operator.

Chairman WALSH. Just run through and state who they are.

Mr. HAYES. The other letter is from D. F. Cushing, a coal operator, indorsing our union.

Chairman WALSH. Approximately how many employees are represented by the association in Iowa?

Mr. HAYES. From these letters, every coal operator, I think, in the State is a member of the coal operators' association.

Chairman WALSH. How many men do they employ collectively?

Mr. HAYES. They employ 18,000 men.

Chairman WALSH. Now, have you finished with that correspondence?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. We would like to know what other benefits, if any, you claim the operators, the proprietors, may enjoy from dealing with your organization, or in adopting the principle of collective bargaining?

Mr. HAYES. Well, in dealing with union labor they do not have to employ an army of detectives and guards and secret spies. They save that amount of money. They secure a better class of miners, a more competent class of men. The union miner is a man of higher standard than the nonunion miner, from my own observation. I have noticed these nonunion miners and they remind me of Edward Markham's poem, "The Man with the Hoe"—no feeling, no ambition to be other than a slave; but in the union miner you will find a different man, a different type of man, a man who gives service for what he is paid for, and the highest type of miner, who takes pride in his union as well. There are other benefits that possibly I could think of if I had a little time. The security given by the trade agreement to the operator, the prevention of local strikes and discipline.

Chairman WALSH. Discipline of the men?

Mr. HAYES. Discipline of the men through the union.

Chairman WALSH. It has been remarked here many times that there is an objection to the character of the men that belong to your organization. What do you say to that—

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman—

Chairman WALSH. Where do you derive your membership, where are they gotten?

Mr. HAYES. The character of our membership is first passed upon by the coal operators. Unless the coal operators hire miners we can not initiate them into our union. So if there is anything wrong with the character or type of our membership, the coal operator and not the union—the United Mine Workers of America—is responsible for that type.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would detail, Mr. Hayes, any of the benefits which you claim accrue to the mine workers from organization to act in a collective way?

Mr. HAYES. We have, due to collective bargaining, advanced our wages in the best-organized States in the last 15 years approximately 100 per cent; we have established the eight-hour workday in practically, yes, in every field that we have thoroughly organized; we have placed checkweighmen on every tippie to see that the miner receives correct weight for his coal.

Chairman WALSH. Was that, or was it not, found to be necessary in the experience of the miners as a whole; that is, the necessity for checkweighmen?

Mr. HAYES. It is very essential we have checkweighmen, because we are paid by the ton and not by the day. I was taught in the East that 2,000 pounds was a ton, but in some of these nonunion camps they say that 3,000 pounds is a ton. Miners so testified to that fact, and said they were forced to load 3,000 pounds for a ton. I have testimony here from individual miners that I will submit for the record.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed now with any other benefits which you claim the mine worker has by reason of acting collectively instead of individually?

Mr. HAYES. Why, he finds protection from injustice, from petty persecution. He has freedom such as he could not enjoy under nonunion conditions. In other words, in the union mine if a man is mistreated or abused, not paid for the work he does, if he is robbed at the company store—if they have a company store, which they seldom do in a union field—he can take his case up with the mine committee and the superintendent of the mine; then, if they can not adjust it, they take the case up to the operators' association, generally, and the president of the district organization, and they generally work out an adjustment. That man is protected. If the company has done him an injustice they compensate him for the injustice.

Chairman WALSH. A gentleman testified yesterday, I believe, that in his opinion organization of miners had had no effect on maintaining the standard of wages in those fields where nonunion men were employed. What has been your observation in that respect, Mr. Hayes? A nonunion miner said he did not believe an organization had had any effect in establishing a higher standard of wages in places where the union was not in control.

Mr. HAYES. I wish I had the wage scales of these nonunion States. A great deal has been said about the high wages paid in Colorado. I am going to try to prove to-day that Colorado operators have the lowest rate of any State in the Rocky Mountain region. I have here the scales of Wyoming, Montana, and Washington, and in every instance these are from 20 to 25 per cent higher.

Chairman WALSH. It has been told here by a number of witnesses uniformly, probably on the side of the operators, that wages are higher here than other places, and also a number of practical miners have been upon the witness stand and testified to that effect. I wish you would, as briefly as possible, now analyze the statement which I have just made.

Mr. HAYES. The miner, as I said, is paid by the ton, and the tonnage rates are higher in Wyoming, Montana, and Washington than they are in Colorado. The so-called wage that they make, or are supposed to make, here in some cases does not mean anything in the final analysis. What will that wage buy? If I earn $10,000 a year and am forced to spend $10,000 to live, I earn nothing. We maintain that this wage, so-called, that they introduce here is a "paper wage," and that, due to the other systems of extortion that they have, even granting that their wage scale is correct—and even at that rate it is lower than Wyoming and those other States—even granting that it is correct, they are enabled, due to the system of feudalism that they have established, to take away practically all of the earnings of the men. Now, when this strike began—the second day after the strike—several hundred men and women came into the office in Trinidad begging for relief. I said, "Well, can't you take care of yourself for a week?" I said, "One of our rules is that we don't support any striker until he has been on strike a week." They said, "We are actually starving; we must have assistance." They had been working in those mines, possibly, some of them for years. A number of them were indebted to the company store, and I can secure, if the commission wants them, scores of affidavits to prove this assertion.

In the union fields we have abolished this truck-store system. And our wage scale, due to the fact we are allowed to trade where we please—we have absolute freedom in spending our money, is higher than this so-called paper scale they have here in the southern coal fields of Colorado. Not only store bills, but they charge for drinking water, doctor bills; they charge so much money for doctors and hospitals. Now, that would not be so bad in itself, if the miners had the right to pass upon the competency of the doctor so selected, but they are forced to take any sort of doctor the company gives to them, even a mule doctor. Now, inasmuch as we pay the wages of the doctor, one of our demands is that if the doctor is incompetent, or if he is addicted to drink, as they are at times, that we should have the right to discharge him. But we have no voice in his hiring and no voice in his discharge, even though the people suffer from his bunglesome methods. One of our men testified here in a hearing at Trinidad, I have the stenographic report of our convention, that he lost his eye, due to the tinkering of one of these so-called doctors.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you have covered the benefits that occur to you that accrue to the miners under collective bargaining. Have you visited the coal camps in the southern coal fields of Colorado?

Mr. HAYES. I have visited a number of them; those they would let me into. They chased me out of one.

Chairman WALSH. Have you visited Ludlow and Hastings?

Mr. HAYES. I visited Ludlow; yes. No; I could not get into Hastings. They wouldn't allow me.

Chairman WALSH. Delagua?

Mr. HAYES. No; I couldn't visit Delagua.

Chairman WALSH. Who would not allow you?

Mr. HAYES. The guards there.

Chairman WALSH. When did you call—

Mr. HAYES. I called at the Valdez mine about two months ago. I delivered an address up there. After the speaking I was walking around the place, and I got over onto company property, and the guard said, "You know where you are going?" I said, "No; I am walking around, looking at the town." He said, "You are on company property." I said, "I didn't know that." He said, "Do you know I could put you off if I wanted to?" I said, "Possibly you could. I will get off. I don't want to be put off." So I left. He said, "You can't visit around here; that is against the company's rules." That is one specific instance that is clear in my mind.

Chairman WALSH. What has been your observation as to the effect on the community, as a whole, where unions exist and where nonunions exist? That is, as to the material prosperity of the community, the moral welfare, the religious activities, and those things that might be called the purely social institutions of the community.

Mr. HAYES. I should say the social life in the union fields is vastly superior to the social life in the nonunion fields. I say, further, there is practically no social life in the—that is, of any consequence—in these nonunion camps; that the social and religious life of these nonunion communities is dominated by the pit boss or superintendent, who reigns as a king in that community, who lays down the rules and the laws for the community to follow; that there is absolutely no degree of freedom in their social life. There is absolutely no civil rights that are enjoyed in the nonunion fields—that is, a man must not express his thoughts, if they happen to differ with the thoughts of the superintendent, without running the fear of being discharged and possibly assaulted by the guards they have around the mines for that purpose. In the union fields we generally have debating societies, reading rooms, libraries. Our membership is allowed to follow any political faith they want to follow without fear of discharge.

Chairman WALSH. Do they have political meetings, where they are addressed on the issues of the day by candidates for office?

Mr. HAYES. Yes. We oftentimes invite the candidates of the different political parties to address our meetings. We have perfect freedom in voting, meeting, talking, and thinking, conditions that do not obtain in the nonunion fields.

Chairman WALSH. What has your observation been, as to whether or not the meeting together of men in their assembly halls has an effect upon their education, upon their culture, and their knowledge?

Mr. HAYES. I should say that the United Mine Workers is the only school that a great many miners have. Their trade-union hall is their school.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any education yourself, outside of the school education that you acquired before you were 13 years old?

Mr. HAYES. No; that is all.

Chairman WALSH. I notice that, not to comment invidiously, that you use good language, express yourself well. Where did you acquire what ability in that line that you may have?

Mr. HAYES. Whatever little ability I may have, Mr. Chairman, I owe to my connection with the United Mine Workers.

Chairman WALSH. What has been your observation with respect to other men in that regard? You have seen, for instance, foreigners that come into the organization.

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Italians, Slavs, and others?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What effect has it seemed to have upon them?

Mr. HAYES. Why, I notice the fact when they are members of our union for a certain length of time that they speak the language better, they take more interest in our common life, and the life of our country. They are anxious to read and learn; that it awakens new ambitions and new ideals in them, due to contact with the men who are free to think what they please; and until men are free to think what they please there can be no progress.

Chairman WALSH. Has your union a definite policy with respect to men becoming naturalized citizens and getting an understanding of our institutions?

Mr. HAYES. We have nothing in our organic law on that question, but we do advise, as officers, that every member become a naturalized citizen as soon as possible. In a number of my speeches I have given that advice, and often do so personally to our members.

Chairman WALSH. In communities where the miners are organized, what has been your observation with reference to the miners taking part in the civic life in the community, being candidates for office, urging candidates for office, and serving upon boards, and so forth?

Mr. HAYES. In the union towns miners take a very active part in the political life of the community. In fact, we have a number of our members in the various State legislatures. We have sent men to Congress. We have now, I am very proud to say, a member of the President's Cabinet, Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, a man who went to work in the mines when he was 9 years of age. I think whatever education and whatever advantages have come to Secretary of Labor Wilson have come about due to his connection with organized labor, because he had very little school education, going to work in the mines when he was 9 years of age.

Chairman WALSH. Are there any Members of Congress now who are or have been members of your organization?

Mr. HAYES. Not at the present time. We have a president pro tem of the Ohio State Senate, who is our national secretary-treasurer at this time, and this national secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, while never having had the benefit of college training, is the author, I think, of the best workmen's compensation law in the world, the Green workmen's compensation law of Ohio. He is the author of the nine-hour law for women, the author of the mine-run law in Ohio, and several other laws that benefit labor. I want to briefly mention those as types. I could mention scores of others, due to the fact that the United Mine Workers is an educational institution as well as a business institution.

Chairman WALSH. What other effect, if you have observed any, does your organization have upon the civic life of the community where it exists?

Mr. HAYES. Well, you find the—

Chairman WALSH. For instance, Commissioner O'Connell suggests—what influence has it had upon what might be called the temperance movement, total abstinence from the use of liquor?

Mr. HAYES. Well, I can only say that the United Mine Workers of America does not allow any of its members to tend bar or to sell intoxicating liquors, and that a great many of the union fields have voted dry. So far as their use of it is concerned, there are various opinions among the union men, the same as there are among nonunion men, on that question. But I should say that due to the environment and the higher ideals that union men attain, due to their association with their fellow men, they are a great deal more moral than those who are held down, suppressed, and degraded, due to the conditions that obtain in the nonunion fields. In fact, morals and ethics are established in nonunion fields largely by the mine superintendent, and I could recite several horrible things that would not look well in print about the moral life in the nonunion fields. Your investigators have investigated that fact, I suppose. It is a well-known fact.

Chairman WALSH. What has been your observation in point of comparison between union and nonunion camps of cities with reference to the activities of religious bodies, whether or not the exercise of religion seems to be freer or more restricted?

Mr. HAYES. I find perfect freedom toward any religion you want to follow in the union camps. I do not find that freedom in the nonunion fields. I know of preachers who have been discharged or starved to death, because they dared to express their convictions in line with the Gospel taught by the Nazarene. Instances down here in the coal fields of Colorado where preachers have incurred the hostility of the coal companies, because they dared to take our side and stand for the people who are oppressed.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have any other observations that you desire to make as to the effect of collective bargaining on community welfare?

Mr. HAYES. Well, I could, but I do not know just how to approach that. I could say a great deal about what the union means to the life of the community. It is their clubroom; it is their school; it is a place where they become informed of current events; it develops a spirit of comradeship among the men.

Chairman WALSH. How about the effect on helping others?

Mr. HAYES. I was going to touch on that. They, I will say, due to this community life, which the union develops in the camps, close community life, they will assist the sick, give them weekly benefits; they bury the dead, and in every way they endeavor to help each other. In the Illinois union, of which I was secretary-treasurer before I became vice president, we have a $200 death benefit; every miner in the State who dies, his widow receives $200, or, if he is single, his dependents, if he has any.

Chairman WALSH. To what extent has the union policy in Colorado been determined by the national officers, or the national executive board of the United Mine Workers of America?

Mr. HAYES. To what extent has the union policy in Colorado been determined by the national organization?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I should say this, that the miners of Colorado, like the slaves of the South, could not throw off their shackles, but had to have help; no serf or slave ever freed himself. But that on account of our duty to these people, on account of our humanitarian interest in them, and our obligation to carry this gospel all over the country, we responded to their very urgent appeal for assistance. We propose to never rest content until every mine worker in North America is enlisted under the banner of our organization. Any time any section or any great body of men in any nonunion field manifests a desire to belong to this union, and recites to us their wrongs, we are going to that body of men, and if we can not settle the difficulty peaceably, which we prefer to, if there is no way of breaking down the tyranny and oppression that prevails, no way to restore constitutional government or give them constitutional government, and when all other means fail, there is but one other thing to do, and that is to strike.

And I want to say right here that I deeply regret being compelled to advocate a strike; but when men are arrogant and will not listen to reason, will not even meet with the representatives of the men, will not even confer with the men themselves, then what is there left to do for the men—the one way out, when all peaceful means fail is by a strike.

Chairman WALSH. Now, then, do you determine the policy of the local organization as to whether or not they shall strike or not strike?

Mr. HAYES. No.

Chairman WALSH. And after a strike, do you or do you not determine the policy as to the conduct of the strike?

Mr. HAYES. No. The men involved determine whether or not they want a strike.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I notice that you were on the policy committee during this strike?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Is that the practice of the united mine workers that a national officer shall be on the policy committee where there is a strike?

Mr. HAYES. Well, it is not a policy. I thought it an act of courtesy on my part when I came out here to invite the district officials to go into the district with me and work it out together. The strike was our last thought. I entertained the foolish idea at that time that I could settle this thing peacefully. I thought that we could reason with these operators; I thought that they would listen to some fair and reasonable sort of settlement based upon the laws of the State. That is all I had in mind of the national union doing. Even when the strike was declared I still entertained hopes of settling it on the basis of the laws of the State—and industrial courts to decide the disputes. We did not want here the check-off system. We do not want that to start off with. We wanted to lay here, in a peaceful way, the foundation of this organization. Yet they held to the viewpoint that we came here to take over their business and run it in our own sweet way. Let me say, for instance, the Wyoming operators, where we had a union for years and years without a single disturbance, the State north of here, they prefer union labor to nonunion labor, and they are small operators compared with these big fellows down here. And I think the Colorado coal operators can do the same thing, and all we ask in wages was that they pay in Colorado the same wage scale that Wyoming operators pay their men and give us the same rights and the same liberties that Wyoming gives to the miners of that State, and in making that demand I take it we appeal to the intelligence and fairness of every good citizen of the State of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. The—it has been stated that one of the demands of your union is recognition of the union. Please state as briefly as you can, nevertheless, as fully as you can, what that term includes, "recognition of the union."

Mr. HAYES. Recognition of the union includes and was so intended to mean the recognition of the right of collective bargaining—the right, if men wanted to join, to have the right to join the union, a right the laws of Colorado give them; that when we have a certain number of men banded together in a locality that we have the right to select a pit committee and present our grievances to the mine boss or superintendent and endeavor to arrive at a settlement.

Chairman WALSH. Does it necessarily contemplate the check-off system?

Mr. HAYES. It does not.

Chairman WALSH. Does it necessarily contemplate a closed shop?

Mr. HAYES. It does not.

Chairman WALSH. Does it contemplate that no nonunion man shall be allowed to work there?

Mr. HAYES. It does not.

Chairman WALSH. Who writes the contracts for your organization which are presented to the operators?

Mr. HAYES. They are written jointly by both miners and operators.

Chairman WALSH. For instance, do you have a definite form that you follow always in drawing up these contracts?

Mr. HAYES. No; we confer. We exchange ideas as to what ought to be in the contract, and sometimes we debate the question for one or two weeks before we agree, but we always generally agree.

Chairman WALSH. Is each contract then the result of a bargain between employees and the employer?

Mr. HAYES. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is an individual bargain in each instance, in each State, where the employers have an organization?

Mr. HAYES. Each district.

Chairman WALSH. Each district?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; or subdivision of a district. There are subdivisions sometimes.

Chairman WALSH. Have the national executive board of your organization taken any action regarding the purchasing of arms and ammunition in the State of Colorado?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have they purchased any arms and ammunition for use in the State of Colorado?

Mr. HAYES. Not to my knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Have they set apart or appropriated any funds for such purpose?

Mr. HAYES. Not to my personal knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Have the national officers or the national executive board of your organization taken any action in regard to armed aggression or defense in the State of Colorado?

Mr. HAYES. May I read in reply to that question a letter we addressed to all the coal operators in Colorado before this situation developed, the horrors we have witnessed here in the last year or so, the last few months? Here, Mr. Chairman, is a copy of the letter.

Chairman WALSH. May I ask, before I get to that, do you know of any individuals in your union, either in the State of Colorado or outside of Colorado, that have taken any steps toward the purchase of arms and ammunition for use in the State of Colorado?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of any individuals, or any organization of individuals, inside of your organization, that have adopted any policy to be followed in the State of Colorado with regard to the attempted aggression or defense in the controversy?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir. Here is a copy of a letter sent to the coal operators in the State—

Chairman WALSH. Just one other question Mr. Ballard asks to have asked at that point: Can you name any district where the check-off system does not obtain where you have contracts?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Just name them, please.

Mr. HAYES. In the anthracite region of Pennsylvania we have more than 100,000 members working, and the agreement carries no check off. In West Virginia, in the Cabin Creek field, we have an agreement that carries no check off. In the New River region, district 29 of West Virginia, we have an agreement that carries no check off. We have an agreement in Tennessee that carries no check off.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know in a general way the terms and conditions of what is known as the protocol in the needle trades in New York?

Mr. HAYES. No; I do not. I know it in a general way, but not enough to comment upon it.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed with your letter.

Mr. HAYES. This is a copy of a letter sent to all the coal operators in the State, dated October 11, 1913. This letter was addressed to the coal operators after the violence—the first violence occurred at that time. We say to the coal operators [reading]:

"We deeply deplore the shooting that has occurred near our tent camp at Ludlow, and feeling that you are likewise concerned, we wish to ask you to cooperate with us to prevent a repetition of such occurrences. Whether company guards or miners are wholly to blame, we will not discuss here, but feel that something should be done by both sides to allay the present feeling. Let us both say, so far as it lies in our power to prevent, that there shall be no more shooting or violence in and around Ludlow or anywhere else. Call the attention of your guards to their responsibility, and we will see that our people are likewise informed.

"The searchlight that is turned on the Ludlow camp at night can only have the effect of adding to the bitterness of feeling and should be discontinued.

"We trust you will accept this letter in the same spirit in which it is written and as a sincere expression of our desire to promote peace and quiet in all the coal fields of the State.

"Yours, very truly,

"FRANK J. HAYES,
"JOHN R. LAWSON,
"JOHN MCLENNAN,
"E. L. DOYLE,

"Policy Committee Representing Colorado Miners."

Chairman WALSH. What was the date of that document?

Mr. HAYES. October 13, 1913. There had been very little violence up to that time. The first real violence occurred—from that letter to the operators—

Chairman WALSH. Did you receive a reply?

Mr. HAYES. We received no reply. The only thing was an insulting interview given by one of the operators to the press in regard to this communication. We at no time received a reply from a single coal operator—these big operators.

Chairman WALSH. What has been the effect on the temper and feeling of organized miners, organized labor, in other States, growing out of the recent events in Colorado?

Mr. HAYES. Why, the miners of the other States feel, of course, very bitter toward the operators in Colorado, especially when they think about the murder of the women and children at Ludlow, but that feeling has not crystallized in any concrete action or form, just a sense of resentment to think that men would be so brutal—especially the richest man in the world; that a man who gives millions away to charity would be so brutal as to support a system of anarchy—a system where civil government has broken down, where more than a thousand miners have been murdered—I won't say murdered but killed in the coal mines of this State by industrial accidents that could have been prevented in a great many cases; but under nonunion conditions the miner is afraid to complain. Now, if the miner is working in an unsafe place he don't want to complain. Lots of times he would rather take a chance with his life than take a chance with his job. So he works on, and due to this fact the death rate in the mines of Colorado—I will take it for a period of five years—is higher than in any other coal-mining State in the Nation. They murdered them in time of peace, and they murdered them in time of what is called war, simply when they make an attempt to redress wrongs they have suffered for years and years.

Chairman WALSH. What solution, if any, Mr. Hayes, would you have for the problems that have been raised by this difficulty in Colorado?

Mr. HAYES. My solution is to establish the principles of collective bargaining. I think that is the best method yet devised for the adjustment of labor disputes.

Chairman WALSH. Is that all you would have to say upon that?

Mr. HAYES. That is my sole conviction.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman would like to ask you a question.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. I would like to ask you what percentage of the C. F. I. miners were members of the union before the strike?

Mr. HAYES. I could not say. I will say this, though, Mrs. Harriman, that the miners were afraid to join the union. We could not enter the camps to ask them to join our union. They could not hold meetings of their union if they organized one without being discharged and persecuted; consequently the membership we had in southern Colorado was insignificant, due to the facts I mention.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. As I understand it, the operators claim that at that time the agitators came in and that their men—a large percentage of their men—did not wish to join the union, and that they had to protect them against these agitators? What is your answer?

Mr. HAYES. Let me say in reply to that that the men were more than anxious to join; that if there was any intimidation it was on the part of the operators in keeping the men in the mines. I know several instances where men were kept in the mine, kept in the mines, the camps, when they wanted to leave. In every one of these camps, the first day of the strike, there was a large body of armed ruffians who tried to intimidate men when they came out and keep them in there, but in spite of that intimidation on the part of the operators approximately 80 or 90 per cent came out on strike the first day. And let me say further that the day of that strike was the most miserable day I have known—rain, snow, sleet, and cold. Their families came out and passed those armed guards and got to the open prairies, and many of them slept on the ground the first few days of the strike, because we had no tents in which to shelter them. But I say the intimidation was not on our part but on the part of the operators through their gunmen.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did the employees demand that they should have a union; did they ask you to come from the outside?

Mr. HAYES. Yes, madam.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And organize them?

Mr. HAYES. Yes, madam.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And you did not just know and think it would be a good thing?

Mr. HAYES. No, madam. From my personal standpoint it meant an expenditure of millions of dollars in making that fight. We listened to their appeal for aid.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. Hayes, do you or do you not believe that much misunderstanding and antagonism would have been averted if there had been a form of collective bargaining?

Mr. HAYES. Yes, madam.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You do think that it would?

Mr. HAYES. I think that a great deal of antagonism could be eliminated by establishing the principles of collective bargaining. I know it can, because I see what it has done in the union fields. There is a very friendly feeling in the union fields between the operators and miners.

I remember addressing a meeting in Cheyenne, Wyo., when the miners dedicated their labor temple, a building that cost about $25,000, and the operators and miners fraternized together as one. We had a splendid time there together that night in the dedication of the labor temple. I could recite a number of incidents similar to that incident.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. I have heard it claimed here by representatives of the operators that they could not treat with your organization because of your irresponsibility in regard to financial matters—I do not mean personally, I mean the union as a whole. What is your answer to that?

Mr. HAYES. My idea about that is that they know very little about our union. They have never endeavored to find out from our union what it stands for and they don't know, due to their arrogant position from the start; that is all guesswork on their part.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Have you personally ever had a talk with Mr. Welborn or Mr. Osgood?

Mr. HAYES. I never had the pleasure of meeting the gentlemen. I would not know them if I saw them.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. They have refused at all times to have anything to do with you or to talk to you?

Mr. HAYES. Yes, madam; absolutely refused to have anything to do with us or arrange a meeting at any time or seeing us. Practically all the coal operators in the United States do business with us every day, and recognize us as a business institution. Yet they think they are supreme, I suppose.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is all.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Hayes, we have before us a statement as to money offered by, money paid to you.

Mr. HAYES. I am glad you spoke about that.

Commissioner LENNON. Will you make an explanation covering that matter?

Mr. HAYES. This story about officers' salaries is only one of the numerous lies that have been sent out by the press agent of the coal operators. I did not take it very seriously until we received numerous letters about it. I could not see how anybody could take serious notice of it, knowing anything about a labor union.

I have here the annual report of Secretary-Treasurer Green. Here is the way it reads:

"Expenditures, salaries and expenses of officers, organizers, and employees, for the year 1913."

Now, these operators say that I received a salary of $90 a day, or $32,000 a year. It is too bad I do not. The only sad thing about this entire story is that I do not get that $32,000. But, to answer your question. Here is the official report, and it shows that I received for one year's salary—one year, not nine weeks—$2,395.72; one year's expenses, $1,667.20; making a total of $4,062.92. Yet they say that covers a period of nine weeks.

Chairman WALSH. Was that taken out of that report? How were those figures arrived at, if you can give a reason?

Mr. HAYES. I can not understand any reason for the figures, except the so-called press agent might think that we were only paid when there was a strike on, and that it paid us to go and call strikes, and that during peace we got no salary and expenses. Had the report covered only nine weeks of this strike—this report is ending November 20—had it started with September 23, this so-called press agent might have understood that that was the salary I would get from September 23 to November 30. But, as a matter of fact, I am paid an annual salary.

Chairman WALSH. What amount of service did you render in this field as compared to your entire service that year?

Mr. HAYES. I spent most of my time from September 23—practically all my time—in this field to December 22.

Chairman WALSH. Prior to that time; take the year as a whole.

Mr. HAYES. I spent part of my time in West Virginia, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. Performing ordinary duties of the office?

Mr. HAYES. Performing the ordinary duties of the office; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That was apparently all concentrated in these nine weeks in the mind of the person that wrote that?

Mr. HAYES. Yes. The constitution, let me say further, of the United Mine Workers specifies the salary received by every single official. The international secretary-treasurer could not pay more than the constitution allows without being removed from office for malfeasance.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you receive any moneys in any other way while you were in this field?

Mr. HAYES. Absolutely no.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Donations, for instance, or contributions that might be made to the miners?

Mr. HAYES. I want to say, in answering that question, I handled no money in this strike; that all the money that was handled was handled by International Secretary-Treasurer Green. My work is executive. I have nothing to do with the financial work of the union, and handled no funds at any time.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. All the moneys coming into this district during the strike, either for strike benefits or for relief of any kind, passed through the hands of the secretary-treasurer of the district?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. None of the international officers or officers of the district except the secretary-treasurer handled any of the funds—received it or paid it out?

Mr. HAYES. That is correct.

Chairman WALSH. This statement has been made to members of the commission—that the compensation of organizers is greater during the time of strike than it is in ordinary times, and that hence there is a motive for calling the strikes. Is there any truth in that statement?

Mr. HAYES. There is no truth. The salary is the same in peace or in strike. In fact, the organizers prefer peace, because when there is a strike they have to work twice as hard. We are not very anxious to promote strikes for our own personal comfort, because it means more work.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Are there not cases of where an organizer will contribute some of his salary and expenses for the relief of those out on strike?

Mr. HAYES. Well, sir, I spent every single cent of my salary in the strike region and went $200 in debt to assist deserving strikers.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will adjourn until 2 o'clock this afternoon. You will be excused permanently, Mr. Hayes.

(At this point, 12.30 o'clock p. m., Wednesday, December 15, 1914, an adjournment was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. The commission will please be in order.

Mr. Costigan will please take the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN.

Chairman WALSH. State your name, please?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Edward P. Costigan.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Denver, Colo.

Chairman WALSH. What is your profession?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Attorney at law.

Chairman WALSH. We have had a brief on behalf of the striking miners filed with us, to which your signature is attached. You are the same Mr. Costigan who represented the strikers before the congressional committee?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I would like, if you will, Mr. Costigan, that you should make a statement to the commission and confine yourself, if you will, please, also to what might be called your idea of the solution of the problems that you observed during this difficulty and any constructive suggestions that you may have to make to the State or Government to put an end to such conditions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If you will permit, Mr. Chairman, I should like to preface my statement with a reference to the congressional hearing. On February 10 of this year, as I recall it, I was asked to appear as special counsel in the place and at the request of Mr. Horace N. Hawkins, attorney for the United Mine Workers, who was engaged elsewhere at that time. My association with the work of the congressional committee, which continued from that time to the conclusion of its labors in Colorado, and through the preparation of the brief to which you have referred, was my first association with the organization mentioned, although for many years before I had been deeply interested as a citizen in the solution of industrial difficulties.

During the hearings before the congressional committee I examined and cross-examined many witnesses who appeared before that committee; and, outside of the hearings, of course, talked with uncounted numbers of workers, both north and south, but in the southern field, particularly; so that my information is based on a very wide field of discussion.

I understand your question, however, to relate to the causes and the solution, or rather the solution. In referring to that matter I feel I ought to say that in the course of the discussions and testimony given before the congressional committee, I reached certain convictions without any previous conception of a biased or partisan sort.

Chairman WALSH. Of course, we would be very glad for you to give your opinion also of the causes. I would not want you to feel that you were limited to the solution.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, that the discussion of the solution ought probably to follow a very brief recital of the causes as I found them in that industrial investigation, because the remedies more or less correspond to the causes of the industrial unrest in Colorado.

I was convinced that all the causes to which I shall refer were proven to have a reasonable foundation in the minds of those who professed to have grievances, and I think the testimony given before the congressional committee, as well as the testimony taken before this body, substantiates that conclusion.

There is, of course, in Colorado as elsewhere the general human unrest which is at the basis of all progress, and there is no need of reference to that aspect of the Colorado situation. In Colorado in addition to that underlying cause there has been a feudalistic system with absentee control, long prevalent, especially in the southern field, on the part of the employers toward their employees; and this system has been perpetuated largely through the political dominance of great industries in that field. Last spring a State senator, who resides at Colorado Springs, visited Ludlow, and following an investigation which he conducted there after the tragedy at Ludlow, he made a statement to me which I think concisely illustrates the matter I have in mind. He said he had found, after a searching inquiry into conditions in southern Colorado, that the motto of large industrial concerns, especially in Las Animas and Huerfano Counties, might be expressed in two words, "We rule." He said the practice of the coal companies, as he knew from his investigation, had been to assert ownership throughout southern Colorado, the ownership of courts, executive and legislative officials, of coroners and other juries, of the churches, of the saloons, of the schools, of the lands, of the houses upon the lands, and eventually a certain ownership over the men who toil upon the lands. And this senator, speaking to me, said that these operators were surprised when in September, 1913, their motto had been taken up by the employees in southern Colorado and had been answered in practically the identical words—"We rule." This senator felt that was a comprehensive description of what had occurred in that part of Colorado, and he and I agreed that the time had come in Colorado for the people of this State to say alike to capital and to labor—"The people of Colorado rule, over every special interest, with justice, of course, to be exercised alike toward labor and capital."

Another underlying cause which has been long continued and long manifest in Colorado, but one which has been much less recognized in our industrial difficulties, in my opinion, has been the fact that our difficulties in the coal fields have grown out of and are related to a public necessity capable of monopoly. The public, of course, immediately recognizes the seriousness of an industrial difficulty in a field of that character, and quickly arrays itself, whenever a difficulty arises, on the side of the employers or of the employees. At least portions of the public take sharp positions in controversies which involve a public necessity, where the public, of course, in the end is obliged to pay the bill. Here, for instance, in Colorado we have been paying the bills twice for the great strike which has been in progress; once in the million-dollar debt incurred through sending the militia to the field, and again in excessive prices for coal.

In addition to these underlying causes there have been, of course, many acute, more or less superficial, reasons for industrial difficulty which may be grouped under the one head of lack of law enforcement and just working conditions, and the denial of constitutional rights before and during the strikes extending from 1910 to 1914. Among these causes, referring now more particularly to those existing before the strike, we find the denial of free speech, of the right of petition for the redress of grievances, and of the right of assembly, concerning which there has been considerable testimony given here. I have in mind, for example, the testimony of Dr. McDonald, of Aguilar, whose statement I listened to the other day. This situation, of course, has been largely due to dominance in the political field by great industrial concerns; and under this head, or, at least, following from the existence of this condition, may be put the refusal of the operators to meet and confer with the workers or strikers in advance of the calling of the strike or during its continuance.

The avoidance of the various laws in Colorado—their nonenforcement—has, I think, also been thoroughly proved. Take, for example, the semimonthly payday law of 1901. I think I heard Mr. Welborn testify here the other day that his company partially put that law into effect in 1913.

Discriminations against union men are overwhelmingly shown by the congressional record, if not by your own, the laws of 1897 and 1911 to the contrary notwithstanding. There is a mass of testimony upon this subject either available or in the record.

The same disregard of the antiblacklisting law was shown in the congressional hearing. The two statutes of 1897 and 1905 have been apparently continuously violated. There is at least much uncontradicted testimony showing such violation.

The resistance to the operation of the eight-hour laws in Colorado furnishes another chapter in the industrial history of this State, and is well known by all old-time residents of Colorado. In 1899 the legislature of this State passed an eight-hour law dealing with work in underground mines and smelters. That law was declared unconstitutional by our supreme court, in what is known as the Morgan case, in the fall of that year, our court running counter to the views of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Supreme Court of Utah, recently expressed upon the same subject. And immediately following that decision there began a long political industrial struggle in Colorado which resulted finally in the adoption of a constitutional amendment in this State permitting the legislature to enact eight-hour laws in those fields in which the legislature declared there was danger to human life; yet after this popular action there was much resistance by employers to the putting into effect of the laws subsequently enacted.

The same indifference in law enforcement was found in the testimony in the congressional hearing applicable to the antiscrip law of this State, which was adopted in 1899. There was evidence that scrip was still being used in this State this year, not by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., which recently abandoned it, but by one or more of the other companies.

The complaints concerning checkweighmen and short weights likewise have been shown to be well grounded, notwithstanding the enactment of a law upon that subject in 1897; and this subject has been a particularly aggravating source of industrial unrest, because, as we found it in southern Colorado, men have felt, where they have been short weighted, as they express it, that they have been subjected to the same imposition that the average citizen resents when having his pockets picked of his earnings.

In the field of preventable mine accidents and deaths, we have also had striking grievances. The Colorado Bureau of Labor has issued a report—the report of Mr. Dalrymple—showing that not less than 50 per cent of the shocking accidents in this State have been of a preventable character. At least Mr. Dalrymple makes that assertion, and, I believe, every well-informed citizen must realize that a large proportion of the mine accidents in Colorado have been preventable through the enforcement of our existing mining statutes. This grievance, it seems to me, ought to be considered in conjunction with the worker's view referred to in a measure by Mr. Hayes, this morning, that death by avoidable accidents in the field of industry is fundamentally death by violence, and essentially subversive of human rights. This view is surely entitled to respect. Many men have felt in the southern fields that the distressing tragedies, for instance, of last April, from the standpoint of the worker, were not as lamentable as from the standpoint of the ordinary citizen, because labor has from year to year long paid an excessive toll in accidents and deaths of a preventable character, had the laws of this State been enforced according to their letter—not to mention their spirit.

There should be emphasized of course, in this connection, the grievance on which the members of the commission have spent much time—the absence in Colorado of workmen's compensation laws, and, in that connection, the control of coroners and other juries, about which the commission has heard much.

The employment of mine guards, who, for a price have tended to stir up trouble in the southern field, has been another proven source of complaint.

To turn from these general conditions which, as is well known, prevailed during the period before these strikes, to the causes of industrial dissatisfaction during the strikes, we have the use to a very considerable measure of private detectives and deputy sheriffs and the making of private war in southern Colorado; and I wish merely to mention this unfortunate situation in passing. It is quite unnecessary at this time to review the circumstances under which arms and ammunition were clearly shown to have been brought into this State and used here.

The violation of the peonage statute of the United States of 1867, was something also shown in the congressional hearing. To that subject, I think, this commission has not directed its attention. The shipments of strike breakers, intelligent and uninformed, into the strike district was clearly shown; and under the doctrine that compulsory service for the cancellation of indebtedness, whether by force or intimidation, constitutes peonage, I am satisfied it was clearly proven that peonage did, for a time at least, exist in certain of the mines of southern Colorado, notwithstanding the Federal law; and that there was the same lack of regard for the Federal statutes in that respect as there had been previously in the State laws. This attitude was shown by the admission of certain of the employers with reference to the violation of the postal laws of the United States; but that, of course, did not constitute so grave a source of complaint as the holding of men for the working out of debt.

The disregard of the antideception law of the State of Colorado of 1911 was likewise shown. Under that statute workers were supposed to be informed in advance of employment of the existence of a strike in a district, when there was a strike in progress; and lack of knowledge on that subject, I think, was fully shown by the testimony, in the case of many men shipped in from the Pittsburgh district.

In addition to the complaints of which I have spoken, many instances of abuse by the militia, with or without the authority of the commanders, were brought to the attention of the congressional committee. The Moyer decision (35 Colo. Repts., p. 159), perhaps, ought to be considered in connection with these abuses. I think I may fairly say that well-grounded lawyers and judges are practically in accord in holding that the courts of Colorado and West Virginia have erred in upholding extremes of military action; and that the sound doctrine is that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus should not be suspended without legislative sanction; also that whenever the courts are open, as they were in southern Colorado, during most of the trouble—of which we have heard—and when actual war is not in progress, no person not engaged in the commission of violence should be arrested without a warrant, and no person whatsoever, except during the progress of active conflict, should be detained in custody without a charge being filed and an opportunity for a hearing being afforded. These fundamental views of constitutional rights were repeatedly and flagrantly violated by the militia in southern Colorado.

In the face of these causes the remedies almost suggest themselves. Many disinterested people in Colorado not connected with either side of the controversies in this State have given serious thought to these remedies. The first of the remedies on which they are agreed is law enforcement. Genuine law enforcement would undoubtedly go far to relieve many of the causes to which I have made reference, especially if law enforcements be given its larger sense of the recognition of all legal and constitutional rights.

A second necessity, as many of us view the situation, is a different attitude of mind. People should recognize that a change has arrived in the development of civilization and that the old individualistic point of view must yield to the social point of view. The cooperatively disposed employer should stand ready, with or without law, to work with the cooperatively disposed employee; and in this connection labor's right to organize, already recognized by the letter of the Colorado law, and to do collective bargaining, should be acknowledged in fact as well as by our statutes.

Steps also should be taken which will make life more human for the workers in Colorado, particularly in the southern fields. The workers should be encouraged to own their own homes. They should be encouraged to help raise their own standard of living; and I think the testimony here, some of which appeared in letters quoted this morning, substantiates the view that the unions do definitely make for better standards of living. The standard of education, to which the unions contribute, as shown here by the witnesses themselves and by their testimony this morning, should likewise be directed along lines of safety, comfort, and civilization.

The workers should also be assured, not only here but elsewhere, of fair wages, workmen's compensation in cases of accident, insurance and pensions to cover the calamities that attend the ordinary activities of the workers' lot. And in this connection, I think, should be remembered what one of the witnesses this morning emphasized, that in States like Iowa and Illinois, not to mention others, where coal operators make contracts with the workers, and the men own their own homes, the coal camps are about as peaceful as the farming communities. Congressman Foster, of the congressional committee, has personally stated this to be the fact in his own State of Illinois.

The public-necessity aspect of coal mining, in the opinion of many of us, should also result in its being made constitutionally a public utility, subject to regulation by law along all needful lines. At the present time coal mining, notwithstanding this public aspect, is treated as private business, and the community has again and again been openly or inferentially warned that its need for coal might be ignored by the owners of this great public necessity. The public ought not to be subjected to such a threat if the law can—as it can—prevent the danger of the curtailment or suspension of the service of a public necessity; and that very threat, without question, has resulted in a hardening of the public attitude toward just complaints which otherwise would have been received with human sympathy and understanding.

It may interest the commission to know, also, that in Colorado, which owns most valuable coal properties, other helpful remedies are available. We have at this time, as I think Mr. Welborn testified, many valuable acres of State school land now being leased to coal companies on the basis of 10 cents per ton royalty. These lands have been among the most productive in the State of Colorado; and there is no reason in the law, and certainly none of a public character, why these leases should not be revised under law so as to provide for fair wages, for just working conditions, for law enforcement, and even for the fixing of a retail price on coal mined on the State school lands, through the allowance of a reasonable return upon the investment of the lessee over and above the cost of mining and operation and sale. In this connection the State operation of State coal lands could very easily be provided for, at least by constitutional amendment, and a policy of conservation could be, as it should, supplemented in Colorado, as by the Federal Government where it owns coal lands, through the sound use and production of natural resources.

Supplementing this control over State or Federally owned coal lands, we believe some relief from existing conditions would be achieved through provision under law for the State and Federal operation of other coal lands than those so owned in case of emergency, reasonable compensation, of course, to be paid to the owners for such use.

In addition to these steps to remedy the complaints of which I have spoken it has been the judgment of a large group of independent thinkers in this State that there should be laws for State and Federal arbitration of strike disputes, preferably along the lines of the Canadian arbitration disputes act, providing for the compulsory investigation and the noncompulsory arbitration of disputes.

In this connection the Federal law of 1913 relating to controversies on railroads, known, I believe, as the Newlands Act, is suggestive as embodying the feature of noncompulsory arbitration by agreement, which idea will also be found embedded in the Canadian arbitration disputes act. It should be remembered that all legislation upon this subject is more or less experimental and that there is no ready-made cure-all for the difficulties.

In addition to these remedies, I personally have been impressed with the view that there should be clearer State and Federal legislation defining constitutional rights, especially when the militia is in the field. The tendency toward arbitrary exercise of power is great wherever power is lodged, and the use of the militia in labor disturbances has afforded no exception.

Colorado's experience decidedly suggests a number of Federal remedies both including and in addition to those here proposed. These were enumerated in the brief in the congressional hearing to which the chairman of this commission referred, and I think it will be sufficient if, even at the expense of some repetition, I may have leave to read into the record the specific remedies suggested in the brief in question. [Reads:]

"Federal legislation, carrying penalties for violations, along the following lines was earnestly recommended:

"1. Rigid prohibition of interference with United States money orders, mails, and post offices, protecting the inviolability of correspondence, requiring free public access to post offices, fixing unequivocal Federal jurisdiction over the same, and maintaining public rights of way to and from the same for any and all users.

"2. New statutory definitions of peonage, including interstate movements of workers, and forbidding any system of forced labor for the working out of any debt, as in violation of public morality.

"3. A Federal antideception law, forbidding misrepresentation, fraud, or force in foreign and interstate employment of workers.

"4. The prohibition of interstate shipments of workers in strike disturbances to take the place of strikers.

"5. The prohibition of the interstate movement of guards, gunmen, and private detectives, and of the interstate shipment of firearms and explosives for the maintenance of private war, whether during or in anticipation of strike disturbances.

"6. The prohibition of arrest, trial, or conviction of persons, or the taking of property without charge, notice, and due opportunity to defend, under judicial conditions, with clear legislative definitions of generally recognized constitutional rights.

"7. The supervision of all corporations doing interstate business and their Federal licensing, with power to revoke when required by the public welfare.

"8. The prohibition of interlocking directorates and of 'dummy' directors for corporations engaged in interstate commerce, with personal penalties attaching to individual officers for corporate violations of law.

"9. Full legal recognition of labor's right to organize, with prohibition of discrimination against organized labor and its products in interstate commerce; also full legal recognition of labor's right to do collective bargaining with capital operating collectively.

"10. The unqualified fixing of the status of coal mining as a public utility.

"11. Strong Federal provisions for arbitration in labor disputes involving public utilities doing interstate business, with continuing service to the public, subject to fines for violation, pending an attempt at Federal arbitration.

"12. Provision for the taking over under law of the management and operation by the Government of public utilities doing an interstate business for the benefit of society, on just terms, pending settlement of industrial controversies."

These suggestions ought to be tested and modified, in my judgment—all of them—by the view that the rights of society are supreme over every and any special interest whatsoever, whether of labor or capital. The human end of the problem should not be lost sight of. Labor represents manhood, womanhood, and childhood. Capital represents machinery and earnings. Labor is therefore more important. This was Lincoln's view, and it is, in my opinion, fundamentally sound. I wish only to add to this summary of causes and of remedies the statement that the remedies proposed are not exhaustive, but they certainly constitute valuable steps to the new freedom, or better still, to the new and universal justice.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. Thank you very much, Mr. Costigan.
Mr. Linderfelt.

TESTIMONY OF MR. K. E. LINDERFELT—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Linderfelt, I was told that you desired to make some statement, perhaps in contradiction of something that has been said here by some other witness.

Lieut. LINDERFELT. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And I wanted to give you an opportunity to do that, but it must be a very brief one, because, you see, we have a regular set program and are leaving this evening. What was the particular thing to which you wished to direct our attention?

Lieut. LINDERFELT. I understood Mr. Doyle wished me to be asked the question if it were not true that Martin, who belonged to my command, was killed by ourselves because of his sympathies for the union.

Chairman WALSH. I think he said upon the witness stand that he would like it if Mr. Linderfelt had been asked whether or not it was not known that Mr.

Martin, who lost his life there, was sympathetic toward the union. I think that about states what he said.

Lieut. LINDERFELT. Yes; the man belonged to the union at one time, I was told, but at that time I did not know it—belonged to some union.

Chairman WALSH. Well, had he expressed any sympathy toward unions generally while in the field?

Lieut. LINDERFELT. Yes; to a certain extent, I think. Just as I had when I first went down there.

And then I have some shells that I wanted to present.

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Lieut. LINDERFELT. You asked first about that clip—the Army clips.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Lieut. LINDERFELT. Here are two. Our clips are made at the Frankford factory and bought from the Government and furnished the State and consisted of these shells here with an alloy steel jacket with lead inside to weight it; and that is one of the service clips [exhibiting the clips to the commission].

Chairman WALSH. You will offer those in evidence, will you, and let us just take those?

Lieut. LINDERFELT. Yes, sir. Then, I have some samples of shells taken from John Lawson's tent in the tent colony, and these I have were taken from about 19,000 rounds. This heavy shell marked "45-702" is drilled in the center so that it has what is called the air-cushion shell. It explodes on impact from the compression of the air and makes a frightful wound. Now, there are three of those, or two of them, drilled. Now, this shell [picking up another] is marked "C. D." and "C-90" and is a brass bullet, which is the same as the poison bullet used in the Philippines. I have seen seven men struck in the leg with those bullets. One of them recovered only by amputating clear to his hip. He was struck in the foot. The others [picking up two other shells] are 30-30 bullets that are cut and notched to tear, probably due to the reason that there such poor shooting was done, because a bullet of that kind is not a bullet that will carry straight. These two are samples of their bullets, and here are two marked "F A 2 12," which are shells made for a .45-caliber pistol bullet used in the service. And these [indicating two others] are two "32" bullets that have been cut off there and drilled to tear. And this [exhibiting another] is a shell marked "R W S" "Velo-dog," which is a French shell, made for bicyclists in France, I understand, with a brass-copper jacket, which poisons.

Chairman WALSH. Made for bicyclists?

Lieut. LINDERFELT. Yes; used by the bicyclists in France. Well, "Velo" means wheel or bicycle. Now, this shell marked "Eley No. 1 EXPs" is the shell or bullet used, fired from a gun in hunting elephants or any large game. It has a fulminate cap in the end of it and explodes on impact, tearing a frightful wound. This is one of many, and these are samples of many of the shells to be found in his tent, and his tent was marked by his name.

Chairman WALSH. Anything else you wish to say?

Lieut. LINDERFELT. No.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you; that is all.

(The several clips and shells above described were offered in evidence.)

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Robinson may take the witness stand.

TESTIMONY OF SENATOR HELEN RING ROBINSON.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name, Mrs. Robinson.

Senator ROBINSON. Helen Ring Robinson.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman will examine.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mrs. Robinson, will you please state what office you hold and how long you have lived in Colorado?

Senator ROBINSON. I represent the city and county of Denver in the Colorado Senate. I have lived in Colorado more than 21 years.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. How did you first become interested in the coal miners' strike?

Senator ROBINSON. Naturally, I became interested at the very beginning, when the announcement was made that there was to be a strike, for I was housekeeper and home maker here, but I left Colorado before the strike had really progressed very far. I went East and spent the winter and early spring in the East and Canada, going up to Canada, by the way, in order to study the workings of the industrial disputes act, which I had hoped to introduce into the next session of the Colorado Legislature.

My acute interest in the strike was aroused toward the close of my stay East after the incident of Mrs. Jones, generally known as Mother Jones. I was speaking in the East in many cities, and toward the latter part of my visit in the East I was being constantly interrogated in regard to their holding Mother Jones, so called, incommunicado in Colorado. I suppose something in the age and sex of the woman impressed the imagination of the people in the East, and it seemed to be very much in the air—that topic—and questions were constantly put to me, after public meetings, in which I was heckled most unmercifully, as to why the women of Colorado, more particularly, consented to the holding of a woman of 82 by the military power of the State without objection or protest, apparently. That being so, after the questions had been repeated a sufficient number of times, I packed my trunk and came home, in order to find out what the true condition was. The following morning after my return I came down to the office of Gov. Ammons.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What date was it?

Senator ROBINSON. This was in March—mid-March—the diary which I meant to bring here having my exact dates, for the first time in a week I haven't with me, as I was in Boulder yesterday and left it there. It was approximately in March, perhaps a little later than the middle of March; perhaps about the 20th of March, when I visited the governor. I found him very cordial and very friendly; and then I asked him about Mrs. Jones, and wished to know further in regard to the matter. But he seemed unable or unwilling to discuss the holding of Mother Jones incommunicado. He desired to spend his time discussing the moral character of the woman, and I couldn't get beyond that—her character in the past, 20 and 30 years ago. I couldn't seem to get any answer to my protest made to him, not exactly in these words, but in effect that he was making himself and the State ridiculous by holding her as a military prisoner, considering her age and all the circumstances. I remarked that I desired to be friendly and help him out, and I offered John Lawson as a substitute. I told him I thought it would be much better for him and for the State to hold him, Lawson, in that particular position if he desired to do so. As I say, I couldn't get him beyond the personalities of the case, and finally, in some heat, I told him that I was not at all concerned with the virtue of an 82-year-old woman, but I was greatly concerned in the rights of habeas corpus; and feeling that there was no particular help there, I left the office and began making preparations to go to the southern coal fields.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What was your first visit to the strike zone?

Senator ROBINSON. I went down there, I believe, on the 8th of April; I believe that is the date. I had been several days making arrangements to go, because I meant to spend considerable time there. I went, not expecting to discover anything new, and certainly without any predisposition either for or against turbulent capital or turbulent labor; but I felt that I wanted to understand. That was all. I wanted, of course, particularly to understand because I realized that at the next session of the legislature we must do something for Colorado in the matter of industrial disputes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did you find the situation to be, and what seemed to you to be the particular causes of the extreme bitterness?

Senator ROBINSON. Before answering that question, I would like to state also that the day before I started, my preparations being all made to go, I received a telegram from the New York American, to which paper I contribute signed editorials on social topics, asking me to go down and write an article for them in regard to the human side of the strike. So I had in a sense a double errand in going there. I had been hearing a good deal about the workingman, and I wanted to find out something if possible about the workingmen; and I wanted also, in a general way, to translate if I could the terms "capital and labor," of which I had been hearing a good deal, into terms of men, women, and children. I went also as a woman to whom the change in the price of coal was a material matter, and I represented, I think, in a way, the attitude of the great body of women in my circumstances here in Denver—my circumstances being that I had no strings on me by turbulent capital, and I was in no way related to turbulent labor. I wanted to find out, in other words, something of the situation from the point of view of 80 per cent, at least, of the people of Colorado; the people who were paying from $1 to $1.75 a ton more for coal than they should be paying on account of the strike—or had been doing it, rather, in the winter.

I wanted particularly to go from the point of view of these men and women in Colorado who had been, we felt, in a sense disgraced by the constant recurrence of turbulence here. I think, perhaps, I had to go East in order to fully understand that phase of the situation. And also I wanted to realize if this thing must continue forever. You see this situation in the coal field had been going on for 30 years, during 21 of which I had been living there.

I had heard a good deal about the very bad character of the workmen down there, and believe that testimony was brought out during the congressional hearing, the statement that we had so many undesirable workmen in the coal fields—so many foreign-born people. I knew from my own investigation that, though only one-eighteenth of the population of Colorado lives in these southern coal fields, yet more than one-third of the illiteracy of the State is found there. Those, in short, were the thoughts which I had in mind in going there, keeping always in mind the fact that I probably should not have gone if I had not been a member of the Colorado Legislature with duties and responsibilities calling on me to understand the situation if I could.

I went prepared to see the representatives of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., and I spent a long time with Mr. Weitzel. I spent a long time interviewing and discussing matters with members of the militia. I talked with representatives of labor; I talked with the plain citizens of Trinidad. On my first visit my time was spent almost entirely in Trinidad. I went into a great many stores and places of different sorts and said, "Now, I don't know your name and you don't know mine, and I can not use your name against you in any way." I went to the merchants of Trinidad and to others, and I got answers to many of my questions.

In going to Mr. Weitzel's office, as I was going in the door by appointment, I met two members of the militia coming out of the office. Afterwards I asked an employee in the building if that was a usual incident, and he said, "Oh, yes; that happens nearly every day. We call that the military headquarters." I should be very glad to tell the commission the name of the man that made that remark privately, if desired. I asked Mr. Weitzel with some emphasis—perhaps I was aroused by seeing these two men—in regard to the statement that members of the militia were also drawing pay from the coal companies. I told him that as a taxpayer, as a woman who was paying her part of the dollar a day that was being paid by the State to support each of these militiamen, I wanted to know why he was paying $3.50 to $4 or from $3 to $5, because it seemed to me the thing for which I was paying my part of $1 a day was directly the opposite of that for which he was paying $3.50 a day; and, in a way, it would seem that those militiamen, if they did their duty to both of us, would have to ride horses going in opposite directions. And he said, in response to that, that the company was good to the people who were good to them, and there was no reason why he should turn from those men who had been their employees because the State chose to pay them also.

I also asked him in regard to the story which I had heard circulated that the company was in the habit of sending down the canyon the men of Scottish and British birth and others of perhaps the higher class of workmen and preferred to employ the people who are called "the outcasts and dregs of society drawn from the southern countries of Europe." In answer to that, or incidentally, he told me he preferred the Slavs above all other workmen because they were more easily managed. He was extremely courteous and helpful and gave me many interesting answers to my questions.

I will say, with regard to my discussion with the militia, that I found perhaps—if you care to hear it—the secret, as it seemed to me, of the friction between the strikers and the militia—at least one of the sources of irritation. Perhaps I saw that more plainly because I have seen little boys playing with tin soldiers, and I know that the little boys in playing with their soldiers have to have one set of soldiers that are the enemy; and so I found that the militia going down into those southern coal fields—some of them, perhaps—in some way were not far beyond the little boys' stage—had followed that boyish example—and the leaders of the militia had considered that it was necessary to have an enemy, and they had chosen the strikers as their enemy. That was plainly shown in their talks with me. I talked principally with Maj. Williams, Gen. Chase not being there. The attitude of the men with whom I spoke was plainly and strongly opposed to organized labor. There was plainly indicated a feeling of bitterness toward the strikers. This was so more particularly because they repeated constantly that the strikers were of such inferior character. One militiaman told me that if they had been American men or men of higher intelligence they would have gone back to work when the militia told them to, but that they would not do so, and they could not understand that they were being led by agitators. The whole situation was plainly a bitter one—the bitter situation that one would expect to find after months in which there had been two columns drawn up of idle men—the militia and the strikers—with the open saloon always between them. You asked me a question, to which this was in a sense preliminary, and which I wish you would please repeat.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did you find to be the situation; what were the principal causes of this extreme bitterness?

Senator ROBINSON. There has been one element in the bitterness that I have never heard brought out here and it impresses me perhaps more strongly than the other causes of this great bitterness, and this element was threefold. And when I speak of these three things as being the causes of the bitterness down there in the southern Colorado field I wish to add that they were the same in Lawrence, Mass., Paterson, N. J., and various other places. First, of course, there was the contest between capital and labor, the great problem connected with that. Of course a good many of the men down there and some of those who have testified here hold to the divine right of property. A great many of the operators who testified here cherish very firmly what I might call mid-Victorian ideas of the relations of capital and labor, and out of that does grow great bitterness.

I found two other causes. One was the question that grows out of our tremendous immigration problem and the question of racial hatred which has developed in America to-day, and below that I found the great bitterness of class hatred which was fearfully strong in Colorado at that time and particularly in the southern coal fields. Of course in a sense you may say these three things are really one, but in another sense they are threefold.

And so I found during those two days of investigation in Trinidad, I found a vortex of mad, swirling hate that I did not know existed in the world until I went down there. I have read somewhere in some scientific or pseudo-scientific book that a man when very angry will exude poison enough to kill a dog. I found enough mad hatred in those coal fields to kill all the men and women that were killed at Ludlow and Forbes.

Of course, back of that and in addition to that there was the belief in my own mind, and I think this thought has never been brought out while I have been here, that a certain bitterness existed there that we can trace back to 10 years ago, when men were taken from the Colorado coal mines and dumped on the prairies in Kansas and New Mexico. That sort of thing arouses hatred in a community, and I believe that that hatred does not die with the objects that caused it, but that it gathers compound interest; I found that it had gathered that interest at Trinidad.

And then of course there were the other matters that have been brought out. I found everywhere among the strikers the feeling that to their employers a mule was of course of much greater economic value than a man. Understand, I do not know that that is true. I only tell what I have been told there—that if a choice came as between saving a man and a mule in a mine accident that the bosses would choose the saving of a mule. I tell that story to illustrate the bitterness—not that I can vouch for it in any way.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Will you please state what you found to be the conditions of the strikers and their wives and children—their living conditions?

Senator ROBINSON. I found more in regard to their condition on my second visit. I had gone down there with the intention of spending at least a week, but at the end of the second day, with all these interviews, it seemed to me that the situation there was being staged for my particular benefit, not only by the representatives of organized labor but by the operators and everyone, and that I could not perhaps find out in an impartial way things as clearly as I wanted to.

After the two days down there, during which I visited tent colonies, I did not feel that I knew very much about the situation, after all. In the tent colonies I found the people pretty comfortable, and they seemed to be rather happy. You see, the winter was over and passed, and the spring was coming, and it comes very beautifully among our Colorado mountains, and among the women particularly and many of the children I found that this long winter had brought the nationalities together in a rather remarkable way. I found a friendliness among the women of all nationalities—22 at least—that was certainly an example for some of the rest of us who have lived here a long time. I found among the children a great deal of friendliness, and I saw the true melting pot set up at Ludlow. This friendliness was among themselves, but if a militiaman came up, then the little child who a moment before had looked like one of Raphael's cherubs immediately became a little fiend in his appearance and would call out "Tin Willie," or "Scab herder," or something similar, to the militiaman. This is an illustration of the bitterness of which I speak.

I came back then at the end of the second day and sent a long story of the situation to the New York American, and then I went back again. Only this time I went to Walsenburg, and no one knew this time that I was going except a friend of mine in Walsenburg whom I visited. I would like to continue this story for a moment.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. We would like to hear it.

Senator ROBINSON. Because it leads to Ludlow in a sense. I visited the tent colony at Ludlow and talked with the men there, and in this connection I will say that I observed the stoves in the tents. I think this matter of stoves is important from the fact that so much has been said about the stoves setting fire to the tents by being overturned. I will say that the peculiar thing about those stoves is that they were very large. I think the average stove in the tent colony was about as big as this desk [indicating], and it seems to me that it would take a German siege gun to overturn one of them.

The second day I was in Walsenburg I found that something which had impressed me as most ominous at Ludlow was still more impressive at Walsenburg. I found a "waiting" atmosphere. The people at Ludlow had shown me pits in which they said they were going in case there was an attack by the soldiers, and for some reason or other the people in Ludlow believed that such an attack was imminent. I could not say why, but what I am giving you is my impression. I could not see any reason why they should think so, but the feeling was very present there.

On Saturday night at Walsenburg I was given a reception, after having spent two days there, by the Democratic county committee, and I talked with the men of that committee and I was again most strongly impressed with the fact the feeling I had had at Ludlow that the stage was being set for action, and I found that the feeling seemed to center around the enlistment of Troop A. I shall in a moment ask to read into the record the muster roll of Troop A. I found young men, husky young men, but not in sympathy with the coal operators, who declared they had tried to enlist in this troop and had been rejected on account of physical disability. Several young men told me that. Everywhere the feeling seemed to be that Troop A had been enlisted for a purpose, a sinister purpose. They told me that all of the members of this new National Guard troop were representatives of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. or guardsmen, and that they were not being enlisted for nothing.

So much impressed was I by the result of my two-days' investigation that I took the night train back to Denver. I had no intention of returning for several days. At 9 o'clock on the following morning I was at the governor's office to tell him my own experience and that the situation was more ominous than his advisers had let him know and that something must be done, it seemed to me, to alleviate the situation. I understood that "something" was to happen about Thursday.

When I got there I found the governor had gone to Washington on matters of business and there seemed to be no help.

That afternoon I was called up by my friends, who told me of Ludlow, and asked me if I could not do something, anything to make the women of Denver understand what the situation really was.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did they tell you about Ludlow?

Senator ROBINSON. At Ludlow it was an atmosphere of dread. The women told me they thought something was going to happen. The men—I talked to Fyler and to Tikas—the men did not say much about it to me, but the women with whom I talked seemed to be afraid that something was going to happen to them. I found it even more strongly in Walsenburg. You remember it was before Ludlow. I believe at that time if you asked three men out of four in Walsenburg, who were not in some way associated with the mine operators, if something was brewing there, they would have answered yes.

It was in the afternoon that I heard from Walsenburg and got word asking me to try to get the truth of the matter into the papers and before the people of Denver.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you hear any threats made by militiamen that they would take and destroy the Ludlow tent colony?

Senator ROBINSON. No.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. After the fight at Ludlow on April 20—first, did you return to Ludlow before the attack on the tent colony?

Senator ROBINSON. No; I returned to Denver. I got back to Denver the morning of the attack. It was the 20th of April. It was on the morning of the 20th of April when I saw the governor, because, after being down there two days, I felt that something serious was imminent.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, after the fight at Ludlow on April 20, what was the condition of the public mind in Denver?

Senator ROBINSON. That depended a good deal on the financial connections of the people. I found, directly after Ludlow and before Forbes, that the people were generally strongly and earnestly bent only on making an end to the conditions which had made Ludlow possible. I found that the great mass of men and women of Denver said, "We must stop this situation; we must have peace." And a great effort was made, particularly by the women of Denver as well as by many of the men, to secure the getting here to Colorado of Federal troops. Many of us felt very strongly that while the bad name, which was given to it was deserved only by a small part of the militia, still the situation was so serious that our militia could no longer handle it. As was said to Gov. Ammons at that time, the militia could not again go into the strike zone with clean hands. It was at that time that the women of Denver did something in helping to secure the sending of Federal troops here—something to help the people to understand the situation there. Do you care to hear anything in regard to their meeting?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes; I think we would like to, very much.

Senator ROBINSON. Of course, there was a preliminary meeting in which the situation was discussed. There was a second meeting called here in the State capitol. The only effort of the women was to secure peace. I will say for myself that I was strongly and most earnestly impressed with the desire that Federal troops should be brought here, not that they could settle anything, but that there could be a truce established during which we might be able to settle something.

I felt the more strongly about the situation, because for four months I had been East talking and all the time had repeatedly made this statement, in speaking of the work of men and women: I had many times declared in public meetings that it was the duty of men to see that the wheels of industry went round and that it was the duty of the women to see that there was no blood on the wheels; and I felt that it was an opportunity to me to join with many other women in helping to bring peace.

I will say that at that meeting of women in the State capitol for the first time there was drawn together women representing all classes of society. I have never seen in Colorado a meeting in which various social grades, so to speak, were more fully represented. There was in that organization, in that meeting of women, the wife of a mine operator, there was the wife I know of at least one militiaman, there were the wives of strikers, there was the widow of a Chief Justice of the United States, who had won fame for himself by writing a dissenting opinion in regard to the Moyer decision. There was also present the wife of the present chief justice of the State. There were women whose names appear in the society columns, and there were women who earn their livelihood by scrubbing office buildings. It was entirely democratic.

A committee of five was chosen by the organization to see the governor. I was chosen as chairman of that committee. Perhaps I am talking too long?

Chairman WALSH. No; it is very interesting.

Senator ROBINSON. We went to the governor's office and asked him to come up here before the organization of women who were desiring peace. We told him that we were not there as representatives of capital or as representatives of labor; that we recognized there was wrong on both sides of the conflict, but that we were there simply as representatives of the citizenry of the State and of the city, and that we wished him to come before the meeting. He said to me in a most hysterical way, "I can not come now, because I have men with me in the inner office," and he pointed to the inner office where many representatives of the mine operators were assembled, "Men who were desirous of helping me establish peace. They are men who have great stakes down there." I said, "We also represent a convention of women who have great stakes down there, the precious lives of our young sons in the militia, and at least one of us has a husband down there who has been guarding over the strikers of the tent colony," and we asked him if he would not come. The governor finally came to the meeting. We were assembled in the legislative chamber across the hall, and Mrs. Robert Steele, the chairman of the meeting, gave to the governor our wishes that he should telegraph Woodrow Wilson for Federal troops. The governor promised to take the matter under advisement and went down stairs, and the assemblage joined in singing as he went out, "Guide me, oh, Thou Great Jehovah."

Afterwards, the committee of five spent some time in the governor's office. The thousand women assembled spent the time in the legislative chamber. The thousand grew smaller and smaller as time went on, but there were never less than several hundred there. They spent the time in singing hymns and waiting. Two or three times the committee reported, and finally at about 9 o'clock that night the committee read a telegram sent by the governor asking for Federal troops, and the assemblage dispersed after singing "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

I will say that several weeks after this meeting I heard from Walsenburg that at the time that assembly was in session here that there was a meeting of women down at Walsenburg, gathered together praying that the work we were trying to do might be effective, and that the troops might come. I will say in passing, also, because I have sometimes heard the statement made about it being a gathering of hysterical women, that during that entire time I never saw any manifestation of hysteria. Most of the women were as calm as though they had been at home in their own gardens, picking white phlox. I did see some manifestations of hysteria, but it was with those men who had financial interests greatly at stake; but those manifestations were not in the room where the women were gathered.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What seemed to you the greatest danger of the situation following Ludlow?

Senator ROBINSON. Just that danger, I tried to bring out before—the danger that the situation was preparing, perhaps, for a tremendous cataclysm; that perhaps there was going to be more slaughter there, and I believe at that time that the passions of both sides were aroused to such a pitch that they both would have welcomed a chance to fight it out on the southern field.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. I understood you to say that you felt that atmosphere before. I am now asking you about afterwards. Afterwards, did you feel the same thing?

Senator ROBINSON. That is why we wanted the troops, to prevent any further bloodshed.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You felt that was the greatest danger?

Senator ROBINSON. I felt it was the great danger then. The bringing of the troops was to be preliminary to the settlement that would bring peace conditions. Before we could do anything then, we had to stop the slaughter and bring peace down there.

I will say that never for a moment do I mean to represent that the women were the only people who were asking the governor to send for troops. The editor of the Rocky Mountain News and the Denver Times sent a telegram to President Wilson asking for troops, and, many other people did so.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you take any other opportunity or any other part in influencing public opinion, aside from the meeting you have told of?

Senator ROBINSON. I spoke several times to gatherings of women, smaller and larger; I appeared once before the ministers' association, and talked to the ministers.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Could you describe your meeting with the ministers in Denver?

Senator ROBINSON. Yes; I told the story of what I had seen down there. I blamed the ministers for permitting certain conditions to exist so far as the lack of social welfare was concerned. I remember speaking rather forcibly, because I wanted to arouse them, and I think one has to speak rather forcibly to arouse those whose positions in many cases depend upon the capitalistic class. Many of the ministers realized what the situation was, and that many of our hands were stained with the blood that had been shed down there. There were, however, some of the ministers, as there must always be in such cases, who, being more or less controlled by the opinion of capital, rather resented the statements which were made. I remember feeling, in regard to one or two of the ministers, very strongly, recalling the story of Christ and the rich young man, that had they been disciples of Christ at that time, they would not have followed Jesus, but the rich young man. On the other hand, a great many of the ministers were strongly impressed by the situation and desired to do something toward helpfulness.

Of course, the social conditions down there are very bad. It was along the line of the social conditions that I at that time, especially appealed to the ministers, when telling them they were to blame for allowing such social conditions to fester.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Is that all in regard to the ministers?

Senator ROBINSON. Yes.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. I am requested to ask you who called the meeting, the meeting that was held here by the peace association?

Senator ROBINSON. It was called by the Peace Association of Denver, of which Mrs. Alma Lafferty was, and, I think is, president.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What, in your opinion, is the relation between the industrial conflict in Colorado and the political situation?

Senator ROBINSON. As I think has been brought out very frequently here, the relations dovetailed. I will say that, in making this statement and forming my opinion, I do not speak entirely from visits to the southern coal field; but I was a member on the committee of privileges and elections which had to do with investigating the situation down in Huerfano—no, down in Las Animas County, in which Trinidad is situated, because of a contest in the last State senate. I sat for three weeks and listened to the story of the political conditions down there, and long before the calling of the strike was ordered I realized in a sense that the industrial situation was hopeless, because the political situation appeared to be hopeless. I found that while the counties of Las Animas and Huerfano are geographically a part of Colorado, yet industrially and politically they are a barony or a principality of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Such situations, of course, must mean a knitting together of the industrial and political situation, and I don't wish to say that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. have limited their efforts to Las Animas and Huerfano Counties. If that were so, the situation in the State itself would not be so seriously affected by them; but they have in time past reached out beyond the boundaries of their principality and made and unmade governors; men who desire positions of high place in Colorado would be very loath to antagonize them, whether they lived in Las Animas or Routt County, or in Denver, and it would not matter in that case to which political party they belonged.

Commissioner LENNON. I want to ask you just a couple of questions. Did I understand you, correctly, to say that the price of coal was increased from $1 to $1.75?

Senator ROBINSON. I was not in Colorado during the winter. I went away before the price went up, and stayed away until it had gone down, but I have heard such stories. I know my husband told me coal was up something more than a dollar per ton higher than its usual price.

Commissioner LENNON. Is that usual in Colorado in the winter time, or not?

Senator ROBINSON. It was put up for a time, and the price then dropped back. It was not usual, the price was an excessive advance. I do not feel absolutely accurate about the figures, as I am talking from hearsay, but the price advanced materially and remained materially advanced for some months.

Commissioner LENNON. You mentioned the Canadian labor disputes act, and rather indicated you had an intention of introducing that into the next session of the legislature. Have you given the act substantial study in its application?

Senator ROBINSON. I have spent all the time I had of leisure of the last year in studying it. I will say, if I may speak in that connection for a moment, that I would like to return, if I may, for a moment, to the special session of the legislature, after you have asked me your questions.

Commissioner LENNON. That is the only question I desire to ask, in connection with the labor disputes act of Canada.

Senator ROBINSON. It was for that purpose that I went to Canada. I found many people that did not believe in it, or thought it did not work. I found some that approved of it. I found them perhaps half and half, and I interrogated about 200 people.

Commissioner BALLARD. In connection with that labor disputes act of Canada, does anything occur to you that will avoid disputes of this kind in the future?

Senator ROBINSON. There are two answers to that question. One, of course, comes always to my mind and is not perhaps in the field in which such a commission as this would investigate. I feel personally that the only thing that will alleviate the present conditions between labor and capital is not an industrial disputes act or legislation, but what the old-fashioned New England people speak of as "More of love of God in our hearts," more cooperation, better relations between men and women, between workers and employees, and between the various classes. I believe that the question of personality in labor questions bears a larger part than we think, and to illustrate that for a moment, I would like to refer to Henry Ford, of the Detroit Automobile Works, or a man like John Patterson, of Dayton, and I think if there had been men like them connected with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. there would have been no strike.

Commissioner BALLARD. You advise closer relations, do you?

Senator ROBINSON. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. Are you aware of the fact that Patterson is the worst employer of labor in the United States?

Senator ROBINSON. I think he had a reformation in heart. I talked many times with him, and I knew there had been strikes there, but I still believe him sincere—his feeling of sympathy and understanding of his workmen is ideal.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you wish to say something more about the session of the legislature?

Senator ROBINSON. Yes; because the statement has been made before this commission that the last legislature was not able to bring before the legislature any measure of relief in this situation. The governor made such a statement. I want to say that he must have been mistaken, because in this senate there was a very strong effort made to pass a resolution calling upon him to extend a call so that we could do something to prevent such a strike occurring again. We were not perhaps so much concerned just then with the last strike as we were with the next strike, and a resolution was introduced—I moved its adoption—asking the governor to extend the call. To the surprise of everybody, including myself, the resolution carried. It had before already passed the house. Under its terms the governor would not be forced, but at least he was requested to extend the call, or adjourn us and call us again immediately. It passed by a vote that was conclusive. It had not been passed five minutes when I saw the governor's secretary up here talking to a few people who were easily influenced. In a few moments I found various representatives of the operators here discussing very earnestly with three or four people, something, and that noon I remarked casually to one of the men, "I suppose they are going to reconsider that resolution?" And he said, "Oh, yes; we will have to." And it was reconsidered and there was a sufficient vote after the reconsideration to rescind the action that had been taken.

I will say in this connection that Senator Burris of Pueblo had prepared and ready to introduce and did introduce a very carefully worked out act providing for the mining of coal by the State on school lands. It was very carefully worked out and drawn up by men of very high legal acumen. I will say also that Senator Affolter, who represents Boulder, had ready a measure declaring coal mines public utilities. I had the Canadian dispute act, which had to be modified and improved. And there were other measures to bring before the senate, if their scope could be enlarged.

Senator Robinson, of Colorado Springs, who, I believe, was the man referred to by Mr. Costigan—Senator Robinson had prepared an arbitration court act, which seemed to me on the whole, for that present emergency the best of all.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Is there anything else that you wish to say?

Senator ROBINSON. Nothing.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, then; you may be excused, Mrs. Robinson.

TESTIMONY OF MR. EDWARD L. DOYLE—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Doyle, you sent a request to the commissioners asking to be heard again, but we can give you but a brief hearing.

Mr. DOYLE. I only desire to make a statement concerning some correspondence that came out yesterday, but before doing so, I want to, as a matter of record, have it made known that in my remarks Monday concerning girls employed in department stores, I did not intend to be personal in my answers to Commissioner Weinstock, who I have since learned was formerly interested in department stores. I did not know that when I made the remarks. While I was speaking generally, I perhaps became heated in making answers to questions asked, and thought perhaps the commission was of the opinion I was attempting to be personal, and I feel that in justice to Commissioner Weinstock the record should show that I did not even know at the time that he was formerly connected with department stores.

I also want to state that when you repeated the substance of my remark concerning Pvt. Martin, who was killed at Ludlow, that your statement was substantially what I had asked—to find out whether or not that was the fact, and am glad to find out it was corroborated.

My main purpose in asking to make a statement here was in connection with testimony given here by Mr. Welborn to the effect that the miners were content, were satisfied, and that they were being stirred up by agitators from the outside, and that was the only reason for the strike; that these men who had signed, 90 per cent of them did not want to go on a strike just previous to the strike. I want to make it clear that the petitions that were signed were not signed only by those who did not want to go on strike, but by those who were going on strike. Every time the question was asked they appealed for a miner to support their word, but signed those petitions when they came around so they would not be discharged before the date of the strike, and we encouraged them to sign them. In many cases we had instances where married men were living in company houses that would not take out their membership in the organization until the time of the strike or afterwards, so that they would not be discharged and their families made to suffer.

In connection with the correspondence introduced yesterday, I have copied an extract here which reads as follows. It is from Mr. Welborn to Mr. McClement, one of the associates of Mr. Rockefeller in New York. It is under date of September 6, 1913, just previous to the strike:

“MY DEAR MR. McCLEMENT: For 30 days or more officers and organizers of the United Mine Workers of America have been in Colorado attempting to induce the men to join their union and threatening a strike if the coal operators will not make a contract with the organization recognizing it as the representative of the coal-mine workers employed here.

“Our company and all other operators in southern Colorado have always been opposed to recognizing that organization. Wherever it has contracts with operators it has dominated the business to such an extent as to reduce the output, reduce the earnings of the men, and practically to dictate the general policy of operation of coal mines.

“We know that only a small percentage of our men belong to the union and that the southern Colorado miners earn more money per month and per annum than is earned in any important district elsewhere in the United States whether dominated by the United Mine Workers or not. In spite of this, however, it is probable that in the event of a strike call most of the men would respond, although we believe a great many would later return to work when they found that we were determined in our opposition to the organization and were successfully operating our mines. We are very much concerned and on the anxious seat, yet there is nothing to do but wait.

“Public sentiment and the attitude of the newspapers generally are favorable to us.”

I refer to that because Mr. Welborn testified that the men would not strike and were satisfied, and they were satisfied before the strike, and they issued public statements saying that only 10 per cent belonged to the union and but 50 per cent responded, 10 per cent because of belonging to the union and 40 per cent because of intimidation. And he has told the public in publications that a small per cent—50 per cent—responded and only 10 per cent because they were members of the union. There is a great difference between men like Mr. Welborn and Rockefeller and the miners making statements to the public that are not correct. Those men are looked on by the public as the men of intelligence and men whose word should be taken as true, while, on the other hand, if it is a miner who makes these statements it has very little weight, and the deception is greater when coming from the operators than when it comes from the coal miner, and I want to call the attention of the commission to the fact that the statement that the men were satisfied is not true.

Chairman WALSH. Is that all you care to say?

Mr. DOYLE. Yes, sir; and I want to thank you for the opportunity of making this statement.

TESTIMONY OF SENATOR HELEN RING ROBINSON—Recalled.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You wished to introduce some paper in evidence?

Senator ROBINSON. Yes; I desire to read into the record the roll of the enlisted men of Troop A, First Squadron Cavalry, National Guard of Colorado, that was enlisted to take the place of the militia recalled from the field. This list was sent to the senate by Gen. Chase at the request of Senator Garmon. I will read the first five names, and then put it in the record [reading]:

"Ben Tilley, private; present employment, searchlight operator, name of employer, Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; length of residence in State, four years. Peter Coe, private; present employment, camp marshall; employer, Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; resident in State, two and one-half years. Fred Dougherty, private; present employment, carpenter; employer, Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; length of residence in State, nine years. George Titsworth, sr.; mine guard; Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; lifetime residence in State. George Titsworth, jr.; mine guard; name of employer, Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; lifetime residence in State."

Chairman WALSH. How do the rest of them run?

Senator ROBINSON. They are practically all employees of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. How many men are there in the troop.

Senator ROBINSON. Something more than 100 men.

Chairman WALSH. You may offer that in evidence.

(A document entitled "Senate Journal of the Nineteenth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, Extraordinary Session, Twelfth Day, Friday, May 15, 1914," was submitted in printed form.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. JAMES H. BLOOD.

Chairman WALSH. State your name, please.

Mr. BLOOD. James H. Blood.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business or profession?

Mr. BLOOD. Attorney at law.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you practiced your profession in this State?

Mr. BLOOD. Thirty-five years.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived in Colorado?

Mr. BLOOD. Forty-one years.

Chairman WALSH. In addition to your practice of law, have you had any experience in the operation of coal mines in this State?

Mr. BLOOD. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Please give the commission as concisely and yet as fully as possible a statement of your experience with the United Mine Workers of America, stating what agreements you have had with them, what the advantages or disadvantages were, and why you felt you were unable to continue working with them, and a brief statement in regard to the strike. I am not going to ask you any questions, that takes it all in, and you have it probably well in mind.

Mr. BLOOD. From about the year 1900 I was an officer and director of the Northern Coal & Coke Co.—that is, from the time of its organization—and as such I was interested as an operator in the operation of the properties of the Northern Coal & Coke Co. The company at that time was operating some 12 or 15 coal mines in the North and 3 or 4 in the South. Mr. Struby was president of the company, and our relations were very intimate in the management of the company. Shortly after, or about the time we became interested in the company, the labor question presented itself to us for consideration. We took up the labor proposition, and my recollection is that we were the first operators that made a definite agreement with the United Mine Workers of America. I remember that back in 1903 we held a joint conference with the representatives of the organization, and practically unionized our mines in the north. From that time on we made frequent contracts with the representatives of that organization. Their practice was to hold an annual meeting of their organization, at which they elected a scale committee. This committee undertook the subject of adjusting the wages at the different mines. After the committee had determined upon its procedure and upon its demands, then it would be submitted to us, and we would consider their propositions. Then we would hold what we termed a joint convention, under which, and as a result of which, we made a contract from time to time. During this period of time Mr. John Mitchell was the president of the organization.

We realized then that we were dealing with an irresponsible organization in that it was not an incorporated body, and there was no way of enforcing any contract which we made with them, excepting through the influence of their so-called international officers and their local officers. It frequently happened that they would violate their contract, and this necessitated our calling upon Mr. Mitchell, as the head of the organization, to see to it that their organization did live up to their contracts.

I was then, and I am now, a believer in union labor on proper lines, and in contracts made through organizations for the benefit of all of the parties.

My relation with Mr. Mitchell was exceedingly pleasant and friendly, and in many things we thought alike and talked alike. I remember as far back as 1903, I think it was, at a meeting of the National Civic Federation, I think the organization was then called—it was held in Chicago—there were a number of addresses made there. They were public addresses, at the conclusion of which those in attendance were invited to participate in the discussion of the matter, and I attended one of those organization meetings and addressed the organization with Mr. Mitchell, and I think that was when I first became acquainted with him.

As the result of the action of the local officials, or as the result of the action of agitators, our men here would go on strikes, as I said. This necessitated my taking the matter up with Mr. Mitchell, and I went to Indianapolis on I don't know how many occasions, three or four, anyway, I should say, and I took the matter up with him and I always succeeded with him in accomplishing that which I attempted, namely, to see to it that all contracts which had been made should be lived up to. They were lived up to. There were times, however—one time I remember when Mr. Mitchell had come here when our men had gone on a strike and violated their contract. Mr. Mitchell came here in person, and it was only after public meetings and considerable effort on his part that he persuaded the miners to return to work. I remember at that time he was opposed in his own organization by Mother Jones, so called, and by Mr. Haywood—at that time he was of the Western Federation of Miners, since then of the I. W. W., I believe. And there was an element that was antagonistic to Mr. Mitchell. I always found Mr. Mitchell a man who believed that all contracts made should be carried out, and he always used his good offices in that direction. After he retired from the organization that same effort was not made.

I can better illustrate that by the actual facts that occurred to us in the northern field. We in the northern field were the only unionized mines in the State, and our scale of wages was higher than any other place in the United States, as I recollect it at that time. So that you may understand the situation better, if you have not been in the northern field, I had better describe the conditions up there.

These so-called mines in the northern field are situated out on the prairies, and the mines—a number of them—are the centers of the towns in which the mines are located. To illustrate, at Lafayette the Simpson mine is a part of the town of Lafayette and located in the town. At Louisville the Hecla mine, the Rex mine, and some others were right in the town and part of the town. The town had grown up around the shaft. So over at Superior where the Industrial mine was located. During this period when we operated our properties as a union mine and under these conditions, the mines had no protection at all. There was no protection around them. The miners had made good wages, had bought their homes. We had sold their grounds, in many instances, to them, and they had their own homes in the town. The town was inhabited by the miners. They were the principal inhabitants. While it was an agricultural community around there, the larger proportion of the inhabitants were our employees. The miners, by reason of their numbers and with our consent, you might say, in that we took no part either one way or the other, elected themselves to all of the town offices, and we were willing and they were willing that these things should continue in this way. As I say, the properties were not protected, the miners were a part of us, and the towns were, you might say, typical New England towns. They were not the ordinary miners' towns. They were all good, comfortable homes. Some of the men there in the employ of our company had lived there a great many years and accumulated property, and they were all peaceful communities.

Now, this condition continued, and it was always with the understanding that when a contract terminated between us and the labor organization that contract should always continue until a new contract was made; and these meetings of their scale committee when they met—their organization met in January or February, or in the fall of the year, and they appointed their scale committee, and then their scale committee met with us, and often it would happen that our contract, which by its terms expired on March 1 of the year—that we had not made a new contract by that date, and the understanding was that the old contract should continue in effect while the negotiations were pending for a new contract. That continued always. Why, in 1908, the contract that was made in lieu of the contract which expired on March 1, 1908, was not entered into until July 14, 1908, and because it was so late in the year, it was then we mutually agreed that the contract should expire on March 31, 1910. We had been some five or six months considering this contract, and after it was agreed upon it was published and copies given to the operators and copies given to the miners' organization.

There in that northern field we had this condition existing among others that required different considerations. To illustrate, the Simpson mine at Lafayette had a vein of 8 or 10 or 12 feet. It was a steam coal. At Louisville, a few miles away, were mines of 4 or 5 or less feet of coal. That was domestic coal. It was all lignite, but that was called a domestic coal. We also had this trouble in making these contracts, a miner working at the Simpson mine at a less wage than the miner working in the Louisville mine could earn a higher wage per day than the Louisville miner. And different mines had these different conditions which required different treatment and different wage scales at the different mines. So these contracts which we entered into provided for a specific scale for each mine. This contract was entered on July 14, 1908, and was consummated at the time when Mr. Lewis was here, the international president of the organization. He signed the contract, as well as the local officers here of the district, and it was also signed not only by our company, by Mr. Struby, its president, for the 12 mines we were operating there, but also signed by all the other operators, some 15 or 20, who had followed us in the recognition of the union and in the method of treatment. Now, this contract expired on March 31, 1910, and as I say, the understanding during all these courses of years had been that when a contract expired it should remain and continue in force while negotiations were pending for a renewal of it.

In 1910, instead of pursuing that course, the scale committee of the United Mine Workers met, and they met with us on March 3, 1910. I say, "with us"; met with the operators in the northern field on March 3. I have here a list of the members of the scale committee who were present at the meeting and also a list of the operators that were present at that meeting on March 3, 1910. There were 13 or 15 members of the scale committee representing the organization and about the same number of operators were present at this joint meeting March 3. At that time the scale committee presented to us a contract which they had prepared in their meeting and which embodied what they desired for the contract for the ensuing period in lieu of this contract that expired on March 31. At the time of presenting this contract to us on March 3 we were informed that Mr. Smith, the president of the organization here, and Mr. Lawson, a member of the national board, had been called to Indianapolis to attend a meeting of the organization there, and they wanted us to give them some answer in reference to this proposition so that they would have it when they were to leave here on the 10th of March. We gave them a written answer on March 9, pointing out why we could not make and enter into the contract which had been handed to us by them.

They stated that they would take this contract with them to their international meeting and would advise us of their conclusion, the conclusion being that we should adjourn our joint convention until they returned and notified us what they desired, when the joint meeting should resume consideration of the proposed contract for the ensuing term. We waited to hear from them, and we did not hear anything until the 1st of April, as I recollect it, or about that date, when we were notified by phone message that Mr. Frank Smith, the president of the organization, would return that evening and requested a meeting the next day, and we met the next day, as we supposed, for the purpose of renewing our negotiations and making a contract. At this meeting on the next day Mr. Smith submitted a written proposition, a written demand upon us, and this was on Friday, April 1, and this is what he submitted to us:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I believe the first matter for us to decide this morning, leading up to the negotiating of our wage contract, will be the submitting of the final demands of the national organization, which, I presume, you have seen published in the newspapers, and which are to the effect that the inside day wage scale shall be advanced 5.55 per cent on the wage contract; that the price for mining coal on the run-of-mine basis shall be an increase of 3 cents per ton on machine mining and 4 cents per ton on pick mining; that all internal differences and inner inequalities, both as to prices and conditions, shall be adjusted by the various districts before a wage contract can be signed. In order for the miners to continue work, pending negotiations and final adjustment of inner inequalities and internal differences, it will be necessary for the operators to grant the increase asked for on the day wage scale and the tonnage rate; that all narrow work, dead work, room turning, and outside day labor shall be paid a proportionate advance. The internal differences and inner inequalities are those that are existing in the various mines so far as the miners are concerned. The internal differences and inner inequalities have been covered by the miners in their general agreement introduced some 30 days ago. The matter of adjusting will come up after the decision of the operators as to the day-wage increase."

In this contract they submitted to us they put Louisville, Lafayette, and all the mines on the same basis, and it was a contract that no operator could operate his mines under, under any consideration at all. He had better close down his property rather than attempt to operate it under such a proposition. This proposition which was handed to us at that meeting was that we would grant these things and do it at once, and he further stated that if we did not agree to these terms then and there he would call all of his men out on a strike. We were given no opportunity to deal with them—no opportunity to make a contract with them. So far as I know, it is the first time in the history of the United Mine Workers that they violated their own contract, to the extent of refusing to carry on negotiations while a contract already in existence was in existence between the parties, and such thing was never heard of before. Not only did he call out his own men, but, contrary to all precedent in the organization, so far as I know, he called out the engineers, the firemen, the pump men—those that were necessary to preserve the property and care for the property—not the miners producing coal, but those whose duty it was to preserve and protect the property and save it from being ruined—that he threatened to do right off—instanter. And after considerable talk on our part and the part of those conducting this negotiation—I was not present at this meeting at that time, but I heard of it and took up the matter—afterwards he did call out all the miners, but he permitted the pump men, the engineers, and the firemen to stay and protect the property until the following Monday, April 3; that is all. That was the only time he gave us to secure engineers, pump men, and firemen to preserve and protect all these properties here which were large producers of water and which were liable to be ruined in a very few days if they did not have proper care and attention.

They called this strike in this way; they called it contrary to all of their principles, to all of their agreements; and the men went out. The operators of the north were very busy people for a few days in getting engineers and pump men and firemen to operate their plant so as to preserve their property. We did succeed in the course of time in getting men to care for the property. We did not attempt to operate them. We thought—at least I thought then—that our negotiations could be resumed; that we could make some sort of arrangement with them, but it soon developed that we could not. Here were our properties out on the prairie without a fence around them—nothing—in the midst of villages where they were subject to all sorts of damage. It soon came to our attention, and threats were made to us, that if we did not grant these demands our properties, our plants, would be destroyed, our mines would be blown up. Threats of all kinds were made against us.

Then, for the purpose of protecting our property—by this time it had got along to midsummer of 1910—we erected fences around the mines—that is, the plants. Sometimes they inclosed 40, 50, or 60 acres in the inclosure by the fence. And these fences were wire fences. That is, we placed posts in the ground and then put a wire like a chicken wire, but larger and heavier, up about 6 feet in height, and then ran an arm out on that about 3 feet with barbed wire on it, so no one could climb over and get to the properties, and so that nothing could be done to injure the properties, by reason of these threats which had come to us. After we had the properties inclosed and protected, of course we had to have somebody there to guard the property and see that nobody did get into the fence; and so we had a day watchman and a night watchman. We had always at least one day watchman and one night watchman to take care of the plant to see that nothing was done.

And when it became hopeless, when we found that we could not make any contract with this organization at all, we then built houses inside of this fence inclosure—by this time it was getting fall, and we wanted to operate our property. So we built houses inside of the inclosure, because the men could not be protected in the towns—a town owned by strikers. And in the course of time, after we had built our houses and made things convenient for our employees, we undertook to send men up there to work. We had our offices here in this city. This was our home office.

The United Mine Workers had its office in this city; that is, the office of their State organization was here. We went to the employment agency and elsewhere to get persons to employ miners to go to work. It was only a matter of 20 miles north of here, and a trolley ran from here, and we would send a man or a couple of men or a few men from here—the employment agents would send men up there. We shortly discovered that the men we were sending—that the United Mine Workers' organization here was watching us. They were aware of the fact that we were sending men up there—sending at least two or three or four or five men at a time—somebody that wanted to work. When we would undertake to send them up, and they would get off the trolley train, they would be met by members of the organization, and they were beaten up; they were not threatened, but they were beaten, and in some instances were killed. There was no way we could get a man to the mine through the trolley, through the railroad, but what he would be assaulted by the members of this organization. Then it was that we employed a sufficient number to make a carload, and we had the car run right into our inclosure, so that the men could not be assaulted. In some instances the miners took their wives with them, in many instances their families; and the women folks would undertake to leave the inclosure to go to the post office for their mail, or to go to church, or the children would undertake to go somewhere—to school. They were all assaulted. They were called vile names. A state of insurrection existed there in that county. You could no more work the properties peaceably than—it was impossible to do it.

We went to the sheriff about it—of that county. We soon discovered the sheriff was a strike sympathizer, that every deputy that he had at these various towns were either strikers or sympathizers. We complained to the governor about it. We could not get redress anywhere. We employed a sufficient number of guards to protect us. That is all. I think at one time we had six at one mine—a day shift and a night shift, that is all—and our guards were inside of our inclosure. The school children—even when the little girls from our inclosure would go to school, the school children of the strikers would call them scabs and pound them up and drive them home. The school officials had to send up there—the superintendent of schools had to send there to stop it. Things were continuing in this condition, and absolutely a state of insurrection was maintained by this organization, an organization which had gone beyond the law and outside of the law and was above the law and knew nothing of the law and was a law unto itself. Then it was that I brought suit here in this county, in this city, I think, it was in November, 1910—November 29, as I recollect it. I brought suit, the usual suit for an injunction, naming this labor organization and all of its special organizers and all of its members, that I knew, and praying for an injunction to protect us in the operation of our property, and to protect our employees from these assaults and the brutality which they had suffered.

We had a hearing in our court on November 29, as I recall it. We had all of these members that we knew of served. I knew many of them personally. They had been there for some time, some of them for years. I had dealt with them for years. I knew them. We named them all individually, so far as we could. They were served and came into court. The court room was crowded. They came down with their attorneys, their friends, and their relatives and members of their organization until there was hardly standing room in the court room. And this trial up here was had before the court, the usual trial in such cases.

First, the attorneys for the organization interposed all of the dilatory pleas, motions, and so forth, that lawyers are familiar with, motions for change of venue, motions to strike, demurrers, and everything that you could think out that was dilatory in its character. Those things were disposed of.

The courts then entered upon the hearing of this application for an injunction. We were two days, I think, possibly three, in introducing evidence showing the condition of affairs in Boulder County, showing the violence that had been committed, the things that had been done there to our mine and to our men and women down there—they had been beaten up and assaulted.

At the conclusion of the hearing, possibly the second day or the third, it don't make any difference, I know we were days in doing it, and it was one succession of one violence after another that we had witnesses testify to. At the conclusion of the hearing, the United Mine Workers refused to put a witness on the stand to deny any of the things our witnesses had testified to. Thereupon the court granted the injunction.

Then we caused the writ of injunction to be served upon the organization, the officers, and upon the members. And in serving the members, because there were hundreds of them by name in the suit, we had the writ printed. We sent officers up to the mines and the towns to serve them, so far as they could personally, and to mail or to post the writ of injunction on billboards and telegraph poles and telephone poles and other public places so everybody would know about it.

When the officers went there to serve the writs they were assaulted, were driven out in the town of Lafayette. The United Mine headquarters there, the building in which they had headquarters at Louisville and Lafayette, the building was an arsenal, the guns were exposed to view when the doors were open. They simply drove the officers away.

I called the court's attention to these violations of the injunction. I did it repeatedly. I would go to court, address the court when the court was in session, tell the court when I arose in my place at the bar where the lawyers are what conditions were there, and how the injunction was being violated.

The judge on numerous occasions admonished them that this writ must be obeyed; that he would not have these things continue, and that he purposed to see that the laws of this State were enforced and the writ of injunction that was issued by the court was obeyed. He said at this time that he was doing this for the purpose of educating the people up there, that some of them were foreigners and some of them did not understand our laws, and he wanted to impress upon them what a writ of injunction was. And he did it in this manner by refusing to issue warrants of contempt in a number of instances.

Finally the matter became so serious, where Mr. Cassady, who was the town marshal there, deputy sheriff, and ostensibly a peace officer, had himself committed violence in assaulting some of our employees, somebody that had gone from the inclosure to the post office or to church, or something of that kind, and where Mr. Doyle, who was an officer up there of the organization, with others, had chased two of our employees across the fields there and finally overtaken them and beaten them. The thing became so serious that on my representations to the court and application, a warrant for contempt was issued for all of these people. I think that there were 16 that were brought in at one time. Cassady was brought in at another time. Cassady was found guilty, but instead of the court punishing him, he delivered another lecture from the bench, the lectures all being published in the press. The court directed the court reporter to take down what he was saying, and see to it that it was published in the daily press, so that these people would understand what the court proposed to do in the premises. It was all done. I have the remarks of the court here in all of these instances.

And finally the 16 were brought in. The court room was again crowded. They and their sympathizers and the members of their organization and their attorneys were all there, and a good many other people were there that I knew by sight—that had been here in the days of our Leadville riots and our Cripple Creek riots—that are known as gunmen and thug men, were there in the court room for the purpose of intimidating everybody; there is no question about it.

This hearing was had before the court. Another two or three days was consumed in the hearing, and I introduced the evidence of witness after witness to show the guilt of these people, show the things that they had committed, the wrongs they had done. When I was through with my evidence they went on and introduced evidence to combat it, and most of their evidence consisted of alibis.

At the conclusion of their testimony I was so confident of the situation and the showing that they had made that I submitted the matter to the court without argument. The court found them all guilty and sentenced them to a year's confinement in the county jail for violating the injunction.

In the meantime their attorneys had gone before the supreme court sitting in this building, at the other end of it, and had made an application for a writ of prohibition to prohibit the district court here in this city from taking jurisdiction and acting in this matter. I had argued that—all of it then before Chief Justice Campbell. Judge Campbell was chief justice at that time. The writ of prohibition was denied.

After their conviction they went before the supreme court—first, they went before Judge Campbell and asked for a writ of supersedeas, superseding the judgment, so they would not be confined during the hearing. That was asked before Judge Campbell and he denied it. Then, they went before the supreme court en banc, the entire seven judges—made representations sufficient under our practice here to get the entire bench to sit in the matter. We argued that before the supreme court all of a day. The supreme court denied their application for writ of supersedeas. After that—I am getting ahead of my story in that connection.

In the meantime our legislature had met here. This denial of the application by the supreme court I think was—I will look and give you the date in a minute [referring to papers]. It was on February 18. The supreme court denied their application. In the meantime the legislature had met here. One of their attorneys, that is, of the attorneys for his organization, a man by the name of Alexander M. Smith, caused to be introduced in the house of representatives of the State articles of impeachment against Judge Whitford for trying this case and finding these miners guilty.

In the meantime, about this time, after he had found them guilty, this organization and other labor organizations called a meeting to be held here, a public meeting, in a remonstrance to the action of Judge Whitford in finding these men guilty.

The papers said, I don't know how true it was, I did not count them, I did not see them, that there were 10,000 in the parade. That was the newspaper account. I don't suppose there were over half that number. They had a parade. They marched around this building here. It was on a day when I was arguing before the supreme court some of these matters. They held their meeting, and they passed denunciatory resolutions denouncing the judge and the supreme court of this State and demanding the release of these men who had been in prison for violating the law, and demanding the legislature to impeach Judge Whitford. All of these things were done and done in the name of organized labor—in the name of riot. I am an organized-labor man, but they did this in the prostituted name of organized labor, prostituted the name of organized labor to these things at that time.

Well, after that they went on with the impeachment proceedings against Judge Whitford here and introduced the most scandalous testimony in the world. And the legislature defeated the resolution to impeach him. That matter ended there. The resolution was never passed by the lower body, so far as that is concerned.

After the supreme court had denied their application for a supersedeas, then Judge Whitford brought all of the men before him whom he had imprisoned and delivered another lecture to them. I knew nothing about it until I was telephoned to at my office by the bailiff of the court, that Judge Whitford requested I attend court that morning. I went up.

When I arrived there, I found that all of these persons who had been convicted of these contempt proceedings were in the court. Judge Whitford informed me—I do not know but what it would be a good thing for you people that are investigating this matter, that the remarks at that time made by the court may be read with profit. I have them here as reported in the paper, and he caused them to be accurately reported and to be given to the press so that the people would understand his position.

In the meantime, threats of all kinds had been made against Judge Whitford. So-called Black-Hand letters had been sent to him, and on one occasion—this is prior to this discharge—this occurred in court on January 4. This was when Mr. Cassady, who was the town marshal there, and a deputy sheriff, as I understand it, had been found guilty of contempt of court, and the court caused him to be brought before him, and this is what the court said:

“The COURT. You may step forward, Mr. Cassady. Mr. Blood, what is the condition of affairs in Lafayette in respect to the injunction of this court?”

“Mr. BLOOD. Since the hearing had before your honor and the conclusion of the contempt charges on the 22d of December, last, I am advised that the conditions have been greatly improved there.

“The COURT. Do you mean since the sentencing of the men to jail?”

“Mr. BLOOD. Yes, sir; since then I am informed that there have been no open violations of your honor's injunction, and there seems to be a disposition on the part of the defendants there to obey the injunction; I hope that is true, especially of Lafayette; I do not know that it is true of Louisville, but at Lafayette, I believe, as far as Mr. Casady and the other defendants are concerned, they are now obeying your honor's injunction, and all we desire to have done in the premises is to have the writs of your honor obeyed, and I think, if there is a disposition shown to obey them, that will satisfy your honor.

"The COURT. I had hoped, Mr. Cassady, not to feel it my duty to impose a severe penalty upon you; these are very grave matters. A complaint was lodged here charging a conspiracy among the striking miners, in which complaint they charged you as one, and also as being the town marshal of the town of Lafayette, and also the mayor, who is also a member of the union, and also a striker, and a majority of the city council, and the police magistrate and justice of the peace, as all being in sympathy and accord with that conspiracy to injure the plaintiff's property, and that was set down on notice. I do not remember whether you were here all the time or not during that hearing. Of course, you were a defendant named in the case and appeared by your attorneys. It was set down for hearing upon notice, and the court heard the testimony at considerable length, oral testimony, and the testimony disclosed that there had been an effort made to roll kegs of dynamite down on the property of these plaintiffs and where their men were at work. That the employees of the plaintiff company were being threatened and intimidated and assaulted, and they could not with safety to their persons go to and from their work, and that conditions of affairs had existed for so long, that the company was compelled, in the protection of its property and of its employees to build fences and stockades about its mines, and built houses inside the fences and stockades, as homes for its employees, as security against that condition of affairs; and even with people transacting business with the mines, when they went to any of these towns where their property was situated, they were surrounded with crowds of men and insults were heaped upon them, vulgar, abusive, and profane language hurled at them, and that they were intimidated.

"This testimony, although you and the other defendants were here and represented by their counsel, was not denied. Not a single witness was put upon the stand to deny it—any of this evidence; not a word of testimony in opposition was introduced; and no self-respecting court could have done otherwise than issue an injunction, protecting the plaintiffs' property and protecting American citizens in their right to go to and from their work as they pleased without molestation or interference; and the court, under that state of the pleadings, granted the injunction. Counsel representing the defendant then went to the supreme court to get a writ of prohibition against this court proceeding further with the case, upon the theory that it should have been brought in the district court of Boulder County instead of this county; that application was denied by the supreme court. While that was pending, and before its determination, counsel for the plaintiff presented to the court affidavits, and on another occasion brought in the witnesses, to detail what had occurred in Lafayette and elsewhere with respect to the court's injunction; but the court refused to grant attachments for offenders as disclosed to the court, because the matter was pending in the supreme court, and because the court thought that it might restore an orderly condition of affairs, the proper observance of the rights of property, and the rights of laborers to work when they pleased and to go to their work and from their work as they pleased without molestation.

"The court had counseled that we had better delay a little and let these miners understand what was meant by the court's orders before any citations for contempt were made, and subsequent to the court's refusal the affidavit was filed with respect to yourself. The court then issued the attachment for you, and you were brought in by Sheriff Capp. Mr. Blood then made some verbal complaint to the court about Mr. Capp, and some conversation took place between Mr. Capp and the court."

Capp was the sheriff of Boulder County. I was complaining of his attitude. The court endeavored to express itself to him as a peace officer, the attitude he ought to assume in that locality as an officer of the court, hoping that that might bring about a better condition of affairs.

"The court released you on bond, to return at a time for the hearing to take place. When that was called up in the morning the supreme court had not yet announced its decision on the application for a writ of prohibition of this court, and it went over. Your hearing came on, and the court heard the testimony with respect to that, and commented at very great length on the condition of affairs; and the court, during these proceedings, assured the parties to the suit that the writ was to be obeyed; if there was any power—sufficient power—in the court to enforce the observance of the writ of injunction, it would be enforced. I think there ought not to be any doubt anywhere as to what the court meant by the language it used.

"Your hearing came on, and the court expressed its views very clearly and as fully as it was within its power as to your attitude over the occurrence there in the street. When you went home that evening, as I assume you did, after the court continued it from that day until to-day, without pronouncing sentence, a most inhuman and brutal assault occurred upon three unoffending laborers at the mine on their way to make a deposit at the bank on that Saturday evening."

The bank kept open on Saturday evening, and they were in the habit of depositing their wages. Three of them were beaten up, as referred to here.

"One of them was beaten into insensibility. Affidavits were filed disclosing this condition of affairs to the court, and the court issued warrants for these men.

"I had hoped, when I had continued your case from the 17th of December to the 3d of this month, and from what I then said that the defendants and others would understand what the court intended to do, with certainty, and that was to have the writ of injunction obeyed, in order that property and life and personal liberty should be secure and safe in that community.

"The court said that it had nothing to do with the merits of the strike; it could not determine that controversy if it wanted to; there is no power in the court to pass upon the merits of that; that was not before the court, and if it was, the court would be powerless to pass judgment upon it. What it was called upon to do was to protect the property of the plaintiffs, to protect them in their plain property rights and the rights of these laborers to go to their work without molestation. When these men came in under the attachment and the court heard the evidence, it felt there was nothing to do but to punish them, and to punish them in such a way as not only to correct them who had ample opportunity—all of them but three were defendants in the suit—but to be corrective with respect to others; that the court's judgment in their case would be a warning to all others up there that an infraction of the injunction of the court meant like visitation of penalty upon them; that personal rights and personal liberty as the personal rights of Americans should not be interfered with, as the evidence disclosed in this case. Beating men upon the street into insensibility and leaving them—and you, as marshal, so far as the evidence disclosed; I do not say that it is a fact—but the evidence does not disclose that you made one iota of an effort as marshal to apprehend a single offender, and yet it was in the public streets and in the early evening.

"The police magistrate, so far as the evidence disclosed, and I doubt whether you or Mr. McCune, the police magistrate, could have done anything in that community, if you wanted to, with the state of affairs up there. With that condition of affairs, the court felt that it must impose a penalty that would smart—that judgment for a violation of its injunctive order issued. What for? To protect property; to protect the liberty of American men, going to and from their work, when they pleased and where they pleased upon the public highway.

"I was pleased, Mr. Cassady, that after the hearing you went back to Lafayette and dismissed, or caused to be dismissed, the complaints against the prosecuting witnesses against you. That indicated to me a disposition to carry out what the court had suggested. I am not going to sentence you to-day. I am going to continue this case again, and if order, quiet, and peace are restored up there, the penalty I shall impose upon you will be very light, if such a thing comes about. Otherwise the court will not depart very much in the measure of its punishment from that which it has imposed heretofore, and for all like offenders. When peace and quiet are restored up there, as they will be, because violators of the injunction will be punished, these other men may be released; it is within the power of the court; but this is a Republic of law; every citizen has an equal right with every other citizen to work when he pleases and where he pleases and no man or set of men have a right to beat him up on the street or elsewhere or intimidate him or threaten him or his family, and that is the injunction of the court, and the injunction of the court is that the employees of these mines shall not be interfered with.

"I hope I may not have to sentence anybody else, but if the necessity arises there will be no departure from the course that the court has set in restoring order in that community. Threats against the court will not deter if one iota.

Threats of impeachment and threats of personal violence and threats to kidnap the court are not going to intimidate the court.

"I will read you one of a number of letters that I have received—anonymous letters. This is dated the 27th of last month: 'Greeley Whitford, you are certainly the most contemptible — that ever occupied the judicial bench of Colorado or any other State. You have imprisoned 16 miners of family, whose only fault is that they belong to a union and have asked fair pay for a fair day's work, and in your blind enmity did not hear your injunction that you had no right to issue. I have been a resident of this city for many years and have watched your career, and when you could you always decided against the poor, as you did against the little girl on Larimer Street, who was injured by the tramway; but your career will be finished some night when you least expect it. You may be met by a friend who will beat your contemptible face to a jelly, and it will not be a miner, either. You —, how would you like to be imprisoned for differing with the opinion of a — of a judge like yourself?'"

"Yours, very truly,

"CITIZEN."

"That is one of a good many of similar kind. The writing of that letter is a violation of law; it is a violation for the purpose of making a coward of the court. The writer wanted to make the court run away from the performance of its duty, just like some of these offenders in these mining towns sought to make the employees, from fear, run away from their duty. It is a course of intimidation. It is un-American; it is unlawful.

"I am going to continue your case, Mr. Cassady; I am going to continue it until the 30th day of January, unless you are sooner notified to come in, and if that notice is given you it will be given you by the clerk, and you will obey it. The bond that you are now under will be continued."

Mr. BLOOD. Remarks like that were made by the court on a number of instances during all of these hearings. They had no effect; none whatever.

Finally, after these strikers who had been imprisoned had exhausted every remedy in the supreme court and the supreme court had denied their application for a supersedeas, then Judge Whitford, as I say, telephoned to me one morning—this was on February 24—and requested that I come to court. When I arrived there I found all of these persons that had been convicted there in the courtroom. And this took place; this is what the judge said at that time about these persons who were under sentence, as you will recall, for a year:

"It has been two months, gentlemen, to-day since I sentenced you to the county jail"—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Excuse me, but is that a very long document?

Mr. BLOOD. No; it is about a newspaper column, that is all.

Chairman WALSH. I do not like—

Mr. BLOOD. I will not read it if you do not want me to.

Chairman WALSH. Just refer to it and hand it to the stenographer.

(The document submitted is as follows:)

"It has been two months, gentlemen, to-day since I sentenced you to the county jail.

"Much has occurred since that time; your attorneys thought that the court had no jurisdiction to try the case when the preliminary injunction was on before the court, and declined to put in any testimony about the condition of affairs up there; they seemed so sure that the court was without jurisdiction that they offered no evidence, and stated that they would offer none. That was carried to the supreme court on an application for a writ of prohibition; that is, a writ which goes to the jurisdiction of the court alone. On an application of that kind the inquiry is solely and alone as to the jurisdiction of the court to hear a case of that kind.

"The supreme court denied that application. Prior to that Mr. Cassady had been brought in, but the hearing was set after that date, and subsequently to that you, gentlemen, were brought in on the charge of violating the injunction, and the question was again raised that the court had no jurisdiction in the injunction matter, therefore had no power to deal with your violation of the injunction which your attorney said the court had no right to issue. So that again, after the court had sentenced you to jail for a violation of the injunction, your attorney applied to the supreme court on a writ of error for a supersedeas because of want of jurisdiction. On that, and the other grounds that the court had no right to hear it without a jury—that is, your contempt case—and because the court had no right to imprison you at all for a violation, but must follow the statute and impose a fine, the court assumed that the law was an unconstitutional act and therefore imposed the penalty that it did.

“There were many criticisms heaped upon the court for its action in that matter. A demonstration by 5,000 men took place in the street, who marched by the courthouse and capitol. That was shameful and un-American and should never have been tolerated in this community. It was an attempt to intimidate the court by fear from doing what it thought was right and just in this case.

“Much criticism was made prior to that time and on that occasion and since that occasion upon the judgment of the court in sentencing you gentlemen to jail for a year, or until the further order of the court.

“You gentlemen know, better than the court is informed, as to the condition of affairs in Lafayette prior to the time you were brought here. The evidence showed that the right of property of these plaintiffs in this suit was being violated; that their employees were being intimidated and assaulted and maltreated; that they had to build stockades around the mines to protect the men that were working for the company from assault. Humane officers had to attend and protect the children, under the state of public feeling in Lafayette, going to school to prevent them from being maltreated by the children who were in sympathy with your strike. Traveling salesmen were being intimidated when going in there to sell supplies to the plaintiff company; railroad men and employees hauling coal out mined by these nonunion miners were interfered with.

“The court made the order that these things should not be done; that you should not congregate upon the streets or at the depots or intimidate or molest or maltreat or threaten any of the employees of this company and thereby interfere with them in carrying on their business. That order was made, and it was made to be enforced and to be obeyed and observed; it was idle to make it if it was not to be enforced.

“The object of imposing a penalty by the court is to punish those who violate the order of the court, and to so impose the penalty that it will command respect from everyone who may through passion or otherwise seek to interfere with that order or violate the law. It is not alone imposing penalties on those who violate it, but to command respect from everybody that it is to be observed and enforced in that way; that they may know that that penalty will certainly be visited upon them if they violate the injunction orders of the court. So that the court had a twofold object in imposing a penalty, not only to punish you for violating the injunction, but to warn others in Lafayette that if they did it that was the penalty that would be imposed upon them.

“Afterwards and before you went to jail, and before the expiration of the term of court, I added onto it, so there would be no question of the court's right to do it, or until the further order of the court, with the view that, if order was restored up there, you might be sooner released. If order was not restored, I intended to impose a like penalty upon others found guilty of violating the injunction and to keep you in jail until the order expired or until order was restored. That was my plain duty. Order has been restored there. Whatever might have taken place, as I observe in the public prints, at Marshall and Louisville, certainly there has been a change at Lafayette during the last 60 days, and the court has not changed its mind. I believed then that the imposition of the penalty of one year upon you men for the violation of this injunction, as I found from the evidence you did violate it, was right. I believed then it was the right thing to do or I should not have imposed it; I still believe it was a wise thing to have done, and if the same set of facts, the same circumstances, were presented this morning, after all that has taken place, I should impose the same penalty over again.

“Fourteen of you proved by your evidence, if it was credible evidence, that you were not there on this occasion; 14 alibis were established, and it seemed to the court that some lawyer had been fixing up some evidence in this case, and I did not believe that evidence; and I did believe the evidence that you gentlemen were identified as having been there on that occasion and having participated in that affair; and I still believe you gentlemen were all there except Mr. Stubbs and Mr. Hicks, who were tried on a different set of facts.

“Now, gentlemen, I am going to discharge you this morning; I am going to let you go back; and I want you to observe and keep this injunction. I want you to say to any others who are members of your union that it is their duty to obey this injunction of the court, and that the court has not receded one iota from the position it took two months ago on this matter. You gentlemen must understand that the Constitution and the laws and the court are supreme. Your union can not enact an order or make a rule that is higher than the court; that is higher than the law; that is higher than the Constitution. Your rules are all subordinate to judgments and decrees of the court, subordinate to the law, and subordinate to the Constitution; and whenever you or they attempt to raise your rules or by-laws of your association up above the laws and the courts and the Constitution, you will have public sentiment arrayed against you all the time, because that is revolutionary and anarchistic, and any court that has any conscience, any consideration for his oath, would do exactly as I have done in this case. The Constitution, the law, and our courts and republican institutions are higher than all the rules and orders of these associations, and they can not be set up against our American institutions. Keep within the law and the sympathy will be with you; violate the law and the sympathy generally will be against you, because it is un-American to violate the law and set yourselves up against our republican and American institutions.

"I want you and these men to understand that distinction; you must keep within the law. If this court errs in these matters, the Supreme Court can sit in review and see whether or not the court has committed an error. You are discharged.

"Mr. BLOOD. If your honor please, I would suggest that your honor repeat that this writ of injunction is still in full force and effect.

"The COURT. I think they understand that the injunction is still in force and effect.

"Respondent HICKS. Yes, sir; we understand it."

Mr. BLOOD. Those remarks were made on February 23 in discharging the 16 men that he had convicted of contempt, and the reason for doing it. In substance it is that he thought he had—that the punishment had been a sufficient lesson to all others, and the injunction would in the future be observed, and he did not want to punish them unnecessarily.

After that things were fairly peaceable there for some time, a few months, until along about midsummer, as I recall it, until along about in 1911, in the summer, when assaults again commenced. Then I instituted other proceedings and another—

Chairman WALSH. One minute. Were the 16 all of the defendants that were convicted charged with contempt?

Mr. BLOOD. In the first instance, yes; 14 in one batch and 2 in another.

Thereafter, after he had discharged these, there were no more assaults for a few months. Then assaults commenced again. Then I instituted other proceedings. Doyle was a defendant in both proceedings. Crawford, who was the secretary of the State organization—of the district organization—was one of the defendants, and not only had the benefit of the counsel which the organization had, but he also had a brother who was an attorney who came here from Wyoming to defend him.

We had protracted hearings before the court on that occasion. The court found them guilty and sentenced them to different periods of time, or different fines. I think there were 14 in this last batch that were convicted. And thereafter application was made to Chief Justice Musser for the supersedeas for these men, and that was granted by Judge Musser, who was then the chief justice. That terminated all contempt proceedings of that kind so far as I was personally concerned. The Northern Coal & Coke Co., of which I was a director and officer, sold out our properties to another organization and ceased business on the 14th of October, 1911. And that has been—I have not been an operator since that date, for which am truly thankful.

There has never been a time during all of this time that these organizations started in in this high-handed manner that they have known any law or observed any law. They are a law unto themselves, and the laws of the State have no more influence with them than a fly. They are a lawless body, absolutely, and they have been since 1910 in all of their actions and dealings. The strike that was brought in the south was practically the outcome of this strike in the north, and was the result of it; and this strike in the north, that was started in 1910, was the forerunner of everything that has taken place since then.

Commissioner BALLARD. You spoke of 1910, during those negotiations. You used the word several times "he"—So-and-so. Whom did you mean?

Mr. BLOOD. I do not know. In what connection?

Commissioner BALLARD. In 1910, you will recall, some of the union men went to Indianapolis and came back and then—

Mr. BLOOD (interrupting). Oh, Mr. Smith was the president of the local. He was the man that came to us and made this peremptory demand upon us on the 31st day of March, or telegraphed that to his organization, and the request was made of us on the 31st of March, and he then came—

Commissioner BALLARD. Mr. Smith?

Mr. BLOOD. The pronoun refers to Smith—made this demand upon us.

Commissioner BALLARD. Well, you up to 1910 then had a contract, and that contract went over to 1910?

Mr. BLOOD. We made a contract—we started negotiations in March, 1908, I think it was January, 1908, to make a new contract in place of the contract which terminated on March 31.

Commissioner BALLARD. You said on July 14.

Mr. BLOOD. And that new contract—the men remained at work during all of the time of the negotiations. We were in negotiations for five or six months, and the contract was not completed until July—

Commissioner BALLARD. Fourteenth?

Mr. BLOOD. July 14.

Commissioner BALLARD. That contract which existed all those years, to 1910, was that a similar contract to what they now present to the operators, or is it a different kind of a contract?

Mr. BLOOD. Different kind of a contract. We have changed the contract which we entered into on July—

Commissioner BALLARD. Fourteenth?

Mr. BLOOD. 1908, which, by its terms, was to expire on March 31, 1910. Here is a copy of the contract, if you desire it. It is a contract for each mine.

Commissioner BALLARD. Please offer it in evidence.

Mr. BLOOD. Yes; you can have it. It is a contract for each mine.

(The witness submitted, in printed form, a pamphlet entitled "Articles of Agreement and Scale of Wages between the Coal Operators in the Northern Colorado Fields and District No. 15, U. M. W. of A.," dated July 14, 1908; expires March 31, 1910.)

Commissioner BALLARD. Does that contract require the check-off system.

Mr. BLOOD. Yes, sir; it does. I think we had the check-off ever since 1900, the time we made our first contract.

Commissioner BALLARD. Did you object to that clause, that check-off, at the time?

Mr. BLOOD. Well, personally, I think I did. I submitted to it, submitted to it under protest. I think it is a very objectionable feature. I don't think organized labor ought to assume that attitude. It is un-American. It is unfair, and it shows a want of honesty toward their own members, to require their employees to check off from their salary the amounts that are due for initiation or fines which the organization may assess against them. I do not think it is right in principle. They insisted upon it, though, and under protest we conceded it. It is wrong, I am satisfied. I do not think organized labor in any other industry demands it in this manner.

Commissioner BALLARD. You say the employers, the operators, object to that check off, or the workmen themselves object to it?

Mr. BLOOD. A great many of them have complained of it to the leaders. The leaders were the ones that wanted it because they wanted the funds. I have a great many, had a great many, friends among the workmen, and they were all opposed to it. But they were led by their leaders, you might say, or their agitators.

Commissioner BALLARD. In this United Mine Workers' organization, as I understand it, everybody that works in and around the mine, connected with the mine, belongs to the order, even the engineers, firemen, and pumpmen?

Mr. BLOOD. They are all members, everybody but the pit boss and officers—you might say all employees. The pit boss, while an employee, was in the nature of a superintendent. That is, he had charge of working and he could not be a member.

Commissioner BALLARD. On a strike, the men almost entirely and absolutely left the mine?

Mr. BLOOD. Absolutely, excepting that in every other strike that I have ever heard of in the United Mine Workers they never called out anybody except the miners, those that were producing the coal for the market. This is the first instance I ever heard of where they ever called out the pumpmen, firemen, and engineers.

Commissioner BALLARD. Were there very many foreigners working for your company between 1906 and 1910?

Mr. BLOOD. A very small percentage of them. Of course, in all the mines we have a coming and going traveling population. The miners are peculiar. They are a migratory set of people; they come and stay a few months and then leave—a great many do, especially the single man. We had that class that would come and stay and go. But a majority of our miners were old-timers, were Americans and Cornishmen, men of that type that had worked with us for a great many years.

Commissioner BALLARD. Well, you say the town had been built around your mine? Did you have the dollar a month for the medical attendance there?

Mr. BLOOD. No; we never had anything like that.

Commissioner BALLARD. You did not require it?

Mr. BLOOD. Never anything of that kind. If they wanted it we did whatever the men wanted. We put in the eight-hour day before the law passed. We gave our men whatever they wanted. We never had any differences with them in anything of the kind.

Commissioner BALLARD. Did you have a company store?

Mr. BLOOD. No; not in this. We had a store, but it was not owned by the company. We had a store for our own convenience. We never had scrip or anything of that kind. They could buy whatever they wanted to. They could charge their account against their wages if they desired it.

Commissioner BALLARD. Were there other stores there?

Mr. BLOOD. Plenty of other stores. We had our store more for our own convenience, for our own supplies, you might say.

Commissioner BALLARD. Did the miners in these negotiations ever bring up the question that the price in an 8-foot vein should be different than the price in a 4-foot vein? That the men could make more money, dig more coal, in the 8-foot vein than in the 4-foot vein, and therefore there should be a difference?

Mr. BLOOD. We could not do it. We tried to get them to see that, but they never would.

Commissioner BALLARD. Did the officers ever take that matter up?

Mr. BLOOD. Yes. We brought it to their attention, and I have talked to them by the hour, but they simply insisted on the flat rate. They were simply in the attitude of demanding things that were impossible to comply with. They took the position that they wanted to strike, any they did strike.

Commissioner BALLARD. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. Thank you.

Mr. Brake.

TESTIMONY OF MR. EDWIN V. BRAKE.

Chairman WALSH. Your name is Edwin Brake?

Mr. BRAKE. Edwin V. Brake.

Chairman WALSH. You are deputy labor commissioner of the State?

Mr. BRAKE. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you held your present position?

Mr. BRAKE. I have held it since—over eight years.

Chairman WALSH. What are your duties?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, there are five separate and distinct departments in the labor bureau in this State.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to ask you to run through with this and make it as brief and concise as possible.

What are your duties?

Mr. BRAKE. My duties are: I am chief factory inspector, I am deputy labor commissioner, chief of the statistical department, at the head of the bureau of free employment, also have charge of the licensing and regulating of the private employment agencies.

Chairman WALSH. Does that include the inspection of mines?

Mr. BRAKE. No; we do not inspect mines.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have any duty with respect to enforcing the mine laws, or did you during the past years?

Mr. BRAKE. Yes. The statute in this State provides that the deputy labor commissioner shall enforce all laws for the protection of wage earners of every kind and character.

Chairman WALSH. What part did you take in drafting legislation covering conditions at mines?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, in the last 20 years I have been more or less interested in securing the passage of the eight-hour law for miners, women and children labor laws, factory-inspection laws, free-employment laws, creating free employment offices, controlling private employment agencies, and various other laws.

Chairman WALSH. Of what did your activities consist? Did you draft laws yourself or did you appear before members of the legislature, or what?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, I drafted the factory-inspection law—to go back a little further. In 1909 just previous to the meeting of the legislature, we, in conjunction with the legislative committee of the State federation of labor, met and had several sessions drafting various laws to be presented to the legislature, and I took quite an active part in the legislature, in both houses, in securing the passage of those acts.

Chairman WALSH. Briefly, what were they?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, there was a miners' eight-hour law, factory-inspection act, employers' liability act, a law controlling private employment agencies, an amendment to the old law creating the bureau of labor statistics; and we also had in there another law, or rather another bill, doing away with the old common-law defense of contributory negligence and assumption of risk. At that time there were bills introduced for an 8-hour law for women and minors, a 10-hour law for street railway men—I remember some 12 or 14 bills.

Chairman WALSH. What was the attitude of the mining companies to the passage of the 8-hour law, the semimonthly payment, the 10-hour bill, and similar measures?

Mr. BRAKE. At this time there was a law on the statute books prohibiting the payment of wages in scrip, and had been for quite a number of years. Their attitude—what we consider the men that look out particularly for the interests of the coal companies—they were opposed to the enactment of an eight-hour law for miners. We had one on the statute books that was not satisfactory, and we wanted to get one that was, and their attitude was generally antagonistic, and they were opposed of course to the abrogation of the old common-law doctrine of the assumption of risk and contributory negligence. Some of the representatives supported our factory act. That was quite sweeping, and I appeared before the judiciary committee of the senate, and explained these bills at various times, the objects and purposes of them. We used to hold extended sessions; but at the session of the seventeenth general assembly, that was the one of 1909, there was a bill introduced by Mr. Hurd, a short bill that had for its purpose the distribution and increasing of air in the mines. That bill was antagonized very strongly by the coal companies and defeated.

Chairman WALSH. Did the coal companies usually maintain what might be termed a recognized lobby at the statehouse consisting of attorneys and officers?

Mr. BRAKE. Well I don't know that they have any particular agent—they are a good deal like the rest of the people. If a bill comes up at an open session of the committee of course they have their representatives there and the other people have theirs.

Chairman WALSH. What attitude did the three large coal companies take as to obeying these laws—the mining laws?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, the eight-hour law that was passed in 1904, the result of probably 15 or 20 years' agitation, there never was any attention paid to it outside of what we called the organized camps, where they made contracts with the union.

Chairman WALSH. What attitude did the smaller companies take toward those laws?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, I think in the unorganized mines they paid no attention to it.

Chairman WALSH. And in the organized mine?

Mr. BRAKE. In the organized mines of course the miners would have that in their contract.

Chairman WALSH. What attitude did the local authorities in Las Animas and Huerfano Counties take toward the enforcement of the mining laws and safety regulations for miners.

Mr. BRAKE. Well, my experience with the local officers down there has been almost entirely through deputies, and as I have reports from the deputies as to the manner in which they enforced the laws, we never could get an absolute enforcement or partial enforcement of any of those laws.

Chairman WALSH. Did the authorities there cooperate with your department to enforce the laws?

Mr. BRAKE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You say they did not do that?

Mr. BRAKE. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was their attitude with reference, for instance, to checkweighmen?

Mr. BRAKE. In my recollection checkweighmen have been used on one mine, that is, the Sopris mine, and have been for a good many years.

Chairman WALSH. Do the miners ever petition you for checkweighmen?

Mr. BRAKE. On several occasions I was petitioned for checkweighmen and sent representatives down. I still remember one instance at Aguilar, and when we got down there, there was a committee appointed to act with my deputy to see the superintendent of the mine, and he discharged the committee and alleged that the reason that he did it was that they were agitators. I think that was at the Southwestern mine.

Chairman WALSH. What company was that?

Mr. BRAKE. I think at the Southwestern mine, I think what we call an independent company.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of any other instance of that kind?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, I only hear of them. I might call your attention—however, I will be just as brief as I can, and I will show you something here—

Commissioner WALSH. Could you give us the reference? Just give us the reference to that page. It apparently is a report.

Mr. BRAKE. Yes. It embraces four pages. The substance was—the miners—I will just read from it and you will get the idea [reading]:

“Many reports were received by the department, of scales at coal-mine tip-ple being defective, and numerous miners claimed that they were being defrauded by getting short-weighted on their coal mined. It should be understood that coal miners are paid on the tonnage basis—so much per ton of coal mined. Deputy factory inspectors were instructed to examine into these complaints when inspecting surface workings around coal mines. The department has no jurisdiction underground; that belonging properly to the duties of the mine inspectors, coal and metal. Deputy Factory Inspector Leroy Monical, who was assigned the southern field, reports as follows.”

Then he gives in the report here a detail of each mine and the condition he found the scales in.

Chairman WALSH. How many did he, approximately and roughly, find to be defective?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, I could not tell. I suppose that—well, here is a—I will just read you one, and that will give you an idea.

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). First, I would like to ask—that includes the scales of what companies?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, it includes the scales of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., the Wooten Land & Fuel Co.—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Does that include the Rocky Mountain and the Victor-American?

Mr. BRAKE. Yes; the Rocky Mountain and the Victor-American.

Chairman WALSH. All right; go ahead, now. What were you going to say?

Mr. BRAKE. Now, this is an illustration of the report that he made, about four pages, so you won't want to hear all of it [reading]:

“March 21, 1912. Wooten Land & Fuel Co., two mines situated close to New Mexico line on the Santa Fe Railroad: I find the scales at the Wooten mine unbalanced, and scales at the Turner mine very unfair to the miners. They could not be balanced, and, on weighing a car of coal, the weight of three men weighing 450 pounds only increased the weight of the car 50 pounds. Scales seemed to be binding. They were inspected by the county inspector.”

Chairman WALSH. What county was that?

Mr. BRAKE. Las Animas.

Chairman WALSH. How are the county inspectors of scales appointed?

Mr. BRAKE. By the county commissioners. But this is the only reference I have ever heard of in any reports by any of my deputies to an inspector at any place in the State of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. What you know of the condition as to compelling men to trade at the company stores, and as to this scrip, if any such customs did exist?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, the custom of using scrip was very prevalent by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. for many, many years. As to whether they were compelled to trade at the company stores, I only know from what the men tell me themselves. They claim that they were compelled to trade there.

Chairman WALSH. What do you know as to whether or not individual miners could present grievances to these companies in which the organization did not exist—the miners' union?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, I have had the officers of the company tell me that they were always ready and willing to listen to complaints. On the contrary, I have had numerous men make complaints to me that they could not get any adjustment of any differences.

Chairman WALSH. In your opinion as an official, was there sufficient of that to cause unrest among the men?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, that might have contributed to the unrest.

Chairman WALSH. What do you know of the methods of the militia during their occupation of the strike zone?

Mr. BRAKE. Well, if you will give me a few minutes I might start in and tell you what I know about the conditions or the situation in southern Colorado; and I will talk just as fast as I can.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. We have only about 10 minutes more.

Mr. BRAKE. On the 15th day of August, 1913—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Were you down there?

Mr. BRAKE. Yes. Secretary Fairchild, secretary to Gov. Ammons, came to my office, and I was absent, and he left word that the governor wanted me to go to Las Animas and Huerfano Counties and make an investigation and report, as his representative, as to the conditions and the likelihood of stopping the strike. I did not want to go without seeing the governor, and I found he had gone to his ranch up in Grand County, and I called him up on the telephone at 9 o'clock at night of the 15th. I got him over the phone, and he verified the statement made by his secretary, and he said: "I want you to make a thorough investigation as to the probabilities of doing something to stop the strike." I left the next day at 12.15—that was the 16th—and I arrived in Trinidad at 7.45. That evening—well, I walked up from the depot to the Toltec Hotel and had registered, and there was a shooting started on the streets just outside of the hotel, probably within a hundred feet, where a couple of deputy sheriffs killed a miner on the streets there. It was Saturday evening. The streets were full of people, and it created quite a furor. The State federation began its session then on the Monday following. On the Sunday between this killing and the meeting of the State federation the officers of the chamber of commerce sent their secretary, Mr. Fryer, to know if I would meet them at a special meeting Sunday at 10 o'clock, and I did, and met the directors and the officers of the chamber of commerce. They then informed me of the terrible unrest that existed in the county, stating that they were very much dissatisfied themselves with the industrial condition; that they did not entirely blame the miners, but that they wanted to avoid a strike if it were possible, and urged me to use my influence with the delegates to the State federation to avoid taking any drastic action. I made quite an investigation of the conditions by talking with business men and with the miners.

There were quite a number of them in town, delegates from the different camps to the State federation, and I stayed there probably a week. I came back and reported to Gov. Ammons, and I made my report verbally in the presence of Secretary of State Pearce, who is the commissioner ex officio, and I told him that the feeling was very intense; that the town of Trinidad was filled full of armed men, guards, and detectives; that the killing of Lippiatt had created an intense feeling among the miners; and that I apprehended if something was not done and done quickly that there would be an outbreak there that would be disastrous. I recommended that he send for the sheriffs of the two counties and have them come to Denver and peremptorily demand of them that they disarm every guard, every man, woman, and child in the two counties, and if he needed any deputy sheriffs to discharge some he had and put in reputable citizens recommended by the chamber of commerce; that if they would not agree to this plan for him to remove the sheriffs and declare martial law at that time and stop the conditions from getting any worse.

Chairman WALSH. What date was that?

Mr. BRAKE. I should just this was about—let's see—this would be about the 22d or 23d of August.

Chairman WALSH. 1913?

Mr. BRAKE. 1913.

Chairman WALSH. Just a month before the strike?

Mr. BRAKE. Just a month before the strike.

There was a great many negotiations held. I addressed communications to the officers of the union and to the officers of the coal companies—especially the three large companies—offering arbitration under the statute, which both sides declined. Then on the 22d of September, the strike having been called on the 23d, I went to Trinidad, and was followed in two or three days by Mr. Pearce, and Ethelbert Stewart, who was an employee and statistician from, I think, the United States Labor Department, also accompanied Mr. Pearce. We took an automobile and made a trip to Sopris, Segundo, Primero, Ludlow—they were just establishing then the tent colony. People were just coming out of the canyons—Hastings and Delagua.

Chairman WALSH. What was this date?

Mr. BRAKE. This, I should judge, was about the 25th of September, or 26th.

Chairman WALSH. After the strike was called?

Mr. BRAKE. The strike was called on the 23d, and the feeling then was very intense. They had closed up the road into Camp Primero.

Chairman WALSH. And you say the feeling was intense. You may proceed.

Mr. BRAKE. And we had quite a difficulty getting in there. Complaints had been made that they were detaining people at Primero—would not permit them to move their baggage and household goods out of the camp. So after parleying quite a while at the gate across the road—we were held up there by a guard with a gun—but after parleying, why, he permitted us to go through, with the captain of the guard on the inside. We found that these people wanted to leave. They lived in house No. 126 at Primero; and we finally got an order from the sheriff to the superintendent of the mine permitting these people to get out. I left, and I don't know—I didn't get the order until after we got back to town. But the conditions were very intense—the feeling.

Chairman WALSH. What evidence was there that these people were being detained?

Mr. BRAKE. The superintendent of the mine told me that these people did not want to leave; but when I left the camp I found a man down at Old Segundo who lived in this house, No. 126, and he told me that he did want to leave; and that is the reason that I got the order from the sheriff. I found—the next day we took the trip up through the Ludlow colony up to Hastings and up to Delagua, and we met the superintendent of the mine there. The mine was not working at that time. There was a few men there, but Mr. Snodgrass said they were not doing anything to speak of, and we talked with him about the conditions and the likelihood of anyone leaving—he didn't think there was going to be any leave. He said he knew all the men. They were all friends of his. He had been somewhat surprised in the number that had left, and he attributed it to one shift boss that he thought would stay with the company, but he was a member of the union and took them all away.

I then came back to Denver—I went to Walsenburg also first and found practically the same conditions, and then came back to Denver—and then in January I went back again, and then the militia was in the field. There isn't any question in my mind from the information that I have and the experiences some of my deputies had that the militia felt that it was incumbent on them to break the strike. A great many complaints had been coming to the office that men were being detained in the different camps who wanted to leave; that they had been shipped in, as they claimed, under false pretenses or representations, and they wanted to get out. So I sent a couple of my deputies with an interpreter down there to make these investigations, and this is a matter that I prepared for the newspapers after they had thrown, or ordered, the deputies out of the camp—the militia had. In a report by Gen. Chase to the governor of this State on the military occupation of the coal-strike zone in Colorado there appears on page 51, under the title of "Labor commissioners," that which, in justice to this department, requires a clear statement of the facts.

These men were sent out to make an investigation as to whether anybody was being detained or peoned. Under the statutes it is made the duty of the deputy labor commissioner to cause to be enforced all the laws that have been passed for the protection of laboring people. Numerous complaints have been filed in this office that men were being held against their will in the mining camps of Delagua, Hastings, Berwind, Tabasco, Forbes, and Gray Creek. It was stated that the men had been shipped into Colorado and conditions misrepresented and that they were being held by force of arms—mine guards and State militia. I sent Mr. Gross, Mr. Howe, and Mr. Frank Mancini, all employees in the office—regular employees of this department—to make an investigation as to the truthfulness of the reports; and my instructions were that they should assemble the men of each mine and make a statement to them to the effect that if they were satisfied with their conditions and that if no misrepresentations had been made to them, they were at perfect liberty to work; but if they wanted to leave the mining camp for reasons of the treatment they were receiving or because of conditions that were misrepresented, my orders were to take them out of the camps. Mr. Gross was placed in charge and visited Delagua, Hastings, Berwind, and Tabasco, and was denied the right or privilege of interviewing the men at all.

At Forbes, the superintendent of the mine, Mr. Nichols, granted permission to interview the men to ascertain whether or not they were being held against their will; but before Mr. Gross or Mr. Howe had opportunity to meet the men, they were arrested on the orders of Lieut. Olinger, and ordered to report at headquarters, where they were informed that they would have to leave the camp and were denied the privilege of interviewing those men as to whether they were being held against their will. Lieut. Olinger told Mr. Gross that no man could leave the Forbes camp without a military permit, and he could not get a military permit unless he had an O. K. from the superintendent of the mine; that they would not allow any man to leave the camp who was indebted to the coal company—thus simply admitting a system of peonage that we were trying to investigate, and denied that privilege by the militia of the State.

Gen. Chase, in his explanation of the reasons that all deputies of this department were not permitted to interview these men, stated that Maj. Hamrock had told him that Frank Mancini, an employee of this department, had said that his instructions were to take people out of the mines either by argument, cajolery, or intimidation; this statement of Maj. Hamrock's is absolutely false. Mancini never received any instructions from me of any nature whatsoever, neither did he tell Maj. Hamrock anything of the kind as stated above.

This department has knowledge that, in place of using the military forces of the State to protect lives and property, Chase used the troops for the purpose of breaking the strike; that he personally used his soldiers and his influence in placing strike breakers in the various mines; that promiscuous arrests of miners and incarceration in the county jails incommunicado were done for the sole purpose of intimidating the strikers. Of all the arrests that he made and all the men who were jailed, there were no reports of any gun guards or murders by imported gun fighters of the different detective agencies. His attempt at vindicating his force by going through the State making speeches at the State's expense has no precedent, and is only done for the purpose of misleading the general public as to his true actions during the period he was in the field.

My information regarding these people being held, came in the form of affidavits, so that it was my duty to make the investigations, which I had done in northern Colorado, and submit it in our report—our findings in 1909 and 1910. We found that the same conditions of holding men in these barbed-wire inclosures prevailed; and when Mr. Gross went to some of those mines he took out quite a number of men that went with him when they found they had some protection—

Chairman WALSH. About how many went out?

Mr. BRAKE. My recollection is that about 71 were taken out in northern Colorado on that trip that he made. I have his reports here—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Will you kindly submit them, or make such notation that we can get them into the record? Oh, is it in that book you have?

Mr. BRAKE. I have it in both books.

Chairman WALSH. Will you describe those reports, so that if we haven't them in the record already we can get them?

Mr. BRAKE. I have them all marked here, and I can describe them [reading]: "Biennial Report, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Colorado, 1909-1910."

Chairman WALSH. Can you give us those marked copies?

Mr. BRAKE. I can give you these copies I have now.

Chairman WALSH. All right, just put those in the record.

(The witness submitted, in printed form, books entitled "Twelfth Biennial Report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the State of Colorado, 1909-1910," and "Thirteenth Biennial Report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the State of Colorado, 1911-1912," both books bearing the imprint "Denver, Colorado. The Smith-Brooks Printing Co., State Printers.")

What have you personally done while occupying the position of labor commissioner to bring violations of the law to the attention of the district attorney and to demand compliance with the law? That is, confine that, of course, to the laws affecting the mining industry alone.

Mr. BRAKE. Well, we have made a great many efforts to have people prosecuted for violations of the various laws, but with no apparent success. I sent Mr. Gross at one time down in the coal camps—I think it was in 1910—they are shown in the report there, his report of the trip, which probably would be better than what I would say.

Chairman WALSH. It is in there, is it?

Mr. BRAKE. It is in that report, and the place is marked.

Chairman WALSH. Now, if there is any matter of significance that can not be found in that report that you would like to state now, you can do it. I know the subject is so broad, and you have such a deep knowledge of it, that you could testify here for some time.

Mr. BRAKE. Well, you know my testifying here is a good deal like putting a man up on the platform to prepare a two-hour speech and cut him off with 15 minutes. He hardly knows where to start and where to quit.

Chairman WALSH. I understand; but we are limited as to our time.

Mr. BRAKE. As I understand it, one of the purposes of this commission is to find out what are the causes of these industrial disturbances?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BRAKE. I want to say that, in my judgment, the primary cause in Colorado was the desire on the part of the miners to get eight hours a day, with the desire to unionize their camps; that is, both metalliferous and coal; and that for approximately 20 years the struggle had gone on for an eight-hour law, and we never succeeded in getting one until the session of the legislature—the last one—in 1913 that was of any force at all. Up to that time no attention had been paid to the law except, as I stated in the beginning, in the unionized camps.

Another thing that caused a great deal of dissatisfaction here was the fact that if a man was killed or injured in the mines, or in any of the industries of the State, it was absolutely impossible for him to get any relief, or his heirs. The old common-law doctrine of assumption of risk and contributory negligence was a barrier, under our employers' liability laws, to their getting any relief, so that the only time they could get anything would be on a compromise. In a few instances, though, after a large mine disaster, they would go and settle with the heirs; but to go into court to get any redress, it was absolutely impossible. So that for years, in place of trying to get employers' liability laws, we have been trying to get away from the old common-law practice, and we have only succeeded in abrogating the common law on assumption of risk.

A law was passed in 1913 abolishing the doctrine of assumption of risks, but through some influence, presumably these corporations, the law was referred, sufficient signatures being obtained to a petition for this purpose; but the people adopted it at the recent State election.

Another thing that has caused a good deal of dissatisfaction in the State is that the laws are not enforced. I am reminded of and will give you a citation.

In the eleventh general assembly—that was in 1897—the legislature passed what was known as the "switch-blocking act," which required the use of a V-shaped piece of wood to keep men from getting caught in the frogs. That law stated that it would be prima facie evidence on the part of the railroad company in case of a failure to properly block the switch. A boy was caught in an unblocked frog at Lawrence and lost his leg. His mother, a widow, brought suit, and it was tried in the court of Canon City, and Judge Bailey was the trial judge, and he gave instructions 8 and 9, that were in substance to the effect that if the jury found from the evidence that the switch was not blocked, then they must find for the plaintiff. Consequently a verdict was rendered against the defendant, the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Co., and an appeal was taken to the supreme court, and Judge Goddard wrote the opinion stating that while it was true that the company had not properly blocked the switch in accordance with the statutes of 1897, yet that boy had assumed the risk.

We find continual cases of laws being declared unconstitutional, whether it be mining laws or others, or they are nullified by some act of the court. We attempted in 1893 to pass a woman's eight-hour law, and after we had it on the statute books I brought an action under that act against the Colorado Laundry Co. for working a girl more than eight hours. I went to Judge Campbell, who was then a member of the supreme court and who was a personal acquaintance and friend of mine, and I said to him, "Judge, I want to know if this law is good before I bring an action. We have so many of these labor laws declared unconstitutional that I would like to know it before I go into the courts." He said, "I am very familiar with that statute, and any judge that would declare a law of that character, having for its object the protection of women and children, unconstitutional is not fit to sit on the supreme bench." I got a verdict in the lower court, and the laundry company appealed the case to the supreme court and Judge Campbell declared the law unconstitutional.

These things repeatedly have been going on for 20 years, until it has brought a spirit of unrest, and my remedy for these things is a strict and rigid enforcement of every law upon the statute books against all impartially. If that had been done before, we would not have had this last strike and we will not have any in the future.

I will give you another illustration. I got the past year a law controlling private employment agencies. I presume there have been more crooked men engaged in employing laboring people in the United States than any other occupation according to numbers, and we sought to control these, and we got this law passed, and it was my duty to enforce it. I found that the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. had employed a Jap for six or seven years at Pueblo to employ Japs to work in the steel works, and then deducted $1 from their time checks. They made biweekly settlements, paid them every two weeks, and some one told them they were being robbed; that there was $1 being deducted once every month out of their pay, $1 from each man, for this Jap, to pay for his job. And I brought an action and got a verdict in the lower court of Pueblo, from which an appeal was taken to the supreme court, and the verdict was reversed on the ground that the steel works at Pueblo had been exempted by the city of Pueblo from taxation and was not a part of the municipality.

So it seems that it does not make any difference how we go about these things, we can never reach the evil.

A semimonthly pay day has been adopted by a part of the firms of the State, by some of the corporations, but not all. I never was able to get a district attorney to bring any action. I have tried repeatedly to force the manufacturers and the merchants of the State to furnish the schedules so that I could prepare statistics on these various things.

We have a statute that looks very strong, but I never was able to get the district attorney to allow me to bring an action. So, when we sent out 5,000 schedules, we got back only 15 or 20 per cent, and then they were only half filled. Some people paid no attention to it at all. So, if this commission can devise some way, or make any suggestions to the United States Congress that will result in passing laws that will remedy this situation out here, it will be very satisfactory. You can take our antioercion act. I tried to have actions brought on that. I had a call to go to Louisville, Colo.—that there were some men up there that had been shipped in from Chicago, and that they were there stranded and could not get away. This is the statement we took from the men, with their names and where they were shipped from, and the whole history of it that you may put into the record.

Chairman WALSH. Please submit it in the record.

(The statement so offered is printed among exhibits at the end of this subject as "Brake Exhibit No. 1.")

Mr. BRAKE. These men were hired by the officers of the Rock Island Railroad Co. in Chicago and they were shipped to Colorado, with two guards on the car, and when they got to Limon, the car was locked and remained locked until it was transferred at Denver to the Colorado Southern for the Monarch mine at Louisville. I tried to get an action brought against these people, and I could not do it under the statute. They said the law was not constitutional, so that these men had to go back to Chicago the best way they could.

I also have here copies of the labor laws of Colorado.

Chairman WALSH. Please submit them into the record, Mr. Brake.

(The witness submitted books entitled "The Compiled Labor Laws of the State of Colorado, Including all Enactments Relating to Labor to January 1, 1909, Axel Swanson Deputy Labor Commissioner"; "The Compiled Labor Laws of the State of Colorado, Including all Enactments Relating to Labor to May 6, 1911. Edwin V. Brake, Deputy Labor Commissioner and Chief Factory Inspector"; and "Labor Laws Enacted, 1913, State of Colorado, Offices Bureau of Labor Statistics," each of which was published by the Smith-Brooks Press, Denver.)

Mr. BRAKE. There is one thing I would like to explain with reference to this strike. I have been criticized for some figures I made regarding the earnings of miners, and I want to state that these figures are based upon reports made by the coal companies to the mine inspector monthly, as to the tonnage produced, as to the rate per ton paid the men, and as to the number of miners employed. I took the totals for the year on five mines. I picked them so I could gather the data from the three large companies and from the lignite field in the north, and I prepared this table, and I want to state that this table is absolutely correct, because any child 16 years old can take these figures and verify them. I took the total number of days worked, according to their own reports, the average number of miners employed during the year, the price paid per ton, the total tonnage produced at the mine, and all you have to do is to multiply the total tonnage by the price paid per ton, and divide by the number of men, and you get the average annual earnings.

In the Berwind mine there were 301 days, and they employed 298 miners, and paid 55 cents per ton. They produced 362,939 tons. The average gross wages per miner per year was $669.82. The average gross wages per day was $2.24 on a basis of 312 working days, and they worked 301. Fixed charges for powder, smithing, and hospital, $54.50; average net wage per year, $615.32; average net wages for a 10-hour day, $1.97; average net wages for 8-hour day, $1.58. The five mines producing 7 per cent of the total coal produced in the State give an average net wage for an 8-hour day of $1.68. We produced that year about 11,000,000 tons, and this covers 839,267 tons. I gave the Berwind mine. The Maitland mine—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Have you the Delagua mine, Mr. Brake?

Mr. BRAKE. Berwind, Maitland, Piedmont, the Golden Ash, and the Coal Creek mine. I have not the Delagua, but it is the largest producer in the State. Baum owns the Golden Ash; the State owns the land, but he has the lease. The Coal Creek is owned by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.; the Piedmont is owned by the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co.; the Maitland by the Victor-American Fuel Co., and the Berwind by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Chairman WALSH. Will you submit that table, please, Mr. Brake?

Mr. BRAKE. Yes, sir.

(The table of wages so offered was in printed form.)

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, if there is anything else in the way of constructive remedy or suggestion you have in mind, I wish, please, you would give it to a member of our staff, who will be left behind and who will call upon you.

(The witness, in accordance with the above request, under date of December 30, 1914, submitted papers, which appear among the exhibits at the end of this subject as "Brake Exhibit No. 2.")

Commissioner BALLARD. You spoke about the carload of men that were shipped from Chicago. Why didn't they go to work when they got here?

Mr. BRAKE. These men were employed there. According to their own representations they were plumbers, electricians, boiler makers, street car men, mostly mechanics and mostly young fellows from 25 to 30 years of age, and they claimed they were brought out here to work at their regular trades, and that when they got out here they were taken to the collar of the shaft and told, "Now, go down and go to work." And they refused. The names and addresses of these men are contained in that statement.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Mr. Brake.

Mr. BRAKE. I would like to say that if you leave anyone here for any further information, I would be glad to give it to him.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Grant will be here.

Mr. BRAKE. I have been broken up because of the short time given me.

Chairman WALSH. It has been too short. I might make the statement that a few witnesses who have been subpoenaed have not been used on account of time. The testimony expected to be adduced from some of them has been covered by other witnesses. In the cases of witnesses from whom we still desire information, members of our staff will be left to take statements from them.

All of those witnesses who have been subpoenaed, but not called upon the stand, may get their per diem and mileage by applying to Mr. Dower.

This commission will stand adjourned without day.

(And thereupon, at 6.10 p. m., Wednesday, December 16, 1914, the commission adjourned without day.)

DALRYMPLE EXHIBIT.

OFFICE OF STATE INSPECTOR OF COAL MINES,
Denver, Colo., December 15, 1914.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS COMMISSION,
Capitol Building, Denver.

GENTLEMEN: Having been advised that your honorable body is anxious to complete your investigation in the State as early as possible, I desire to submit the following statement:

While I was on the stand the question was asked if I knew of any operator that advocated the passage of our present mining bill. I replied I did not. I wish to qualify this statement by saying, Not until after it was amended by the joint committee appointed by the Senate, at which time they advocated its becoming a law without change. I am informed that a witness testified before you that my office has discriminated against nonunion mines by compelling them to use permissible powder, while the union mines were allowed to use black powder. The facts are that some of the companies put their mines on permissible powder without being asked by me, while other companies, upon request from this department, experimented with permissible and complained that it had caused a great increase in the percentage of slack produced. A joint inspection was made in this district, with the result that some of the mines were allowed to continue the use of black powder, while others were compelled to use permissible, this being determined by the existing conditions.

With reference to the allegation that the deputies and myself were put into office through the influence of the U. M. of A.:

Deputy Inspector Oberding and myself were appointed after passing a rigid competitive examination before a board of examiners composed of five members, one of whom was a United Mine Worker.

Deputy Inspector Graham was supported by the organization, while it opposed Deputy Inspector King.

The deputy inspectors are appointed by the chief inspector.

The testimony given you relative to a mine 1,100 feet deep being allowed to operate, but which, had it belonged to some of the other companies, would have been closed down by this office:

The mine referred to was opened some years before the present mining law became effective, and consists of two shafts nearly a mile apart; and while this office did allow it to operate under conditions not entirely satisfactory, this was done with the sole object of connecting the two shafts above named.

When connections were made without improving the sanitary conditions the mine was closed by this department.

In conclusion I wish to say that the question of union or nonunion has never interfered with me in the performance of my duties.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES DALRYMPLE,
State Inspector of Coal Mines.

CURTIS EXHIBIT.

JANUARY 9, 1915.

Mr. W. W. CURTIS,
President Rapson Coal Mining Co.,
Colorado Springs, Colo.

MY DEAR SIR: In checking up the records of our Denver hearings I find that there is certain information which you promised to furnish to the commission and which has not yet been received. We are anxious to complete our records at as early a date as possible, and would be very glad to have you send this data at your earliest convenience.

The information desired is a list showing the wages paid by you before and after the strike on the same class of work; the average wage and the average selling price for 12 months before and after the strike; and a written statement regarding the average amount of coal mined per man for the last half of October, 1914. To make this last request more clear to you I am quoting from the testimony:

"Mr. CURTIS. The average amount of coal mined per man for the last half of October of this year, 45.9 tons per man. That is, as I said before, an entirely misleading fact, unless it is borne in mind first that that represents the average—not even the average—does not give the net average for all the men; and, second, that those wages are the wages corresponding to the amount of mining, which is supplemented by the average narrow work they have done.

"Chairman WALSH. Will you have that written out and handed to the clerk?"

"Mr. CURTIS. I will."

Thanking you for your attention, I am,
Very truly, yours,

LOUIS K. BROWN, Secretary.

JANUARY 28, 1915.

Mr. W. W. CURTIS,
President Rapson Coal Mining Co.,
Colorado Springs, Colo.

MY DEAR SIR: I wrote you, under date of January 9, regarding certain information which was desired by the Commission on Industrial Relations to supplement your testimony given at their public hearing in Denver during December. As I have received no reply to this letter, and the commission is very anxious to complete the Denver testimony, I am taking the liberty of writing you again, and trust that it will be possible for you to furnish the data requested.

Very truly, yours,

LOUIS K. BROWN, Secretary.

RAPSON COAL MINING Co.,
Colorado Springs, Colo., February 3, 1915.

Mr. LOUIS K. BROWN,
Secretary, Transportation Building, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 28th ultimo, as well as your earlier letter of the 9th. I had not intentionally overlooked your earlier letter, but when I came to prepare the figures which had been asked for I found it impossible to comply.

When I was on the witness stand I declined to give certain information asked for as to earnings, and was advised by the chairman that I was not obliged to do so unless I saw fit.

I have no objection whatever to giving the wage list before and after the strike, and attach statement thereof hereto.

I was asked to give the various wage cost and average selling price before and after the strike, but this I find to be impossible; that is, it is impossible to give any such figures which will have any value. This is due to the fact that we were working the mines under entirely different conditions. The output of our No. 1 mine, for instance, last year was over 67,000 tons, while for the preceding year it was only 28,000 tons. Then, too, last year a considerable percentage of our output was mine-run coal, while in previous years we had sold practically no mine-run coal. The labor and cost of producing mine-run coal is materially less than of domestic coal, because of the elimination of the expense of screening the coal and of loading it into box cars.

To get any tonnage which would be comparable to our 1914 tonnage we would have to go back some four or five years, when the conditions of the mine were radically different. As a consequence of this I find it impossible to prepare any comparable figures covering the average wage cost and average selling price before and after the strike.

I read into the record of my testimony certain information which I considered to be pertinent and comparable relating to conditions before and after the strike. At the request of the chairman I turned over my memorandum to the stenographer and supposed he would verify his notes of my testimony from these. To the best of my judgment and recollection the transcript of my testimony did not give this information at all, and I will consequently repeat in this the facts embodied in those statements I then made.

In December of 1910, 40 miners earned gross $80.15 each for the month. Their net earnings, after deducting charges for rent, water, fuel, powder, and any order which may have been given them at their request on independent stores, average $53.35. Ten of these men earned during that month an average of $130.27. In the half of September, 1913, preceding the strike, all of the miners in our employ in the same mine averaged for the half month $38.30. Twelve of these men averaged for the half month $61.96.

In the last half of October, 1914, the first 50 men on the pay roll, all but 9 of whom were miners and none of whom were men on monthly salaries, earned $50.80 gross and $45.95 net. Fourteen miners out of these 50 earned an average of $65.42. The pay roll for this half month amounted to $6,361.87, while the total amount deducted for oil and powder sold the men during that time amounted to only $136.95.

Hoping you will find this to answer your purpose, I am,

Very respectfully,

W. W. CURTIS.

WELBORN EXHIBIT NO. 1.

[No. 1810. Case 21. State of Colorado. Lease. Expires October 1, 1917. Berwind and Tabasco mines, Las Animas County, Colo. Renewal of No. 650-M62.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO.

COAL-LAND LEASE.

This indenture, made this 12th day of June, A. D. one thousand nine-hundred and seven, by and between the State of Colorado, party of the first part, and the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, of the city and county of Denver, in said State, party of the second part:

Witnesseth, That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned, to be kept and performed by the party of the second part, its successors and assigns, has demised and leased to the said party of the second part, the right and privilege of mining for and taking out coal from the lands hereinafter described, lying and being in the county of Las Animas, in said State, the same being known and described as follows, viz:

All of section thirty-six (36) in township thirty-one (31) south of range sixty-five (65) west of the sixth principal meridian, containing six hundred and forty (640) acres, more or less, according to United States survey.¹

The privilege is hereby granted the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company to take coal mined on its own land adjoining this State land through the main entries on the said school section for delivery to their tipples works: Provided, however, That the lessee herein shall bind itself to keep all coal mined on the said school section separate from said company's coal mined on its own land until after the same has been weighed on the tipples, and due record of the same made, so that the terms of this lease may be complied with in regard to the tonnage mined, as provided in this lease.¹ (See board orders of June 12th, 1907, and August 22nd, 1907. Renewal of lease No. M-62.)

To have and to hold the said above-described premises, with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, its successors and assigns, from the second day of October, A. D. 1907, for the full term of ten (10) years, being until the second day of October, A. D. 1917. The said party of the second part, in consideration of the leasing of said premises and privileges aforesaid, by the said party of the first part, to the said party of the second part, does covenant and agree to and with the first party as follows, viz:

First. That within sixty days from the signing of this lease, the party of the second part will commence to prospect for coal upon said premises, and will continuously pursue such prospecting until coal is found of sufficient thickness to justify mining of same, or in case workable coal is not found, work may cease if the register of the State land board is so notified in writing, and said register, at his option, may declare this lease void and ended and both parties released from all obligations thereunder. If coal of workable thickness is found, then the party of the second part shall, within six months from the date of this lease, commence to open the same by a shaft or drift of proper size and continually and with reasonable energy develop the coal in a good and workmanlike manner and take out and pay royalty on not less than five thousand (5,000) tons of coal annually, after the first year of this lease.

Second. That this lease is to be taken and considered as a coal lease only, the party of the first part expressly reserving the right to lease at any time so much of the surface of the land herein described as is not actually needed and occupied by the party of the second part for the purpose of mining for coal, as herein stated.

Third. That in the underground workings for said coal all shafts, inclines, and tunnels shall be well timbered (when good mining requires timbering) and that all parts of workings, where the coal is not exhausted and for good reasons not being worked, will be kept free from water and waste material, as in ordinary operations, and that the underground workings shall be protected against fire and floods, and the creeps and squeezes shall be guarded against, and when they do occur shall be checked in a manner in keeping with good mining. That such methods of mining shall be used as shall insure the extraction of the greatest amount of the coal vein possible.

Fourth. During all the proper hours and at all times during the continuance of this lease, said party of the first part by its duly authorized agent or agents, named and appointed by the State board of land commissioners, of the said first party, or by the president or register of said board, shall be, and hereby are authorized to go through any of the shafts, openings, or workings on said premises and to examine, inspect, and survey the same, and to examine and make extracts or copies of all books and weigh sheets that show in any way the coal output of said premises, and that all conveniences necessary for said inspection, survey, or examination shall be furnished said agent or agents by the party of the second part.

Fifth. That all coal mined or taken from said premises, upon being hoisted or trammed, shall be weighed, and the weight thereof shall be entered in due form in books kept for such purpose by the party of the second part, and the weight of all coal shipped by railway or otherwise shall be kept and preserved.

Sixth. That on or before the 15th day of each and every month during the term of this lease the said second party shall make a report to the register of said board of land commissioners, in which shall be entered and set down the exact amount in weight and cubic yards of all coal mined upon said premises during the preceding calendar month, and said report shall be accompanied by the weights of the railway companies over which such coal or any part thereof has been transported, and shall also show the use or disposal by said party of the second part of coal in all other ways.

Seventh. That the said party of the second part shall pay unto the said party of the first part for the right and privilege of mining coal upon said premises as herein provided a royalty of ten (10) cents per ton of coal mined and taken out of said premises, which royalty shall be due and payable on or before the 15th day of each and every month during the term of this lease for the preceding calendar month: Provided always, however, That the minimum amount of monthly royalty shall be one-twelfth of the yearly royalty hereinafter provided for, whether any coal is mined or not: And provided further, That the sum of five (5) hundred dollars paid by said party of the second part to the said party of the first part at the enseling and delivery of these presents shall be in full for the minimum yearly royalty for the first year, but in the event the total royalty due and payable herein shall at the end of the first year of this lease be found to exceed said sum of five (5) hundred dollars, then and in that case said sum shall be applied as a credit on the amount of royalty so found to be due for said first year: And provided further, That the total minimum yearly royalty due from and payable by said party of the second part in each and every year during the term of this lease is hereby fixed at and shall be five (5) hundred dollars, whether any coal is mined or not.

The term "ton" as herein used means a ton of two thousand pounds of un-screened coal, unless said party of the first part, the State board of land commissioners, or its duly authorized agent or agents, elects to compute a ton of coal at twenty-seven cubic feet of coal in the solid or by the measurements of the space for which the coal is mined, deducting therefrom all space occupied by slate or other impurities, and in such case the said computation shall be final and binding upon said party of the second part.

It is expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that all mining, timbering, and work done by the party of the second part on said premises shall be at all times during the terms of this lease subject to the supervision, approval, and orders of the superintendent of the mineral department of said State board of land commissioners.

And it is expressly understood and covenanted by and between the parties aforesaid that if for any reason said party of the second part shall fail to keep each, all, and every one of the covenants by it covenanted aforesaid, then, and in that event, it shall and may be lawful for the said party of the first part to declare this indenture at an end and enter into the said premises, or any part thereof, either with or without process of law, to reenter, and the said party of the second part, or any persons occupying, in, or upon the same to expel, remove, and put out, using such force as may be necessary in so doing, and the said premises again to repossess and enjoy as in its first and former estate. And in such event, that is to say, in the event of the termination of this lease by reason of the breach or breaches of the covenants aforesaid, or at the expiration of the term aforesaid, said party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to surrender and deliver up said above-described premises and property, in good mining condition, peaceably to the said party of the first part, and shall forfeit to the State and make no claim for any moneys, work, improvements, or time laid out or expended in the premises. And upon the termination of this lease for any cause aforesaid, if said second party shall remain in the possession thereof, it shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful detainer of said premises, under the statutes in such case made and provided, and shall be subject to all the conditions and provisions thereof, and to eviction and removal forcibly or otherwise, with or without process of law as above stated.

It is also expressly understood and agreed that this lease shall not be assigned or the property sublet without the consent and approval of the State board of land commissioners, and that the privileges hereby granted will not be used for any other purposes than mining coal from said premises and will not be used for the mining, handling, or transportation of coal other than that mined on land under the control of the State board of land commissioners.

In witness whereof the said party of the first part hath caused these presents to be signed by the president and register of said State board of land commissioners and sealed with the official seal of said board, and the said party of the second part has hereunto set its hand and seal on this the day and year first hereinabove written.

BOND OF LESSEE.

Whereas the State Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Colorado has agreed to lease to the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, of the city and county of Denver, State of Colorado, upon its application, the following described lands situate in Las Animas County, State of Colorado, to wit: All of section thirty-six (36) in township thirty-one (31) south, of range sixty-five (65) west, of the sixth principal meridian, for the purpose of mining for coal thereon, containing, according to United States survey, six hundred and forty (640) acres, more or less.

The privilege is hereby granted the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company to take coal mined on its own land adjoining this State land through the main entries of the said school section for delivery to their tipples works: Provided, however, That the lessee herein shall bind itself to keep all coal mined on the said school section separate from the said company's coal mined on its own land, until after the same has been weighed on the tipples and due record of the same made, so that the terms of this lease may be complied with in regard to the tonnage mined, as provided in this lease. (See board order of June 12th, 1907, and August 22nd, 1907. Renewal of lease M-62.)

Now, therefore, know all men by these presents: That we, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, as principal, and National Surety Company, of N. Y., as sureties, of the county of Denver, State of Colorado, are held and firmly bound unto the State Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Colorado, in the sum of two thousand and no/100 ($2,000.00) dollars lawful money of the United States, to be paid unto the State Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Colorado, which payment well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our and each of our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally, firmly by these presents. Sealed with our seal on this the 17th day of September, one thousand nine hundred and seven.

The condition of the above obligation is such, that if the above bouden, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, its successors and assigns, shall in all things keep and perform the covenants, conditions, and agreements, and each and every one of them, and every part thereof, on its part to be performed, which are contained in a certain indenture of lease, bearing even date herewith, entered into between the State Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Colorado, party of the first part, and the said the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, party of the second part, covering the above-described lands, and shall not permit any loss nor commit nor cause to be committed any waste to or upon said premises, or any part thereof; and shall pay as flat rental therefor the sum of five hundred and no/100 ($500.00) dollars, and in addition thereto ten (10) cents per ton royalty on gross output; and shall make true report of the gross valuation of all coal mined on the above-described land, at such times as they are required so to do by the party of the first part, and well and truly make payment of all royalties as covenanted in said lease, and shall surrender said premises at the expiration of said lease, then the above obligation to be void, otherwise of full force and effect.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON Co.

NOTE.—By complying with terms of the lease we have been given verbal permission to continue same.

DENVER, November 16, 1907.

Mr. SIMON SMITH,
Williamsburg, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Before the State land board would consent or entertain the proposition of the transfer of the school lease from you to us, it insisted upon our paying $100 royalty due January 1, 1907. We paid this amount, which was owing from you, and will be pleased to have you remit the same to the company.

COAL LAND LEASE.

This indenture, made this 2nd day of September, A. D. one thousand nine hundred and three (1903), by and between the State of Colorado, party of the first part, and Arthur I. Kline, of the county of Denver, in said State, party of the second part:

Witnesseth, That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned, to be kept and performed by the party of the second part, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, has demised and leased to the said party of the second part the right and privilege of mining for and taking out coal from the lands hereinafter described, lying and being in the county of Fremont, in said State, the same being known and described as follows, viz:

Acres, 160; part of section, SW. $\frac{1}{4}$; section, 36; township, 19 S.; range, 70 W. Issued in lieu of lease M-51.

To have and to hold the said above-described premises, with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, from the 12th day of January, A. D. 1903, for the full term of ten (10) years, being until the 12th day of January, A. D. 1913. The said party of the second part, in consideration of the leasing of said premises and privileges aforesaid by the said party of the first part to the said party of the second part, does covenant and agree to and with the first party as follows, viz:

First. That within sixty days from the signing of this lease, the party of the second part will commence to prospect for coal upon said premises, and will continuously pursue such prospecting until coal is found of sufficient thickness to justify mining of same, or in case workable coal is not found, work may cease if the register of the State land board is so notified in writing, and said register, at his option, may declare this lease void and ended and both parties released from all obligations thereunder. If coal of workable thickness is found, then the party of the second part shall, within six months from the date of this lease, commence to open the same by a shaft or drift of proper size and continually and with reasonable energy develop the coal in a good and workmanlike manner and take out and pay royalty on not less than one thousand (1,000) tons of coal annually, after the first year of this lease.

Second. That this lease is to be taken and considered as a coal lease only, the party of the first part expressly reserving the right to lease at any time so much of the surface of the land herein described as is not actually needed and occupied by the party of the second part for the purpose of mining for coal, as herein stated.

Third. That in the underground workings for said coal all shafts, inclines, and tunnels shall be well timbered (when good mining requires timbering), and that all parts of workings, where the coal is not exhausted and for good reasons not being worked, will be kept free from water and waste material, as in ordinary operations, and that the underground workings shall be protected against fire and floods, and the creeps and squeezes shall be guarded against, and when they do occur shall be checked in a manner in keeping with good mining. That such methods of mining shall be used as shall insure the extraction of the greatest amount of the coal vein possible.

Fourth. During all the proper hours and at all times during the continuance of this lease, said party of the first part, by its duly authorized agent or agents, named and appointed by the State board of land commissioners, of the said first party, or by the president or register of said board, shall be, and hereby are, authorized to go through any of the shafts, openings, or workings on said premises and to examine, inspect, and survey the same, and to examine and make extracts or copies of all books and weigh sheets that show in any way the coal output of said premises, and that all conveniences necessary for said inspection, survey, or examination shall be furnished said agent or agents by the party of the second part.

Fifth. That all coal mined or taken from said premises, upon being hoisted or trammed, shall be weighed, and the weight thereof shall be entered in due form in books kept for such purpose by the party of the second part, and the weight of all coal shipped by railway or otherwise shall be kept and preserved.

Sixth. That on or before the 15th day of each and every month during the term of this lease, the said second party shall make a report to the register of said board of land commissioners in which shall be entered and set down the exact amount in weight and cubic yards of all coal mined upon said premises during the preceding calendar month, and said report shall be accompanied by the weights of the railway companies over which such coal or any part thereof has been transported, and shall also show the use or disposal by said party of the second part of coal in all other ways.

Seventh. That the said party of the second part shall pay unto the said party of the first part for the right and privilege of mining coal upon said premises as herein provided a royalty of ten (10) cents per ton of coal mined and taken out of said premises, which royalty shall be due and payable on or before the 15th day of each and every month during the term of this lease for the preceding calendar month: Provided always, however, That the minimum amount of monthly royalty shall be one-twelfth of the yearly royalty herein-after provided for, whether any coal is mined or not: And provided further, That the sum of twenty-five ($25.00) dollars paid by said party of the second part to the said party of the first part at the ensailing and delivery of these presents shall be in full for the minimum yearly royalty for the first year, but in the event the total royalty due and payable herein shall at the end of the first year of this lease be found to exceed said sum of twenty-five ($25.00) dollars then and in that case said sum shall be applied as a credit on the amount of royalty so found to be due for said first year: Provided further, That the total minimum yearly royalty due from and payable by said party of the second part in each and every year after the first year during the term of this lease, is hereby fixed at and shall be one (1) hundred dollars, whether any coal is mined or not.

The term ton, as herein used means a ton of two thousand pounds of un-screened coal unless said party of the first part, the State board of land commissioners, or its duly authorized agent or agents, elects to compute a ton of coal at twenty-seven cubic feet of coal in the solid or by the measurements of the space for which the coal is mined, deducting therefrom all space occupied by slate or other impurities, and in such case the said computation shall be final and binding upon said party of the second part.

It is expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that all mining, timbering, and work done by the party of the second part on said premises shall be at all times during the terms of this lease subject to the supervision, approval, and orders of the superintendent of the mineral department of said State board of land commissioners.

And it is expressly understood and covenanted by and between the parties aforesaid, that, if for any reason, said party of the second part shall fail to keep each, all, and every one of the covenants by him covenanted aforesaid, then, and in that event, it shall and may be lawful for the said party of the first part to declare this indenture at an end, and enter into the said premises or any part thereof, either with or without process of law, to reenter and the said party of the second part or any persons occupying in or upon the same to expel, remove, and put out, using such force as may be necessary in so doing, and the said premises again to repossess and enjoy, as in its first and former estate. And in such event, that is to say, in the event of the termination of this lease by reason of the breach of breaches of the covenants aforesaid, or at the expiration of the term aforesaid, said party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to surrender and deliver up said above described premises and property, in good mining condition, peaceably to the said party of the first part, and shall forfeit to the State and make no claim for any moneys, work, improvements, or time laid out or expended in the premises. And upon the termination of this lease for any cause aforesaid, if said second party shall remain in the possession thereof, he shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful detainer of said premises, under the statutes in such case made and provided, and shall be subject to all the conditions and provisions thereof, and to eviction and removal forcibly or otherwise, with or without process of law as above stated.

It is also expressly understood and agreed that this lease shall not be assigned or the property sublet without the consent and approval of the State board of Land Commissioners, and that the privileges hereby granted will not be used for any other purpose than mining coal from said premises and will not be used for the mining, handling, or transportation of coal other than that mined on land under the control of the State board of land commissioners.

The witness whereof the said party of the first part hath caused these presents to be signed by the president and register of said State board of land commissioners, and sealed with the official seal of said board, and the said party of the second part has hereunto set his hand and seal on this, the day and year first hereinabove written.

ADDRESS OF MOTHER JONES AT STARKVILLE, COLO., SEPTEMBER 24, 1913.

Fellow workers, I want to say—I won't say ladies and gentlemen, for ladies and gentlemen are thieves, robbers, and highwaymen. Ten years have passed into history since I was with you before; I think we closed the meeting at 11 o'clock at night. I was out all that day in other parts of the coal fields, and when I came in at 7 o'clock there were parties waiting and they asked me to come out here and speak to them. The hour was late, and I told them I would come to-morrow, but the committee said, "Come, Mother, and talk to us," and I went out. Wherever the workers want me, in the day or night, no matter where it is, I will be there, and so we came out here. When I was coming down along the side of the hill the thought struck me that I would not go back the way we came, but so many of them urged me to go back the way we came as it was a mile or two shorter, and even my comrade with me said, "Mother Jones, you have been out all day and you are tired and we could save time by going back the same way we came." I said, "What difference does an hour or two longer make? It should not make any difference; let us go back the other way." That very night I heard that the coal companies had their bloodhounds lying out there to murder me if I had gone back the way I came. So you see, my friends, in this great struggle of ours the master operators stop at nothing.

Away back in the ages of time, the Romans went back to Carthage, and whenever they captured anyone they made slaves out of them. They either brought them into Rome or held them in slavery. Among those captured was a painter, and when he stood up before them for trial he said they said to him, "Who are you and what are you charged with?" and he said, "I am a workingman; I am a man of the working class; and," he said, "being a man of that class I am interested in everything which affects my class. I am interested in their struggles, in their uplifting, and in the higher civilization." I wish to God we could permeate every man here with that same spirit that permeated that pagan slave 1,800 years ago. I wish we could have that same spirit still throughout the States, and if we could we would abolish all of this brutality, evil, and wrong that exists to-day. If the minds of men became permeated with that sense of justice and honor there would be no use of these strikes. When the day of judgment came and they appeared before God Almighty at heaven's door for admittance, they are then questioned and say, "I starved their children and I thrust their wives into untimely graves," what do you suppose God Almighty would tell them? He would say to them, "Hell is for you." Where does all of this wealth come from; do they produce it? No; they work you. They do not produce any of this wealth, do they? No; you produce the wealth; so if you produce the wealth, why don't you own it. I will tell you why we don't own it; it is because we are a bunch of cowards. You come home to Mary and say, "Well, God Almighty, I am tired." "How much coal did you dig to-day, Jack?" "Well, I dug and I dug and I dug and I dug all day and I sent out car after car, and I then went to the boss and asked him how much coal I dug; I thought I had another car of coal due me, and I looked up to see what was figured up out there, and the boss said, "No; you didn't have another car; no; you didn't," and I said, "Yes; I did," and the boss said, "Oh, you get the hell out of here, and if you don't I will make you." Is this not correct? Is this not true? Do I exaggerate it? Not at all; I don't have to. I have seen and know these poor Polish and Italian wretches at work and I know what I am talking about; and I have had different bosses tell me how they were forced to do it in order to hold their jobs, and they would say to me, "If I did not do it, I would lose my job." He did not have to care for you or your family—you are the one that has to care for Mary, and if you are such a coward that you would not protect her and the family even if you had to lick hell out of some fellow, you ought to suffer the consequences. I would like to see a fellow take any coal out of my car. I have gone into the mines and loaded coal with the miners, but I always made the tippie boss tell me how much we loaded, and it was registered there, every pound of it.

Now, the strike which is on to-day is a strike for a nobler and grander humanity for the Nation and for the honor of the State. All of you know that I have been in these strikes and struggles for years and years, and I have known jailers, I have known the bull pen and I have had to steal my way in the dead of night from the bloodhounds—that is the Baldwin guards—and I have seen some awful pictures in this fair land.

I have never witnessed in any State of this great Union the brutal and horrible pictures as I saw yesterday as I went to Ludlow. Here was a lot of poor wretches on that wagon; their life earnings were piled on that wagon. There was a mother with a babe in her arms; it was cold, and the sleet was coming down; and as I looked at that picture I fairly trembled for the future of the world. I could not help but think how horrible it was that the government of the State would stand for that. You men have stood for it; you men have permitted these conditions to go on and become more brutal day by day and year by year. What did you want to wait for Mr. Hayes to come here for before you struck. The workers of the world have struck always when such conditions have arisen, and we are going to strike, strike, strike, until the last man falls and the banner of freedom floats over this State. I do not promise you great things; I would not do it. The fight is yours. If I had to pay a fellow to make the fight, I would not want that fellow. We want men who are willing to make a sacrifice for human freedom and liberty. The man who is not willing to make that sacrifice is not fit to stand upon the soil of this great Union.

Don't you see that you have not recognized the fact that you are a man? When you realize that you are a man, you will stand upon both feet and fear no man. This earth was made for you, was it not; and it was here a long time before the C. F. & I. came upon it. When the C. F. & I. came upon this earth, they did not get a mortgage on it, did they? No, they did not. The earth was here long before they came, and it will be here when their rotten carcasses burn up in hell.

I looked at those children on that wagon, a child of about 10 years old, and the mother—she had a babe in her arms—and they did not have clothing enough to shelter them from the cold; they had been thrown out like dogs. They had a comfortable home from which they were ejected by the C. F. & I. When the C. F. & I. Co.'s wives go to the seashore they engage a room for their dog, and they have it fed out of a silver plate, while you get up old, broken-up dishes; that is what you eat out of.

There came a year in the history of this Nation when West Virginia said, "We are standing among the great States of the Nation, not as a State with slaves working in the mines, and we will rise to a nobler statehood men and women who stand among the foremost and advanced people of the Nation," and these miners struck. They plead with the governor and with the State officials, in fact, with everyone, and no attention was paid to them; but they attended to it themselves, and they told their operators that they may go out, and then you will concede to us. They made the United States Senate move, and they called the attention of the whole world to their action. These men and women—these women with babes in their arms—took an oath to the eternal God that there would be no more coal dug until there was a better condition prevailing for their children. The operators said, "We will never recognize the union," but "never" is a long time; but they did come to time, and the C. F. & I. will come to time. [Applause.] I will tell you why: The day of muscle and training is over; the day of brutalizing the working class is over; and the day of harmonizing and uplifting the working class is here, and we claim that right; we claim the right for that child to have a good education; we claim the right for that child to have a good home; and we want comfort for its mother; we want its father to know what rest is. That is what we are fighting for, and I want to ask you, Is there anything wrong about that?

I am not worrying about getting a bed in heaven—I am not working for that—it is a bed here that I am working for. You see the chambermaids may be on a strike when I die, and I might not get a bed then.

Did you ever go into the operators' clubs? I have been in them; and, don't you know, they looked more like hogs to me than human beings. They were plotting, devising, and scheming how they could rob their neighbors.

One time, in the city of Chicago, I was doing some work for one of the great families in Chicago, and he was one of the great lawyers of the State of Illinois at that time, and he was employed by a corporation. He was an able lawyer, but he knew nothing of the industrial struggle. I used to stay up at nights and sit at his window and would watch the corporation leaders. I would get on to how they would scheme to catch the workers and entrap them, how they would use the newspapers to influence the public opinion, and it gave me an insight in the scheming of the ruling class. They used to have their distinguished bishop sit with them, too. They said "Gentlemen"—gentlemen are always thieves—"it would be better to do thus and so; the workers were easy."

The workers had no time to spend in studying this great question, for they worked, worked, worked all the time, and when they did get through their work they were too tired for study, and so it is to-day—and we have been trying to make our workday so that you will be able to take some time to study these great questions. How much wealth would there be in this great country if it was not for the workers? How much land would be cultivated if it were not for the workers? Who went into the mine first? The workingman. Who pushed the props out? The workingman, when they could get them, and yet the workingman does not realize his worth in this great cause of industry.

Boys, your wives are going to suffer the penalty. How many of your wives go to the seashore? Did any of you women ever go to the seashore? All those of you women who ever went to the seashore please put up your hands. You bet your life, if I was in an audience of C. F. & I. women and asked them if they ever went to the seashore, every one of them would signify that they had gone to the seashore. You do the work that enable the wives of the operators to pay $1,000 for dresses for them to put on their rotten carcasses. You let them work you; you dress the mine owner's wife and you put your wife in rags. You are the men that ought to let the world know how great you are.

We are not a charity organization; we are against charity; I am greatly opposed to charity. A Federal judge said to me once, "Why don't you go into charity work?" And I said to him, "No, sir; I do not believe in it." We don't need charity; we need what belongs to us, and we are going to get what belongs to us. [Applause.] We are going to have what belongs to us, because the dawn of that nobler day is here. We create wealth, and we have produced the wealth of this great Nation; and if we have done that, why should we have that hungry child, and why should any public official stand for such a condition? Why should any public official stand for the horrible conditions as I have seen here in these fields? Men, buckle on your armor, stand out for the law; stand out for the enforcement of the laws like men; stand out for the honor of the State; stand out for that which is yours and get it, and never dig a pound of coal till you do, and don't let any other fellow do it. We stand for better childhood; we are going to stand for better literature to come into our homes; we are going to stand for better education for our children. We don't want that that tells us what we are going to get when we are dead; we want that which tells us what we will get while we are living.

We had an old fellow in West Virginia, and he used to run the miners, and he went down to the Kentucky foreign mission and would tell them that they could send this over to China—but take Jesus out of the way. Those gods of women would say, "Oh, how charming you are; you are so charming"; and he was the biggest thief that God ever put on the earth. Then he was so charming, you know. These kids, they have never developed yet. They did not know what civilization means. It is the workers of the world that is civilizing the world; it was never the other class; they have disharmonized and demoralized the human race in all history. It is the men and women who struck; it was the men and women who took their lives in their hands; it was the men and women of 40 years ago, that you knew and I knew, that started out with this great movement that has now 450,000 men within its ranks. They would not even be allowed inside of the door—they died by the wayside—but they are the ones that planted the seed that we are reaping to-day, my friends. It was those men and women that I knew in Pennsylvania that started this work. I have traveled myself for 50 miles—we had no money to pay railroad fare. The men were begging to come there, and neither of us had money with which to pay railroad fare. We bought 15-cent sandwiches to eat on the road while we traveled. It rained, and we got wet; but that made no difference; we were warm with the love of humanity's better day. At night we went into the woods and organized those slaves of the mines. We never thought of our stomachs; we thought of our children and all their children's children in those days. You have got to make sacrifices; no battle is ever won without making sacrifices; these women have been making sacrifices all along. If the mine owners want a 10-year strike, we can give it to them. Do you know that? [Applause.] If the C. F. & I. wants a 10-year strike, we can give them a 10-year strike, and we are ready for 10 years more when we get through. [Applause.]

Mark down what I tell you—mark down what I tell you men from this platform. The Government of this Nation, inside of the next 10 years, will take over the mines of this Nation and will run them for the benefit of these people and not for the corporation. I am not mistaken in this.

As the sun rises for you, inside of the next 10 years three-fourths of the mines of this country will be in the hands of the Government. You will work six hours a day. In North Dakota the men work eight hours; the mines are owned by the Government; therefore you buy what you get at cost, for the Government can do that. And if the mines in North Dakota can be run by the Government, why can not it be done with the mines here in Colorado? These thieves have taken up the mineral lands; they have hired Jack, Mike, and Jim to take up these tracts of land for them. Don't you think Uncle Sam can come in and clean hell out of all of them and take the whole tract away from them? Who would have thought that five years ago, four years ago? Who would have thought that even three years ago the United States Senate would get up to where it is to-day and tell the mine owners of West Virginia what they are telling them now. You are getting a new type of men in the United States Senate, men who are beginning to realize what this great industrial question is. I was telling one of the United States Senators in Washington about an incident where one of the boys was thrown out. This little boy threw his hands up over my head, and he said, "They have hurt my mamma, and they kicked her, and when I get to be a man I am going to kill 20 of them." I said, "This is how we make criminals," but thank God that we are giving birth to children that would not stand for such treatment.

This is a fight to the finish. This is not a Sunday school, and I hope every man will stand solid and stand together. They can not dig coal without you, and they can't run railroads without coal. Those fellows at Pueblo, at the smelters, say, "Why are we closing down our mills?" What do we care about their mills? "We don't care about your mills; we have been keeping them open, and you have not paid us for it." And they say, "Why, we want to make money." "Well, we want to make money, too; you have been making it, and now it is our turn. We will open your mills when you get off of your perch." They say, "We will give you a checkweighman." "Why, they would not be any good to us if we did not have a union." And then they say, "We are going to recognize the union because when we do that we will get everything else we want." Do you know that. We said, "You will have to come into the union, and the war won't stop until you come into the union." That is what Washington said. King George said, "Get out, we will rule the land ourselves." Washington said the people who live in this country will rule the country, and they are going to own it. The whole State and Nation was founded on the union. Doctors unionize; medical professions have their unions; the merchants are organized; and if the union is good for all of them it ought to be good for us. We came in because we know we have better conditions when we have a united force. They know when we are united they can't conquer us. Stand up and tell them we are in the union and there to stay. [Applause.]

If you want 500,000 miners brought into the State of Colorado we will bring them in, and we will lick hell out of the operators. [Applause.] We are not going to take any guns; we are going to take picks along, and we will take the mines and own them.

Did Jack ever tell you, "Say, Mary, you go down and scrub the floor for the superintendent's wife, or the boss's wife, and then I will get a good room." [Applause.] I have known women to do that; poor fools. I have known them to go down and scrub floors like a dog, while their own floors were dirty. Jack was such a damn fool that he was not able to get a good room without having his wife scrub the floors for those men. We don't belong to that army; we are here for industrial freedom that was born on the bosom of fair Columbia. Our sons and daughters will be free; the men and women beneath the Stars and Stripes shall rise into glorious manhood and fairer womanhood, and in the days to come there will be no cringing slave, no tyrant master. You will be free; poverty and misery will be unknown; we will turn the jails into playgrounds for the children; we will build homes, and not log kennels and shacks as you have them now; there will be no civilization as long as such conditions as that abound, and now you men and women will have to stand the fight.

WEITZEL EXHIBIT NO. 5.

[The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Fuel department. Circular letter.]

PUEBLO, COLO., March 31, 1913.

All superintendents:

The new mining law just passed by the legislature provides that all mine foremen, assistant mine foremen, and fire bosses shall have certificates issued by an examining board provided for in the law.

These certificates are to be issued:

First, to persons who shall satisfactorily pass an examination, written or oral, as may be prescribed by the board of examiners, and shall satisfy the board that they have been employed in underground positions in the mines of Colorado for two years prior to such examination.

Second, to any person who shall produce satisfactory evidence that they have for a period of one year immediately preceding April 1, 1913, continuously and capably performed the duties of mine foreman, assistant mine foreman, or fire boss in this State.

It is probable that the examining board will begin to sit about the middle of May, and will hold examinations in different parts of the State, and it is highly important that prospective candidates should begin to prepare themselves at once.

Men who have been in the positions of mine foreman, assistant mine foreman, or fire boss for one year continuously prior to April 1 will have to appear before the board with letters to show that they have been in these positions the required length of time, and all other candidates should begin to prepare themselves to stand the examination. Any person who has been in underground service for a period of two years in the State of Colorado is eligible to take the examination.

It is our purpose to send out a list of examination questions to be answered in writing, and we ask that you furnish us immediately with names of those wishing to take the preparatory course. A sufficient number of the lists of questions will be furnished each superintendent so that each applicant may have a list, and directions for mailing the answers will be given when the questions are sent out.

Please forward the list of names of men at your mine at your earliest convenience.

E. H. WEITZEL, Manager.

[The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Fuel department. Circular letter.]

PUEBLO, COLO., April 7, 1913.

All superintendents:

In pursuance of circular letter of March 31, I am inclosing herewith the first list of questions.

It is suggested that a class be formed at each mine and that candidates work together. If any assistance is needed, it will be furnished by your local division engineer's office or the teachers in camp schools.

All superintendents are requested to join the classes and send in answers to questions.

E. H. WEITZEL, Manager.

[The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. Fuel department. Circular letter.]

PUEBLO, COLO., March 7, 1913.

To candidates:

It is the intent and purpose of the management by sending out these preliminary examination papers to give prospective candidates who wish to take the examination for the positions of mine foreman, assistant mine foreman, and fire boss, as prescribed by the new mining law, a general idea of questions that are usually asked by boards of examiners, and, further, to encourage ambitious men to gain the required information to qualify for said positions in the future.

If our men will respond and show a desire for improving their condition and efficiency, it is our intention to give other inducements, which will be made known later.

It should be distinctly understood that these questions will not be the questions asked by the board of examiners, but questions of a similar nature are likely to be asked. If candidates are able to answer these questions by the aid and use of textbooks, they should be able to qualify before a board of examiners.

Candidates will please comply with the following rules:

First. Use light foolscap paper.

Second. Write only on one side of paper.

Third. Leave a space of 1 inch on right-hand side of paper.

Question papers with answers thereto will be collected by the superintendents and mailed to Mr. David Griffiths, Canon City, Colo. Mr. Griffiths will advise each superintendent as to percentage made by each candidate at his plant.

E. H. WEITZEL, Manager.

REFERENCE.

1. What is the name of the mine at which you are employed?
2. Give name and address of the superintendent.
3. What is your name and post-office address?

4. What is your age?
5. What is your nationality?
6. What, if any, foreign language do you speak?
7. Are you a citizen of the United States? If naturalized, can you produce proof of your citizenship?
8. What is your present occupation?
9. How long have you been employed in present occupation at the present mine?
10. How long so employed in this State or elsewhere?
11. How long have you been employed in coal mining in any capacity?
12. Are you in the habit of using intoxicants? If so, to what extent?

PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE.

1. Briefly describe a coal field.
2. What is understood by dip, strike, outcrop, and basin?
3. Define the difference between a fault and dike.
4. Name the different varieties of coal in this State.
5. Name the different kind of openings of coal mines.
6. Briefly describe the conditions which govern the different kind of openings.
7. Describe the two principal methods of working coal seams.
8. What is understood by mine ventilation, and why is it necessary?
9. Describe the different systems of ventilating coal mines.
10. What is meant by splitting the air currents and what advantages are derived by so doing?
11. Name the two most common gases found in coal mines. Explain how detected, where found, and how removed.
12. What do you know about fire damp; state what experience you have had in any mine generating explosive gas.
13. What is meant by a safety lamp and what are the essential features of a good safety lamp for a fire boss?
14. Name and describe the best safety lamp that you know of for general use in coal mines.
15. Name the various instruments used by mine foremen and fire bosses in and around coal mines; briefly explain their use.
16. In a seam of coal that is undermined by hand, what are the principal precautions that you would insist on miners taking?
17. What, in your opinion, are the principal causes of the greatest number of fatalities in our mines?
18. Do you consider it safe to use electric machinery in a dusty mine if explosive gas is sometimes found therein? If not, explain fully.
19. In a dusty mine liable to explosion, what precautions would you adopt to avoid accidents?
20. If you had charge of a mine, the workings of which were approaching an old mine to the rise and fall of water, what precautions would you adopt?
21. If you had an explosion in the mine, destroying the ventilating apparatus, what would you do first and how would you proceed to explore?
22. Describe the duties of a mine foreman as prescribed by the new mining law. (Copy of law furnished by local superintendent.)
23. Describe the duties of a fire boss as prescribed by the new mining law.
24. What is the most important duty of a shot lighter previous to firing shots?
25. State in detail your experience in and around coal mines in this State or elsewhere.

ARITHMETIC AND MENSURATION.

In answering following questions, 62.5 pounds per cubic foot will be used as weight of water, and $7\frac{1}{2}$ gallons will be considered as 1 cubic foot.

1. Name and denote the four common signs used in arithmetic.
2. What do the following abbreviations mean: °, ', ", %, W.G., V, p.?
3. Explain the difference between a common fraction and a decimal. Give an example.
4. Extract the square root of 114,921. Show process.
5. Extract the cube root of 912,673. Show process.
6. If the scale on a map is 200 miles to the inch, what distance does $3\frac{3}{16}$ " represent?
7. What is the rubbing surface in a 6-foot square airway 2,000 feet long?

8. What is the rubbing surface in a rectangular airway 3' x 12', 2,000 feet long?
9. What is the area and perimeter of the airways in questions 7 and 8?
10. In an airway 8' x 8', the velocity of the air current is 480 feet per minute. What quantity is circulating?
11. How many cubic feet of air is passing per minute in an airway 8' x 6' if the velocity is 20 yards in 12 seconds?
12. If the area of a square airway is 42 square feet, what is its perimeter?
13. In a rectangular airway one side of which is 8 feet and its diagonal is 10 feet, what is its area and perimeter? Show process.
14. How many cubic yards in a shaft 16 feet long, 12 feet wide, and 200 yards deep?
15. How many tons (2,000 pounds) of material in a rectangular shaft 12' x 8' x 400' deep, specific gravity of rock being 2.24?
16. How many gallons of water in a circular shaft 10 feet in diameter and 440 feet deep? Give answer in United States and imperial gallons.
17. If a slope pitching 6% is 2,000 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 6 feet high, becomes filled with water until the edge of water is within 1,200 feet of the mouth, how many U. S. gallons are there in it?
18. If a pump is capable of pumping 100 gallons per minute and working 10 hours per day, in how many days will it pump the water out in question 17, assuming there is a constant inflow of 20 gallons per minute?
19. How many pounds of coal in a cubic yard if the specific gravity is 1.27?
20. How many tons of coal in an acre if the thickness of seam is 5 feet and specific gravity is 1.24?
21. How many tons of coal in a triangular piece of coal whose sides are 40 feet, 60 feet, and 180 feet, respectively, thickness of seam 4'8'', specific gravity 1.3?
22. How many tons of slack in a cylindrical steel bin, 20 feet in diameter and 40 feet deep, assuming 1 cubic foot to weigh 50 pounds.
23. In brushing an entry 8 feet wide, 2'4'' high, and 200 yards long, how many cubic yards would be removed?
24. If an entry 10 feet wide, 6 feet high, is driven for 1,000 feet, how many tons of coal was removed if the specific gravity is 1.25?
25. If a cubic yard of coal weighs 2,100 pounds, what is its specific gravity?
26. What is the area and circumference of a circle, the diameter being 10 feet?
27. What is the length of the side of a square having the same area as circle in question No. 26?
28. How many long tons of 45-pound steel rails would you order to relay a slope 3,400 feet long?
29. How many ties would you need to relay the above slope if the ties are placed 20-inch centers?
30. How many sacks of cement would be required for an engine foundation 24' x 18' x 5' deep, assuming you use 6 sacks to the cubic yard?
31. If a trip of 20 cars averaging 3,200 pounds of coal is hoisted in 16 minutes, what is the tonnage in a day of 8 hours?
32. If a car of coal weighing 3,000 pounds is hoisted through a shaft every 50 seconds, what is the capacity per hour?
33. In a shaft 200 yards deep, a car of coal is hoisted every minute, allowing 15 seconds for dumping or caging of cars, find the average velocity of cage per second?
34. If the capacity of a shaft is 1,200 tons per day of 8 hours, what is the average weight of coal in pit cars if a car is hoisted every 40 seconds?
35. If a shaft is 220 yards deep, how many coils of rope would there be on a drum 10 feet in diameter?
36. If there are 22 coils of rope on a drum 12 feet in diameter, how deep is the shaft, allowing 4 coils to be stationary?
37. If a vein of coal is 4'2'' thick and has two streaks of impurities 6'' and 8'', respectively, what per cent of worthless material does it contain?
38. If the production of a shaft is 800 tons per day of mine run, and after screening you have 120 tons of nut coal, 275 tons of pea and slack, and 5 tons of rock, what is the percentage of lump, nut, pea, and slack, and rock?
39. What is the area of an engine cylinder that is 18 inches in diameter?
40. What is the weight of a steel shaft 10 feet long and 8 inches in diameter, specific gravity of steel being 7.85?

[Second list sent out.]

PRACTICAL QUESTIONS ON COAL MINING.

1. What is atmospheric air composed of? Name its component parts and state their proportion by weight and volume.
2. What is the weight of a cubic foot of air when the barometer registers 28 inches and the thermometer reading is 80° F.?
3. What is the weight of a cubic foot of CH₄ and CO₂ under the same conditions as mentioned in question 2?
4. What is meant by the specific gravity of a solid and a gas? Give the specific gravity of some solid and some well-known gas found in coal mines.
5. What is understood by the chemical symbol of a gas? Give the symbol of the two most common gases found in coal mines.
6. What is understood by the transpiration of a gas, and what is the difference between transpiration and diffusion?
7. What is fire damp? State the proportion and percentage of CH₄ in the mixture within the explosive limits, also proportion and percentage at its maximum explosive force.
8. What is after damp? State what gaseous mixtures it generally consists of and its effect on life and combustion.
9. Name, give symbol, specific gravity, etc., of three compound gases found in coal mines.
10. What is meant by coefficient of friction used in problems relating to ventilation of coal mines? Use Atkinson figures.
11. Give Atkinson's well-known algebraic formula for solving ventilating problems.
12. In order to show that you understand the formula, substitute figures for the mine you are working at and find the ventilating pressure.
13. What is a water gauge? If the water-gauge reading is 2.5 feet, what is the ventilating pressure in pounds per square foot.
14. If the quantity of air produced in a mine is 50,000 cubic feet per minute and the water-gauge reading is 2.5, what is the horsepower producing the ventilation?
15. If the velocity of an air current is 200 feet per minute and the water-gauge reading is .8, what would be the water-gauge reading if the velocity is doubled?
16. If 40,000 cubic feet of air is circulating through a mine with 4 horsepower, what horsepower would be required to circulate 80,000 cubic feet?
17. What is a barometer? How is it affected by altitude?
18. What is a siphon, and to what elevation will it pass water when barometer reading is 24 inches?
19. If a slope is pitching 45 degrees and is 2,500 feet long, what is the pressure per square inch on the pump column 40 feet from the face?
20. What is the pressure per square inch on the pump plungers in a shaft 240 yards deep?
21. Who was the discoverer of the principal factor of the safety lamp? What size wires are used in making the gauze, and how many apertures to the square inch?
22. Why is it that the flame of a safety lamp inclosed in a wire gauze will not ignite the surrounding explosive mixture?
23. What is the difference between 10 per cent and 10 degree pitch? Explain by a diagram.
24. The diameter of the piston of an engine is 10 inches and length of stroke is 18 inches. The engine makes 200 revolutions per minute with a mean effective pressure of 50 pounds per square inch. What is the horsepower of the engine?
25. If a fan is 20 feet in diameter and makes 100 revolutions per minute, what is the peripheral speed at the tip of the blade?

TRINIDAD, COLO., October 13, 1913.

To whom it may concern:

I, Leo J. Kahn, hereby certify that I was present at a meeting of the United Mine Workers' or organizers held in the Packer Building, at Trinidad, Colo., on or about July 25, 1913, and heard an address made by a man introduced to me as Mr. Wallace, editor of the United Mine Workers' Journal. During Mr. Wallace's address that evening he told the organizers to tell the men to arm themselves with the best rifles money would buy, get up on the hills and not be a damned bit particular who they picked off. The following morning in conversation with Wallace he told me that the methods advised by him the night before was the only way to do it.

WEITZEL EXHIBIT NO. 8.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON Co.,
Pueblo, Colo., December 19, 1914.

Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,
Secretary Commission on Industrial Relations,
Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with request of Mr. Basil M. Manly, dated December 12, I am returning herewith transcript of my testimony before the Industrial Relations Committee in Denver, December 8 and 9.

I have made pencil corrections at different places where the transcript was in error.

On page 1662 I testified as follows:

"In the speech of Mother Jones, quoted by Mr. Weinstock yesterday, as an illustration dealing with class hatred, it says:

"'Fellow workers—I won't say ladies and gentlemen, for ladies and gentlemen are thieves, robbers, and highwaymen.'"

At the time I testified to this I was under the impression that the speech in the hands of the committee and which had been quoted from by Mr. Weinstock was the speech delivered at Starkville. I have since learned that it was a speech delivered at Segundo or some other point, and the speech I referred to in my testimony was one delivered by Mother Jones at Starkville, a copy of which I am inclosing herewith.

There were statements made by witnesses who followed me on the stand which I would have been glad to have corrected, but did not have the opportunity on account of lack of time. I will now take advantage of the offer made in Mr. Manly's letter to make some further statements.

The first is with reference to a statement made by John McLennan that the county officials in Huerfano and Las Animas Counties were under the employ of the coal companies. So far as our company is concerned, I will say that there never has been a single dollar paid to any county official for services rendered our company, and no county official while serving in such capacity was ever on our pay roll in any sense.

The Rev. McDonald made the statement that camp houses were never repaired, and in many cases were pig sties. I doubt whether the Rev. McDonald was ever in any of our camps, and in contradiction of his statement I wish to say that we have been spending an average of more than $30,000 a year on painting and repairing camp houses. We have kept a gang of painters busy continuously for the last several years, moving from one camp to another, repainting camp houses both inside and out, and have always kept our houses in the best of repair.

A witness from Morley handed in statements of his earnings, and Chairman Walsh noticed deduction of 50 cents for bath, and in reply to a question asked by the chairman this witness stated that he was charged 50 cents per month for the privilege of the bathhouse. He was in error in making this statement without qualifications. The bathhouse is entirely free to all employees. There are a limited number of lockers in the bathhouse provided for those who care to rent them, which enables an employee to place his clothes in the locker and to change clothes before he goes home. The only charge made is for those who have the private lockers. All others use the bathhouse free of charge.

The statement was made by Judge Lindsey, quoting from report of one of the State labor commissioners, that the C. F. & I. Co. employed child labor in and about the mines and coke ovens. This is absolutely false. Our rules with regard to employment of boys under 16 years of age are most rigid, and circular letter issued by me was put in evidence among those with reference to the observance of the law. I recall a report from one of our superintendents at the coke plant that on the occasion of a visit of one of the factory inspectors he found a small boy at the coke ovens wheeling a wheelbarrow of coke. Investigation developed that the boy had taken lunch to his father, and while his father was eating the lunch he was attempting in a childish way to wheel a barrow of coke. This was seized on by the labor commissioner as an opportunity to charge us with child labor. We are always glad to show our pay rolls to anyone who cares to investigate, and will defy anyone to find boys employed at either the mines or ovens under the legal age.

Yours, truly,

E. H. WEITZEL.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS,
Chicago, Ill.

(Attention of Mr. M. J. Dower.)

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of December 10, asking for certain information.

The printed form of record used when a man is employed is inclosed herewith.

All orders issued to employees with reference to mining laws of Colorado were placed in evidence while I was on the stand.

The data showing three mines at which 90 per cent signed a statement as to their satisfaction I think were turned in by Mr. Welborn as Morley, Tercio, and Primero. This was a statement signed by employees to the effect that they did not want to see a strike. At these particular mines the desertions were as follows:

Morley employed 337 men in September, 1913, and 14 went on strike.

Tercio employed 253 men, and 79 went on strike.

Primero employed 372 men, and 50 went on strike.

We, however, had two mines at which no men went on strike until they were forced out by intimidation about 30 days after strike was called. They are in isolated districts where the United Mine Workers had not apparently had time to pay any attention to until after the strike was well under way in other parts of the State. The mines I refer to are Crested Butte and Floresta, in Gunnison County. Floresta employed 169 men and Crested Butte 190.

The picture of the first-aid team requested in your letter was handed to you in Denver.

Yours, truly

E. H. WEITZEL.

THE COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO.,
Pueblo, Colo., December 21, 1914.

Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,
Secretary Commission on Industrial Relations,
Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Supplementary to my letter of the 19th instant, beg to submit the following:

W. F. Lenthal testified that when he was employed at one of the C. F. & I. mines in Huerfano County, either Walsen or Cameron, that he was furnished mine water for domestic purposes and was charged either 50 cents or a dollar per month. After he left the stand I spoke to him and asked him about it, and he said that if he had made that statement that he was mistaken, that he referred to the Mutual mine, operated by the Mutual Coal Co., and that he had never been charged for water at a C. F. & I. Co. mine. I was unable to see his testimony, but I feel sure that the commission, as well as others, got the impression that he was testifying as to either Cameron or Walsen when he made this statement.

Senator Helen Ring Robinson, I am told, made the statement on the stand that I had admitted to her that we paid the militia. I did not admit it to her, but made the statement to her that we had paid some of the militia. Some of our former employees and some men who had been in our employ for 8 or 10 years joined the militia and, in common with other employers of the State, did not discontinue their salaries, but there was not to exceed six or eight of these men, or I would have information if there had been more. After the militia had been in the field for a considerable length of time, and the State was unable to pay them, there were many enlisted men who came to me with stories of destitution, saying that their families were without funds and destitute. To a number of these I loaned small sums, and in some cases think were paid back and in others not. Some of these were personal loans, and I do not recall a case where I used company funds for this purpose.

As an example of the inability of the leaders of the U. M. W. to control their members I wish to cite the present strike at Pittsburg, Kans., where the whole district has been out for four or five weeks on account of discharge of three employees by the Cherokee & Pittsburg Coal Mining Co. Notwithstanding the fact that the leaders from the district have been in the field, they have been unable to put the men back to work.

Yours, truly,

E. H. WEITZEL.

VERDICT OF JURY.

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Huerfano, ss:

An inquisition holden at Gordon mine, in Huerfano County, State of Colorado, on the 28th day of November, 1914, before W. S. Chapman, coroner of said county, upon the body of Edward Lewis, there lying dead, by the jurors whose names are hereto subscribed, said jurors upon their oaths do say: That Edward Lewis came to his death in Gordon mine, Huerfano County, Colo., about 9.40 p. m., November 26, 1914, by being accidentally electrocuted from an electric current passing through his body from one hand to the other. We, the jury, find that Edward Lewis came to his death through an accident of his carelessness by coming in contact with the current while making connection with machine wire to main wire.

In testimony whereof the said jurors have hereunto set their hands the day and year aforesaid.

JOHN R. FOLEY,
LEON POLL,
TONY BELIK,
JOHN BONIFER,
ELISIE HOWER,
EUGENE SCHOLES,
Jurors.

Attest:

W. S. CHAPMAN,
Coroner of Huerfano County.

VERDICT OF JURY.

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Huerfano, ss:

An inquisition holden at Oakview, in Huerfano County, State of Colorado, on the 2d day of November, 1914, before Arthur A. Foote, justice of the peace, acting coroner of said county, upon the body of Rudolph Nilas, there lying dead, by the jurors whose names are hereto subscribed; said jurors upon their oaths do say: That said Rudolph Nilas came to his death in the so-called old mine of the Oakdale Coal Co., second north entry, while performing his duty as coal digger, caused by fall of rock, due to removal of prop or timber by said Rudolph Nilas; said cave of rock occurred on the 31st day of October, about 1.30 p. m. We further believe that said fall of rock was natural to pillar work.

In testimony whereof the said jurors have hereunto set their hands the day and year aforesaid.

W. L. COURTWRIGHT,
CHAS. E. ADAMS,
ABNER T. BAKER,
T. H. WEANER,
WM. MOORE,
DAN F. HOGAN,
Jurors.

Attest:

ARTHUR A. FOOTE,
Justice of the Peace and Acting Coroner of Huerfano County.

STATE OF COLORADO, County of Huerfano, ss:

I, T. M. Hudson, clerk of the district court of Huerfano County, State aforesaid, do hereby certify the above and foregoing to be a true, complete, and perfect transcript and copies of coroner-jury verdicts in all cases of accidental, violent, or unnatural deaths of coal miners in and around the coal mines of Huerfano County, State of Colorado, since the 1st day of January, 1905, until the 30th day of November, 1914, as the same now remains on file and of record in this office.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said court at the courthouse in Walsenburg County and State aforesaid this 2d day of December, 1914.

[SEAL.]

VAN CISE EXHIBIT NO. 1.

[Report of military commission referred to by Capt. Van Cise at the close of his testimony.]

DENVER, COLO., May 2, 1914.

To Gen. JOHN CHASE, Brigadier General,
Commanding the Military District of Colorado:

April 25, 1914, you appointed the undersigned, Edward J. Boughton, major and judge advocate of the military district; W. C. Danks, captain, First Infantry; and Philip S. Van Cise, captain, First Infantry, a board of officers to inquire into the causes of the battle of Ludlow, Monday, April 20, 1914; to ascertain what happened during or as a result of that battle, with special reference to the death of women and children, the killing of Martin, Tikas, Fyler, and others; the burning of the tent colony and the claim that the tents were looted; to fix the responsibility for the battle and its results, and to report fully and impartially our findings and recommendations to the commanding general.

We have examined under oath all officers and prisoners, as many as possible of the soldiers, deputies, mine guards, and townspeople of Ludlow and near-by coal camps. We have made every possible effort to obtain the testimony of such strikers and tent colonists as were not within our reach, but without success. The strike leader, William Diamond, at Trinidad, after promising to produce before us at our request those among his people who claim to have witnessed any of the incidents of the day, omitted to do so.

A personal request made upon Mr. Lawson and Mr. McLennan, strike leaders, in Denver, was answered in their presence by Hawkins, their attorney. In this way they declined to give us any information, upon the ground that our inquiry was not publicly conducted.

As a result of our investigation we submit the following findings, report, and recommendations:

1. We find that the remote cause of this, as of all other battles, lies with the coal operators, who established in an American industrial community a numerous class of ignorant, lawless, and savage south-European peasants. The present underlying cause was the presence near Ludlow, in daily contact one with another, of three discordant elements—strikers, soldiers, and mine guards—all armed and fostering an increasing deadly hatred which sooner or later was bound to find some such expression. The immediate cause of the battle was an attack upon the soldiers by the Greek inhabitants of the tent colony, who misinterpreted a movement of troops on a neighboring hill.

2. These Greeks and the more violent element of the strikers had prepared for such an event by bringing back into the colony the arms secreted to escape the searches of the guardsmen. This was done in the latter part of March. They also secured a large amount of ammunition, and awaited a favorable moment for an engagement in which they hoped to catch the soldiers unprepared, and thus wipe out the defense of Hastings and Berwind Canyon. Their plans miscarried and the battle precipitated suddenly on Monday morning was unexpected by all.

3. A military detail went to the colony to demand of Louis Tikas, the colony leader, the release of a man said to be detained by the strikers. The man was not delivered. Hot words passed between the soldiers and strikers. When the detail left, the Greeks, over the protest of their leader, ran for their guns and threatened to fight.

Maj. Hamrock brought the detachment from Cedar Hill down to Water Tank Hill, in plain view of the colony, preparatory to searching the colony for its alleged prisoner. Some excitable women, seeing these troops on the hill and nervous over the actions of the Greeks, rushed into the colony, screaming that the soldiers were about to attack.

Thereupon the Greeks filed out of the colony to a railroad cut, and soon afterwards fired the first shots of the battle against the soldiers.

This is obvious from the fact that no bodies were found between the colony and the cut. As the Greeks were in open country, the machine gun, if fired, would have mowed them down.

4. The Greeks, always warlike and obstreperous, had no women or children in the colony. They at least had not provided themselves with arms and ammunition for the defense of their homes and families. They had their guns in hand with the intention of starting trouble when the soldiers appeared on the hill.

5. The women and children of other nationalities rushed to the protection of an arroyo in the rear of the colony. Some took shelter in pits prepared for such use under the tents. The presence of these pits and the women and children in them was unknown to the soldiers. Many men in the colony seized their guns and took up a position in this arroyo and on the railroad bridge that crossed it.

6. Pvt. Albert Martin, while dying or after death, was horribly mutilated by the strikers. We find this practice to be customary with these people in battle.

7. The fire in the tent colony was accidental; that is to say, it was due either to an overturned stove, an explosion of some sort, or the concentrated fire directed at one time against some of the tents.

The fire began in the corner nearest the crossroads. Afterwards it was deliberately spread by the combatants. During the fire the soldiers, upon learning that women and children were still in the colony, went through the tents, calling upon all persons in the colony to come forth, and with difficulty rescuing men, women, and children to the number of some 25 or 30, including one William Snyder and his family. Then the tents were fired.

8. The troops engaged in the beginning were the regularly enlisted and uniformed members of Company B, Second Infantry, armed with Springfield United States Army rifles, shooting on the cupro-nickel bullet as manufactured for the Army. They had one machine gun. Later in the day they were reinforced by a second machine gun. There were also the ununiformed members of Troop A, mine guards and deputy sheriffs; all of them were using a miscellaneous assortment of arms and ammunition.

9. During the evening Louis Tikas, James Fyler, and an unknown striker were taken prisoners. Lieut. K. E. Linderfelt swung his Springfield rifle, breaking the stock over the head of the prisoner Tikas.

A group of between 50 and 75, composed of soldiers, the ununiformed men of Troop A, mine guards, and deputy sheriffs, were present with these prisoners. An attempt to hang Tikas went so far that a rope was procured and thrown over a telegraph pole. This lynching was prevented by Lieut. Linderfelt, who turned Tikas over to a noncommissioned officer, whom he directed to be responsible for his life, and then departed.

Shortly afterwards all three prisoners were killed by gunshot wounds. The crowd and prisoners were about 50 yards from the corner of the tent colony, and these men were shot while running toward the tent. The evidence is conflicting whether they were made to run or tried to escape. Tikas, after running a few feet, fell, shot three times in the back. The only bullet found in his body was of a kind not used by the soldiers, although the two other wounds might have been made by the Springfield bullets of the ununiformed men. Fyler fell after running some distance beyond, having reached the colony. The evidence is also conflicting whether at the time these men were killed shots were being interchanged between the soldiers and their allies with the tent colony, but Fyler was shot in the front while running toward the tents.

10. Eleven children and two women were smothered to death in a small pit under one of the tents. None of them was hit by a bullet. This pit was not large enough to support the life of such a number for many hours. The construction of the pit made it a veritable death trap, and its inmates probably died from suffocation before the tents were burned. When found there were no signs that the women and children had crowded into the entrance of the pit, as would have been the case had they attempted to rush out when the tent above caught fire.

11. We find that the colony was looted by participants and spectators in the battle. About 15,000 rounds of ammunition were taken from the tent marked "Headquarters of John Lawson."

12. All women and children have been accounted for. Every possible pit or cellar has been examined, and no bodies remained in the colony.

13. Only one person was killed or wounded in the colony itself by gunshot. Frank Snyder, a 12-year-old boy, was shot in the head. His father stated that evening that this boy had gone outside the tent and was shot in the forehead while facing the arroyo from which the strikers' fire came.

14. The colony was not swept with the machine guns. This is proved by the fact that the chicken houses, outhouses, tent frames, and posts still standing in the colony exhibit no bullet holes. While the buildings and fences along the railroad track are riddled with bullet holes made by machine guns trained on the steel bridge and pump house.

15. The soldiers were lawfully and dutifully bearing arms. It was lawful for them to possess the machine gun and to bring it up the hill. The strikers, on the other hand, were acting unlawfully in securing and using their arms and ammunition. No attack upon the colony had ever been made or intended by the soldiers, and the explanation that arms and ammunition were kept in the colony for defense is untenable.

16. We find that in apparent anticipation of a preparation for the battle at Ludlow, rifle pits were prepared by the strikers on the south side of their colony along the county road and close to the tents and along the west side of the colony.

These rifle pits show conclusively the careful and deliberate preparation of the strikers for battle, and their location along the front and side of the colony nearest to the military camp was such that when used they could not be defended against without firing into the colony. Such care had the strikers themselves for their women and children that these pits were located where any return of the fire from them would be drawn directly into the colony itself.

We make the following recommendations:

A. Feeling that this board of officers was not constituted to determine possible guilt or innocence, we recommend that a general court-martial be appointed to try all officers and enlisted men participating in the treatment and killing of prisoners and the burning and looting of the tent colony.

B. We recommend that the general and governor urge upon the legislature the establishment of a permanent State constabulary for police duty in disturbed regions of the State, whereby the young men of our volunteer National Guard may be relieved from engaging in riot duty with a people numbering among them ferocious foreigners whose savagery in fight we found exemplified in the killing of Maj. Lester while under red cross protection, and the maiming and mutilation of Privates Martin, Hockersmith, and Chavez.

C. We strongly recommend the general and governor to urge the State and Federal Governments to proceed at once to the apprehension and punishment of all persons engaged as instigators or participants in the treasons, murders, arsons, and other acts of outlawry in this State since the battle of Ludlow.

To a proper understanding of the late deplorable happenings around Ludlow, some preliminary considerations are necessary. It is impossible to estimate those events justly without some general knowledge of the country, the inhabitants of the tent colony and personnel of their neighbors in the military camp and adjacent villages.

A crude conception of general directions in the Ludlow vicinity may be had by imagining a gigantic capital K. The vertical line of such letter would represent the Colorado & Southern Railroad running north and south. At the upper or southern end of this line is what has been called, for want of other name, Water Tank Hill, a low, gently sloping mesa commanding the territory to the south, east, and north. At the lower or northern end of the line is a steel railroad bridge crossing a deep arroyo which runs through the whole country in a general east and west direction.

The arms of the K, except that, to be accurate, the lower one should be horizontal, represent roads which at the extremities of the arms enter the two canyons of Delagua and Berwind. Up these canyons lie the largest and richest coal mines of the State, and about the mines are clustered the workmen's villages of Delagua, Hastings, Berwind, Tabasco, Tollerburg, and others. It will thus be seen that the point at which the two arms converge and meet the shaft of the letter, that is to say, the point where these two roads unite and cross the railroad, called in that locality the crossroads, is a point that commands the approach to both the canyons, as well as the travel north and south along the railroad.

It was at this commanding point, the crossroads, that the Ludlow tent colony was located. In an angle formed by the arms of the letter, about one-third of a mile from the colony, was the military camp. Since early in November the brown tent of the soldiers and the white tents of the colonists stood thus, facing each other across the railroad. For the protection of the two canyons, military substations were established, one at Hastings in the northern canyon, and one at Cedar Hill in the southern.

The Ludlow tent colony, by far the largest of all such colonies, housed a heterogeneous population of striking miners. The colony numbered hundreds of people, of whom only a few families were Americans. The rest for the most part were Greeks, Montenegrins, Bulgars, Servians, Italians, Mexicans, Tyroleans, Croatians, Austrians, Savoyards, and other aliens from the southern countries of Europe. These people had little in common either with the few Americans resident among them or with one another. Each nationality had its own leader, customs, and mode of life.

We are credibly informed that within the colony 22 different tongues were spoken, unintelligible one to another. The percentage of American citizens, even naturalized citizens, was small. It will readily be seen that these people did not possess much means of interchanging information or social ideas. This fact is important as explaining conduct upon their part that otherwise might seem unaccountably strange.

The most forceful portion of the colonist were the Greeks. We do not know that they outnumbered the other nationalities in the colony, but we are positive they dominated it.

The will of the Greeks was the law of the colony. They were the most aggressive element, the fighting men; and they imposed their desires upon the rest. These Greeks segregated themselves in a quarter set apart for them. They were secretive. Such was their position and authority that although many nations had leaders of their own, the Greek leader was the master of the tented city.

By the other colonists the Greeks were regarded as heroes, for many of them, we are told, had seen service in the Balkan wars. The strange thing, and one that we found important, is that there were no Greek women or children in the colony.

Living in the immediate vicinity of the colonist population just described, were three distinct groups of men controlled by distinct feelings toward the strikers. In the first group were the nonunion workmen in the mines of the adjacent canyons. These men were dwelling with their families in the villages about the mines where they were employed. Most of them were recent arrivals, coming in as strike breakers to take the strikers' places in the mines.

STRIKE BREAKERS INDUSTRIOUS.

This class is not to be confused, as it has been, with the mine guards. The nonunion workmen were, as a class, men of industry and peace, of practically the same composition as the inhabitants of the tent colony. Their attitude toward the strikers was one of indifference, coupled with a fear of molestation. But they held no animosity; they felt themselves the permanent inhabitants of the villages.

A troop of national guards were enlisted, about the middle of April, among the superintendent and foremen, the clerical force, physicians, storekeepers, mine guards, and other residents of the coal camps. This unit of the National Guard was designated Troop A, but so recently was it recruited that at the time of the Battle of Ludlow, it had not yet selected its officers nor was it supplied with uniforms, arms, or ammunition. (When this company was called to reinforce the uniformed guardsmen at Ludlow, its members appearing in civilian clothes, gave rise, perhaps excusably, to the belief of the strikers that they were armed mine guards—a class much hated by the colonists.)

These mine guards formed another distinct class. They are men whose employment is to guard the properties; they are not permanent residents of the mine communities like the nonunion workmen, but have come with the strike and will depart with it.

The mine guards are usually employed through a detective agency, and the armed guards it furnishes antedates the present trouble and is born of a long series of conflicts in other fields and in other States. During the weeks before the coming of the soldiers last fall, these armed mine guards and the strikers fought many a battle, from all of which it has come to pass that the deadliest hatred exists between the strikers of the tent colonies and the mine guards of the coal camp.

MILITIAMEN HAVE BEEN FRIENDLY.

The third class of men in this vicinity consists of the uniformed and armed National Guardsmen, who have been on duty during the campaign. With an exception to be noted presently, this class has no feeling either of hatred or of fear toward the colonists, whose nearest neighbors they were. Throughout the campaign a friendly relationship was maintained between the two groups of tents. Ball games were played between them and athletics were indulged in in common.

We find the attitude of most of the soldiers toward the colonists to have been throughout the campaign one of friendly indifference. We find, however, from the examination of the colonists themselves that this neutral friendliness of the soldiers was not returned, but that a large portion of the strikers harbored a suppressed hostility toward the militia, the intenser for its being suppressed.

The exception referred to is the company of mounted infantry occupying the substation at Cedar Hill in Berwind Canyon. Designated as Company B, it was commanded for the greater part of the campaign by Lieut. E. K. Linderfelt. This officer is an experienced soldier and an inexperienced sociologist. He is the veteran of five wars; but wholly tactless in his treatment of both mine guards and strikers. From the beginning of the campaign, this militia organization and the strikers in the colony were in frequent petty conflicts with one another. They grew to dislike each other and to worry, harass, and annoy one another. Both sides fed the flame of increasing enmity. They provoked each other on every possible occasion. The strikers spread the wires across the roads in the dark to trap the soldiers' horses and thus to maim both man and beast. The soldiers indulged reprisals.

In this way dislike grew into hatred and provocation into threats. From threats by each against the others' lives, the strikers have come to fear and hate this Company B, and Company B has come to partake of the fear of the workmen and the hatred of the mine guards toward the colonists.

Upon the withdrawal of the troops from the field, it was felt necessary to leave one unit at Ludlow between the largest colony of strikers on one side and the richest mines and most populous camps on the other. Company B was selected for that service because, albeit hated by the strikers, it was feared and respected by them. Lieut. Linderfelt, whose life was in peril from the deadly hatred of this large foreign population, was relieved of the command, and sent away upon recruiting service.

Thus it will be seen that the participants in the dreadful battle of April 20, were distributed around a triangle, the strikers in the colony at the cross-roads, the workmen of Troop A and the mine guards at Hastings, in Delagua Canyon, and Company B at Cedar Hill, in the Berwind Canyon.

It should here be explained that after the coming of the soldiers last October, and until their departure a few days before the Battle of Ludlow, there was practically no mine guards in this vicinity, but upon withdrawing the protection of the National Guard from the mines and communities of the strike zone, the mine guards returned to the employment of the mine owners.

We believe that such as incident as the Battle of Ludlow was inevitable under the conditions that we found. Our belief is based upon an analysis of the forces of human passion we discovered to have been at work. These forces we find to have been as follows:

The tent colony population is almost wholly foreign and without conception of our government. A large percentage are unassimilable aliens, to whom liberty means license, and among whom has lately been spread by those to whom they must look for guidance, a dangerous doctrine of property.

Rabid agitators had assured these people that when the soldiers left they were at liberty to take for their own, and by force of arms, the coal mines of their former employers. They have been sitting in their tents for weeks awaiting the departure of the soldiers and the day when they could seize what they have been told is theirs. When the troops were withdrawn elsewhere, and this one unit left at Ludlow, many of the strikers believed that the men whom they saw in uniform were no longer members of the National Guard, but hired gunmen or mine guards who retained their uniform for want of other clothing. They saw the hated mine guards return. They were told by their leaders, as they have been always, that the mine guards intended to attack their colony. The greed, fears, and most brutal hatred of the violent elements were thus aroused, and they began to prepare for battle. They laid in a store of arms, two or three at a time; they bought quantities of ammunition; they built military earthworks in concealed places; they dug pits beneath their tents in which they designed to put their women and children as a place of safety. They got all things ready. The Greeks in particular, who had deeply resented the searching of the colony and the taking of their arms by the soldiers, swore that their arms should never be taken from them again.

In this movement, as in all others, the Greeks were the leaders. Not all of the colonists by any means were taken in on the general plan. Those who were found timorous or unwilling were told nothing of what was going on. We found that there were many in the colony who now bear a deep resentment against the Greeks, who had no wives or children to protect, for precipitating the battle without giving their fellows opportunity to prepare for it.

While those warlike preparations were going forward, though they were concealed from some in the colony, yet they were shared by others who knew better and who in the last analysis must take their share of the responsibility for the awful results that ensued. We learn that there was found in the tent of John R. Lawson large stores of ammunition in thousand-round boxes awaiting distribution. By all these means the fighting part of the colony had worked themselves into a frenzy. The colony was electrified; a spark only was needed to set off an explosion. The spark fell unwittingly on Monday, the 20th of April.

As is usual with such inevitable conflicts, the battle was unexpectedly precipitated and by a trifling incident. Two facts in this connection stand out very clearly. One is that the conflict was contemplated, prepared against, deliberately planned and intended by some of the strikers, and was feared and expected by the soldiers and inhabitants of the mining villages. The other fact, equally clear, is that neither side expected it to fall at the time nor in the manner that it did.

That the colonists were, and intended to be, the aggressors there can be no doubt in the world. It was evidently with some difficulty that the Greek portion of the colony had been restrained from giving battle now that the main body of State troops was withdrawn.

We find from examination of the colonists themselves that talk of such an attack upon the soldiers, to be followed by a seizure of the mines, expulsion of the nonunion workmen, and vengeance upon the mine guards had been rife in the colony for many days. According to the Greek Church, Easter fell on Sunday, the 19th, and we have it from Greeks and others in the colony that the Greeks, at least, had planned such an attack as part of the festivities of that day.

In the celebration on Sunday, however, the Greeks got pretty drunk, and the matter was postponed until Tuesday. We find that these plans of the Greeks were not known generally throughout the colony, and many there were who were wholly ignorant that the colony gossip of an attack had taken any such definite form. There were two Greeks in the colony who had a brother at work in the near-by Ramey mine near the entrance of Berwind Canyon.

On Sunday, after the plan to deliver the attack on Tuesday had been perfected, these Greeks visited their nonunion brother, told him of the plan, and begged him to leave before Tuesday's work of destruction commenced.

This workman communicated the information thus received to his employers at the mine on Sunday evening, who had intended to warn Maj. Hamrock on Tuesday morning. Before that information was discussed the battle was precipitated on Monday.

It is very certain that the soldiers were not expecting any attack or molestation at the time on the day of the battle. It is true that such an attack was always feared by soldiers and civilians alike. All believed that sooner or later it would come. For weeks before the withdrawal of the troops it had been a settled belief that some day, when the military force should be weakened, the strikers would undertake to wipe out the soldiers and civilian workmen alike. But on the morning of the Ludlow conflict the idea of battle was furthest from the minds of the few remaining troopers.

Had such an attack been planned by the military, the soldiers would have occupied the commanding positions and delivered it at dawn instead of allowing those places to be occupied by the strikers with such force that it took all day to drive the colonists from them. Instead of any such warlike preparations, we find that on Monday morning at the very time the battle began Maj. Hamrock, in command, had with him in the tents facing the colony but three men, one of whom was a cripple.

The entire force of soldiers in the vicinity numbered 34, of whom 12 occupied the tents in view of the colony and 22 were stationed at Cedar Hill, in the mouth of Berwind Canyon. The rest of Maj. Hamrock's dozen were watering their horses or attending to their routine camp duty at some distance from the tents when the fire commenced.

At the station at Cedar Hill there were present the wives of three of the officers, the wives and children of several of the enlisted men, with civilian visitors and their wives, all of whom had spent Sunday with their relatives. One of the women was shortly to give birth to a baby. With all of these women and children at the entrance to the canyon, and with the certainty that the defeat of the soldiers meant the invasion of their camps and the villages beyond, it is folly to believe that at such a moment the battle was deliberately brought about by the troops.

The other unequivocal fact that we find is that the battle was unexpectedly precipitated on Monday and that its coming was not known at all to the soldiers nor to a greater portion of the tent colony. It had been planned by the Greeks for Sunday. It was planned by them for Tuesday, but the spark that kindled the fires of war fell without warning on Monday morning.

Lieut. Linderfelt, who happened to be visiting his brother at Cedar Hill on Sunday, and whose return to Trinidad with his wife was for some reason delayed until Monday morning, received a letter from some foreign woman, claiming that her husband was being detained against his will in the tent colony. This letter was sent to Maj. Hamrock at the tents near the colony.

A few soldiers were detailed to meet every train to see that the passengers getting on or off were not molested by the colonists. By this train detail Maj. Hamrock sent word to the Greek leader, Louis Tikas, who was also chief man of the colony, calling attention to the letter and demanding the release of the writer's husband. Tikas denied that any such man was in the colony.

The men of the train detail answered that they were sure he was, and that if not delivered they would come back in force and get him.

These men of course had no authority for any such statement, but it was in line with the ill feeling that we have described as existing between these particular men and the colonists.

The train detail reported the answer of Tikas to the major, who then called Tikas over the telephone and asked him to come to the military camp, as he had done a hundred times before, to talk it over. The reply was most unusual. For the first time Tikas flatly refused to come to the major's camp.

Thereupon, the major telephoned to the station at Cedar Hill and told the captain in charge that he might have need of him and his men to search the colony for a man held a prisoner there. The Cedar Hill detachment was ordered to drill on the parade ground at Water Tank Hill.

Referring again to our simile of the capital letter K it will be remembered that the Cedar Hill station is at the extremity of the upper arm of the letter, and Water Tank Hill is at the top of the vertical shaft, the colony and Maj. Hamrock's tents facing each other where the lines join. It should be added that Cedar Hill is invisible from the tents of the colony, being up the canyon a way, but Water Tank Hill is in plain view of the strikers' tents.

A part, not all, of the men from Cedar Hill saddled their horses and proceeded to Water Tank Hill. In the meantime Tikas telephoned to the major that he would meet him at the railroad station, which is about equidistant from the two sets of tents. After this conversation, Maj. Hamrock telephoned again to Cedar Hill and directed the remaining soldiers to join their troops on the parade grounds, and to bring with them the machine gun.

We find that after the train detail left, Tikas was surrounded by his Greeks in the colony and that these Greeks were under the impression that the colony was about to be again searched for arms—a thing which they had vowed they would never again permit. The Greeks were vociferous and insistent upon giving battle to the soldiers at once if they should appear, Tikas did the best he could to dissuade and quiet them. It was then that he called Maj. Hamrock by telephone. Returning to the group of Greeks, he told them that he must go to the station to see the major, and got them to promise that they would do nothing until his return. Tikas met at the station Maj. Hamrock and the woman who had written the letter and who complained that her husband was being held a prisoner in the colony.

Tikas recognized this woman, and he then stated that he knew her husband, who had been in the colony on Saturday but was no longer there.

During this conversation at the station the first detachment from Cedar Hill arrived on Water Tank Hill, and their officer Lieut. Lawrence, galloped down to the station and reported to Maj. Hamrock. In the meantime the Greeks continued talking together in the colony, awaiting the return of Tikas.

Three women, who had been sent to the store near the station, returned excitedly to the colony, and called the attention of the Greeks to the arrival of the troopers on Water Tank Hill. This was enough to set the smoldering fire aflame. The Greeks, confirmed in their belief and consumed with a suppressed thirst for battle, forgetting their promise to Tikas, seized their rifles and defiled from the colony across the country to the right of the K to a railroad cut on the Colorado & Southeastern tracks, affording excellent cover for delivering a rifle fire onto Water Tank Hill. These Greeks, as nearly as we could discover, were estimated variously in number from 35 to 50 men. Their march across the country was in plain view of all save the major, Tikas, and Lieut. Lawrence—talking in the station.

At the same time there left the colony a much larger number of men of other nationalities, armed with rifles, going northwest to the arroyo crossed by the steel bridge at the foot of the K. This group was never observed by any of the soldiers and their taking position in the arroyo was related to us by civilians.

Lieut. Lawrence, having reported to the major, left to return to his detachment on Water Tank Hill. He had gone but a short way when he galloped back to the station and cried out: "My God, Major, look at those men; we are in for it," pointing toward the Greeks defiling toward the railroad cut. Tikas was the first to answer.

He immediately jumped up, saying "I will stop them," and, pulling out his handkerchief, ran toward the colony, waving to the Greeks to return. A civilian and union sympathizer who met Tikas as he ran, told us that he heard him exclaim: "What damned fools!"

Maj. Hamrock directed Lieut. Lawrence to return to his troop and await developments. After the lieutenant reached Water Tank Hill, and not before, the machine gun and remaining men from Cedar Hill arrived. Maj. Hamrock hurried from the station to his tents and reported the conditions to Gen. Chase in Denver.

While returning to his camp the major observed the women and children of the colony in large numbers running from the colony north of the shelter of the arroyo. This was observed also by the men in the tents, by the major's adjutant, Lieut. Benedict, and by the men on Water Tank Hill. All will tell us that the exodus of women and children was sufficient to account for all that were known to be in the colony.

Lieut. Benedict, observing the colony at this time through his field glasses, plainly saw Tikas leave and hurry toward the Greeks, now nearly arrived at their intended position. Tikas was carrying a rifle in one hand and a field glass in the other. It is evident that on returning to the colony and seeing the futility of preventing the outbreak, Tikas had armed himself and hastened to his compatriots. As yet no shot of any kind had been fired. In expectation of just such an attack, a signal had been devised. Two crude bombs were made of sticks of dynamite, and it was understood that if the colonists attacked suddenly, so that there was not time to telephone the various villages in the canyons, or the wires were cut, these bombs should be exploded as a warning.

After telephoning to Denver the major caused these bombs to be set off, and, so far as we can learn, this was the first explosion of the day. We learned from the colonists that they were thought to be some new kind of ammunition or possibly artillery possessed by the soldiers.

In the meantime, while all this was going on, there were still but three men left in the soldiers' tents with the major, the rest continuing their routine duties at some distance, in apparent ignorance of what was happening.

In the meantime the men on Water Tank Hill were deployed as skirmishers, observing the advance of the Greeks toward their cover. The men almost rebelled against their officers at this time, demanding to know whether they must allow the Greeks to reach concealment before opening fire. Lieut. Linderfelt ordered that no shots should be fired unless the soldiers were first fired upon.

About the time the Greeks reached the cover of the railroad cut, the fire began. We are unable to state from which point the firing came first, except that it came from the strikers. Upon that point all of the witnesses of all shades of sympathies are wholly agreed. Some of the soldiers insist that the firing was opened from the direction of the steel bridge and arroyo, while others are satisfied that it came from the Greeks in the railroad cut.

From whatever source the firing, the first of it was directed toward the soldiers' tents, but it must very soon have been directed generally against Water Tank Hill and the whole countryside between that point and the Hastings Canyon.

After the first fire started, it was several minutes before the men on Water Tank Hill were directed to return it. The enlisted men in this position we find still resentful against their officers for withholding their fire so long. The position taken by the Greeks in the railroad cut was one that proved very difficult to drive them from.

Thus the battle began, and its history from this time, as we learned it from all sources of eyewitnesses, is a history of the advance of the detachment on Water Tank Hill down the shaft of the capital K, past the colony, to the capture of the steel bridge at the foot, which was not accomplished until after dark.

Shortly after the firing commenced it became very general. On the strikers' side it proceeded from the railroad cut, from the tent colony, and from the arroyo beyond it. It was returned from Water Tank Hill, from a row of steel cars in the vicinity of the soldiers' tents, and from houses and stores along the road between the colony and the northern canyon. Lieut. Lawrence and three men advanced from Water Tank Hill toward the Greek position in the railroad cut with a view to dislodge the men shooting from that cover.

One of these men, Pvt. Martin, was shot through the neck. He called, "Lieutenant, I am hit." As the blood gushed out in spurts, the lieutenant put his thumb into the wound and stopped the flow of blood. A first-aid package was then applied. The strikers' fire proved insupportable and the squad withdrew, helping Martin back with them.

They were compelled to leave Martin under cover and return without him. As they retreated, the strikers followed until under cover. Several attempts were made by the soldiers during the day to recover their wounded comrade, but it was not until the afternoon, when Capt. Carson arrived from Trinidad with reinforcements and a machine gun, that they were able to drive the strikers back and reach the place where Martin lay. Just before dark this was accomplished, and Martin was discovered dead and mutilated. He had been shot through the mouth, powder stains evidencing that the gun was held against his lips. His head had been caved in and his brains had exuded to the ground. His arms had been broken. In such a way does the savage blood lust of this southern European peasantry find expression.

In this connection we found also that without exception where dying or wounded adversaries, whether soldiers or civilians, had fallen into the hands of these barbarians, they were tortured or mutilated. The coroner and other civilian witnesses testified before us as to the condition of the corpses recovered in the many battles in the southern field. Hocker Smith, killed near Aguilar; Dougherty and Chavez, killed near Delagua; and many others, were all tortured or mutilated when dead or dying.

As we prepare this report, Maj. Lester is deliberately slain at Walsenburg, while attending the wounded under the protection of the Red Cross of Geneva—recognized as inviolable by civilized men the world over. It is shocking to think of our Colorado youth defending their State and exposed to practices of savagery unheard of save in the half-believed tales of the Sicilian Camorra.

A recovery of Martin's body, thus mutilated, we find to have had the effect of exciting his comrades to a frenzy, which may account for some things that took place later near the tent colony itself.

Lieut. Lawrence engaged the Greeks in the railroad cut all day long. We find that he never left Water Tank Hill except to advance against the cut. His machine gun was used only in that direction until late in the afternoon.

Capt. Linderfelt and two lieutenants of the same name, with other men on Water Tank Hill, sought all day to advance down the shaft of our capital letter K to the steel bridge and arroyo at the northern end.

In the meantime, Lieut. Benedict and the men at the military camp, reinforced later by Troop A, from Hastings, who came down the northern canyon, were engaging the strikers firing from the arroyo, the tent colony, and beyond.

During the morning the men fighting around the two groups of tents were reinforced by Troop A, the nonunion men from Hastings, and also by the mine guards from both canyons. In the afternoon the men on Water Tank Hill were joined by Capt. Carson and a number of Troop A—men from Trinidad and vicinity, with another machine gun.

Along toward dusk Lieut. K. E. Linderfelt was able to advance as far as the railroad station, about 500 yards from the tent colony. His advance from this point to the colony and beyond to the steel bridge and the arroyo was covered by the two machine guns on Water Tank Hill, which were trained on the colony, and that they were trained down the railroad right of way and not having finally dislodged those who had been firing all day from the cut.

This was the first time the machine guns were turned in the direction of the colony and that they were trained down the railroad right of way and not upon the colony is evident from the most casual inspection. We found the fences, water tanks, pump house, and other objects on the right of way riddled with machine-gun bullet holes, but posts, chicken houses, and other objects that remained standing directly in front of the colony and in the line of fire appeared to be scathless, thus proving beyond any doubt that the colony was never at any time swept by the machine guns.

This does not mean that the machine guns were not fired into the colony, as we shall presently show that they were, but it does show that there was no general and wanton mowing down of the tents as has been imputed. Under the protection of the machine guns' fire Capt. Linderfelt, Capt. Carson, and Lieut. K. E. Linderfelt were from this time able to advance steadily. They were accompanied by a part of the Water Tank Hill detachment, the reinforcements from Trinidad in civilian's clothes, and some mine guards.

Their fire was returned from their front all along the arroyo and from the tent colony itself. The men to the west between the colony and the canyon were about this time likewise able to press closer to the arroyo and the tent colony. As both these forces approached the colony, the heaviest fire seemed to come from the very tents themselves. The fire of all was for the first time drawn directly into the colony.

It was then that Maj. Hamrock tested his range with the machine guns on Water Tank Hill and sent them directly into the first tents of the colony itself; at the same time the strikers' fire drew a return from all combatants into the same tents. It was this concentrated fire upon the nearest tents in the southwest corner of the colony that set them on fire.

It could not be supposed that any women, children, or other noncombatants remained in the colony itself. The women and children had been seen departing early in the morning, and it was impossible to believe that the strikers would draw the fire of their opponents from all sides into the colony if any women and children remained therein.

Shortly after the fire started the detonation of some high explosive, like some giant powder or dynamite, was both heard and seen. From one of the tents a shower of its contents could be seen rising high in the air, emitting a blaze of fire.

As one tent caught after another, several other explosions occurred. During this time some of the men, having nearly reached the tent colony, heard the screams of women and called to men whom they saw firing from between the tents to get their women out.

The only answer were the words, "You go to hell," spoken with a foreign accent and accompanied by a rain of shots. The men in the colony being driven back and the presence of women being thus known, Capt. Carson, Lieut. Linderfelt, and other officers and men made a dash in among the burning tents for the purpose of rescuing the women and children.

At first they took several women from the tents, some of which were on fire and some not, then they discovered some subterranean pits beneath many of the tents and that some of them were stored with human occupants. The rescue work was most difficult as the women refused to accompany the soldiers and even fought against being taken away.

They said afterwards they believed the soldiers would kill them. They had to be dragged to places of safety. When the pits were discovered the difficulty of getting out the women and children was increased.

Capt. Linderfelt took a woman from one tent who could not speak English, but who made him understand that he must return. She went back with him and indicated one of these holes in the ground, from which the lieutenant took two little children just in the nick of time. He stalked from the colony with these children in his arms.

Capt. Carson relates that when he was in an apparently open floored tent he heard the crying or whining of something living beneath. He had to chop away the floor, which was nailed down upon these people, in order to get them out.

These holes were so constructed as to conceal their presence, and the openings to them were usually hidden by the bed or some article of furniture being placed above them. During the whole time that this rescue work was going forward the colony was under fire from the arroyo, so that not only did the officers and men have to contend with the fire and with the reluctance of the deluded people they were rescuing but were taking the greatest chances of destruction by making targets of themselves in the light of the burning tents.

We find that the work of rescuing these women and children, to the number of some 25 or 30, by Lieut. Linderfelt, Capt. Carson, and the squads at their command, was under all circumstances truly heroic and must stand out boldly in contradistinction to the abandonment of the helpless women and children by their own people and the subsequent efforts to kill their rescuers, regardless of the safety of the rescued.

It was supposed by the officers, after a thorough search of the colony, that all of the remaining women and children had been taken out.

The event proved that one of the pits had been missed in the search. In this pit were subsequently discovered 2 women and 11 children, all dead. This chamber of death measured in feet 8 by 6 by 4½. When found it was almost closed. The quantity of air contained in such a space we found could not have supported the life of these occupants for many hours. Their bodies, when found, bore heartrending evidences of their struggles to get out. If these women and children were placed in this pit at any time during the morning, it is our belief that they died of suffocation hours before the tents caught fire.

Among those taken out of the colony by the rescue parties was a man named Snyder and his family. The man carried in his arms the dead body of his little son.

This boy had been shot in the forehead and was indeed the only person shot in the colony. A story was given wide publicity that this lad was ruthlessly shot down by the soldiers while trying to get a drink of water for his dying mother.

Snyder went to the depot with this dead child in his arms and there in the presence of many civilians and officers related how the boy had gone outside to answer a call of nature and had faced toward the arroyo from which the strikers fire was coming when he was accidentally hit in the forehead by the bullet that caused his death.

It was Snyder who told in this conversation how the Greeks had planned this battle for their Easter, the day before. At that time, whatever he may say now, his resentment was bitter against the Greeks in the colony, whom he blamed for everything that had happened.

A collection was taken up among the officers and the soldiers, amounting to some $18 and given to refugees.

During the rescuing and afterwards, the tent colony was invaded by the soldiers and mine guards for quite a different purpose. By this time the uniformed guardsmen had been joined by large numbers of men in civilian attire, part of whom were from Troop A and part of them mine guards, all unknown to the uniformed soldiers and their officers and all unused and unamenable to discipline.

By this time, the time of the burning of the tents, the nondescript number of men had passed out of their officers' control, had ceased to be an army and had become a mob. Doubtless all were seeing red on both sides of the conflict.

This may account for the insane shooting by the strikers during the rescue of their women and children and it may also account for what happened in the tents.

We find that the tents were not all of them destroyed by accidental fire. Men and soldiers swarmed into the colony and deliberately assisted the conflagration by spreading the fire from tent to tent.

Beyond a doubt, it was seen to, intentionally, that the fire should destroy the whole of the colony. This, too, was accompanied by the usual loot.

Men and soldiers seized and took from the tents whatever appealed to their fancy of the moment. In this way, clothes, bedding, articles of jewelry, bicycles, tools, and utensils were taken from the tents and conveyed away.

So deliberately was this burning and looting that we find that cans of oil found in the tents were poured upon them and the tents lit with matches.

From a tent marked "John Lawson's headquarters" were taken a store of new underclothes and a mass of ammunition piled in thousand-round boxes. It has been said that the next morning there remained standing tents which were afterwards destroyed. A very careful investigation of that statement has led us to a settled belief, and we so find, that all of the tents were burned on Monday night and that what burning and looting there was, was completed before morning.

To return now to the progress of the battle, while the tents were burning and after the rescue work had been completed and the women and children cared for, the men under Capt. Linderfelt pressed on down the railroad and after a stubborn fight took and occupied and held the steel bridge that commanded the arroyo. The taking of this bridge ended the battle. From this time on for several hours the firing continued, but in gradually diminishing volume until it ceased altogether, about midnight.

In taking the steel bridge two men had been left at a pump house between the colony and arroyo. At this point these men took a prisoner who proved to be Tikas (Louis the Greek).

The men brought this prisoner back along the railroad to the crossroads at the corner of the colony, and called out "We've got Louis the Greek!" Immediately between 50 and 75 men, uniformed soldiers, men of Troop A, and mine guards rushed to that point. Lieut. Linderfelt came up with the others.

Tikas was then turned over to the lieutenant, his captors returning to their post. Some words ensued between the lieutenant and Tikas over the responsibility for the day's doings, Lieut. Linderfelt swung his rifle over Louis's head, breaking the stock of the gun. There were cries of "Lynch him!" from the crowd.

Someone ran into the tent colony and got a rope and threw it over a telegraph pole. Lieut. Linderfelt had difficulty in restraining the crowd.

He declared that there should be no lynching and turned the prisoner over to Sergt. Cullen, with instructions that he would hold the sergeant responsible for Tikas's life. About this time two other prisoners were brought to the crossroads, whom Capt. Linderfelt had captured at the steel bridge and sent down. These were Filer, the secretary of the union, and an unknown man whom we believe, however, to have been Frank Rubino.

Sergt. Cullen in turn turned his prisoner over to Pvts. Mason and Pacheco. Lieut. Linderfelt then went back along the tracks to the station. During this time the group of men and prisoners at the crossroads was standing erect in the glare of the burning tents; they were not firing but afforded an excellent target to their adversaries.

Shortly after the departure of Lieut. Linderfelt, firing was resumed. The men returned to their places under cover of the railroad embankment and recommenced firing into the colony.

The three prisoners ran through this fire toward the tents and were all shot before they reached them; Tikas was shot in the back, showing that he was killed from the soldiers' side. Filer, was shot in front, showing that he was killed from the strikers' fire. The unknown who dropped between the other two we have no information of.

Two bullets passed clear through the body of Tikas, showing that they must have been steel-jacketed bullets, such as are used by the soldiers and also by some of the mine guards and Troop A men. The one bullet that was found in his body is a soft-nosed bullet which is an ammunition never used by the soldiers.

In speaking of the different kinds of bullets used in the Battle of Ludlow, we are led to controvert a statement that the soldiers and men supporting them used explosive bullets. It is not difficult to understand why this mistake is made. The steel-jacketed bullet used in the present Springfield rifles makes a noise in passing through the air very like an explosion. By the sound alone it could very easily be mistaken for an explosive bullet. The bullet extracted from Louis Tikas was not an explosive bullet.

It was submitted to us by the coroner, and we found it to be a very common type of soft-nosed bullet. While not inhuman, like explosive and poisoned bullets, still it is a thing prohibited under the rules of civilized warfare. The strikers that day were actually using explosive and poisoned bullets, as many such were recovered.

The explosive bullet contains at its nose a small percussion cap, which, upon striking, explodes a charge within and scatters the bullet in tiny fragments, thus tearing a large and ghastly hole in anything in which it is embedded. Some of the poisoned bullets contain no poison, being a composition of lead and copper instead of steel and nickel, as our bullets are now made. Others are filled with verdigris.

The former ammunition was used for a while shortly after the Civil War, and has been universally known as a poisoned bullet, because it sets up blood poisoning almost instantly wherever it penetrates the human body.

There is little left to tell. The remaining hours of the night were spent by both sides in desultory firing, gradually dying out about midnight. The refugees from the tent colony seem to have betaken themselves in a general easterly and northeasterly direction to the farmhouses on the plains and the cover of the black hills (low hills), 2 or 3 miles to the east, rising from the plains.

These hills swarmed with men all the next day. The tent colony continued to burn; in fact, it burned all of Monday night and Tuesday night. Whether or not some tents remained standing on Tuesday morning, which were then destroyed by men in uniform, as has been stated, we were unable to determine. Such a thing is possible, but not probable, in our judgment.

Around about midnight Monday the soldiers and their allies were withdrawn from the field of battle and given a few hours' sleep. Before the dawn on Tuesday they were all awakened and sent to occupy the commanding positions in all directions at some distance from Ludlow. This was done in expectation of a renewed attack.

It is this circumstance, of which there can be no doubt, that leads us to the belief that there were no soldiers in the vicinity of the tent colony when daylight broke on Tuesday, and that all the tents were destroyed on Monday night.

We find that the dominant feeling among the refugee colonists on Monday night, and before a second thought came to them or was suggested to them, was resentment against the Greeks for starting the battle which was bound to entail the results that it did.

This feeling of resentment against the Greeks prevailed even over their resentment against the soldiers, but the incident was later made a handle to inflame the minds of these deluded men to the acts of slaughter and rapine that followed throughout the State.

It was made the excuse of many bold and defiant utterances and acts of treason against the State by certain union leaders who had the opportunity by their influence and authority to prove themselves really great and good men and worthy citizens. Instead, by all means of exaggeration, incendiarism, and treasonable practices, they made of the Battle of Ludlow a means of organizing a real rebellion, with its attendant awful consequences.

We do not presume even to hint where the ultimate responsibility lies in the present strike. It may be that the coal operators or the union are wholly to blame for the conditions that have made such results possible; it may be that both sides are partly at fault.

The conditions having been brought about and being actually existent, whatever the cause, we feel that for their treason and rebellion against organized society, with the horrible consequences of anarchy that followed, certain union leaders must take the responsibility before man and God.

Respectfully submitted.

PHILIP VAN CISE,
Captain, First Infantry.

The following additional recommendations were made by Maj. Boughton: I feel it my duty to add a recommendation to those made by the board of officers. Believing that the outbreak at Ludlow was directly due to the presence near each other of deadly enemies in the persons of strikers, non-union workmen, and mine guards, festering a canker of hate and brutality of which the battle was the inevitable expression, I greatly fear that the same forces again at work will again develop the same or a similar result.

To my thinking, good citizenship demands that these elements of rapine and slaughter be kept apart. As the mines and coal camps can not be moved away, I recommend that the commanding general and the governor urge upon the commanding officer of the Federal troops the unwisdom and danger of permitting the tent colony to be reestablished at Ludlow.

My brother officers do not feel the necessity for such a step.

VAN CISE EXHIBIT NO. 2.

[Article written May 30, 1914, as the situation then appeared.]

THE COLORADO STRIKE SITUATION.

[By Philip S. Van Cise, captain, National Guard of Colorado.]

What Colorado needs is toleration, calm judgment, and a strict enforcement of all laws. What the operators need is an appreciation of the right of labor to organize, to hold peaceful assemblies, and to own property in coal camps. What the strikers need is real leaders who can present their case by argument instead of violence, who will confine themselves to facts and tell the truth. What the militia needs is an esprit de corps that can only be gained by requiring officers to approximate the standards of the Regular Army, a purging of its ranks of partisans and the few malefactors therein, and the support of the government and people of the State. What the Nation needs is radically amended immigration laws that will keep out anarchists and lawlessly inclined Italians, Greeks, and other south European peoples.

The present situation is an armed truce. Armed, because while the operators have complied with the orders for the disarming of their men, the strikers have not. The United States troops stand between the mines and the tent colonies. The strikers, through their leaders, openly state they will renew their call to arms and campaign of violence if the militia again takes the field. A Denver women's peace society, dominated by strikers, declares in the chamber of the house of representatives that it will forcibly oppose the National Guard if again sent into service. The operators refuse to meet the "traitors and murderers," as they term the strikers. The militia, damned by strike sympathizers, made the goat of the conflict, unpaid for three months, insufficiently clothed and equipped when in the field, smarting under injustice, disgusted with certain higher officers and the governor, nevertheless stands ready to take the field if supported by State authorities. The mine guards have departed, as the majority of them did before when the guard first went into the field in October, 1913. Property values have materially decreased, investors are frightened from the State, positions are insecure, and the great third party, the public, does the suffering.

On the merits of the strike much can be said on both sides. A premise to any fair statement must be that there is little law in Las Animas and Huerfano Counties when operators and miners are participants. (The strike has likewise spread into violence in Fremont, Routt, and Boulder Counties, but this statement does not apply to them, as far different and very excellent conditions exist there.) Personal-injury cases against operators are doomed to defeat. The sheriff's office is the cat's-paw of the corporations, and representative government exists only on paper.

The coal mines are in narrow, barren canyons, almost devoid of water, on lands owned or leased by the companies. The houses, in the main, are good. The majority are electric lighted, and the rents are reasonable. The company stores sell at the same price as similar goods are sold in Trinidad and carry stocks far larger and more diversified than do the independent traders adjoining the coal camps. The school facilities are at least average, and the school building is the usual place for the moving-picture shows, dances, and other entertainments of the camp. But they are not open for any assembly of the men to discuss social welfare, wages, or law enforcement. Nor are the men allowed to gather for that purpose. The employment of a mixture of nationalities aids the operators in their work of keeping the men apart.

The strikers, after they went out of the mines, received widespread publicity for their claims that the operators had machine guns trained on their camps, had Baldwin-Felts thugs and gunmen around killing them and assaulting their women, and that they had finally been obliged to arm themselves in defense of their homes.

There are two sides to this story, however. The strikers have many good tacticians among their leaders, and these located the tent colonies at the very mouths of the canyons. Hence workers in the mines, "scabs," as they are called, and the officials had to pass these colonies on their way to the stations. Strike breakers coming in were greeted with profanity and violence. The mine owners, with the men who did not want to join the union, being thus intimidated, and fearing violence, secured guards for their property. These guards were of various classes, just like men in any walk of life. A few, and only a few, were from West Virginia. Some were gunmen with records. Others, though a small number, were Baldwin-Felts detectives. Many were men of good physique out of work; others were arrant cowards who thought they were getting easy jobs at high salaries.

Nearly all the mining companies gave orders to their guards to stay on their own property and only to bear arms there. In the main this was obeyed. In some canyons the guards did not do so, and proceeded to pick fights with the strikers. The latter, where the guards did not precipitate the trouble, did so themselves. The strikers bought guns with union and individual funds. The operators brought in more weapons, including machine guns. As a further means of defense they purchased searchlights to scour the hills at night. Yet the latter were purposely thrown on the tented colonies and proved very annoying to the occupants.

Here arises a query, Which side had the motive for violence? The operators had if at the outset they could scare the strikers by this means. But they ran the risk of retaliation, the loss of their property, the driving away of their workers, and the resultant closing of the mines and capitulation to the union. The strikers had everything to gain through force, and very little to lose. Hence they resorted to it on all possible occasions.

The strikers imported their agitators and gunmen, they secured their rifles, and bullets began to hail upon the hills. Finally, with the strikers from the Ludlow tent colony in the ascendancy, the entrance to Hastings and Berwind Canyons were closed in, hundreds of shots fired into the two towns, and a state of absolute anarchy existed. The operators, long crying for State troops, became hysterical in their demands. The people generally wanted the militia, and it is even said that the leaders of the strikers, fearful of results with their men out of hand, likewise joined in the general desire.

Troops were ordered out, and welcomed by both sides and citizens generally. But martial law was not declared, and the militia was greatly hampered in consequence. Orders for disarmament were given and the mine guards generally disarmed. But few guns were turned in by the strikers and the operators kept many of their own weapons, though willing to give them up if asked to do so. Result—an armed force between two belligerents. One thing must be borne in mind, however. With troops in the field the "scabs" were secure, the strikers were peaceable, the operators discharged their mine guards, property was safe, and coal was mined.

The governor tried to take a middle ground. He forbade the importation of all strike breakers. The union leaders were jubilant, the operators angry. The mines worked a limited output, the colonists received their $3 a week apiece, and the rank and file were dissatisfied. Then rumors spread that the governor was going to allow strike breakers to enter the fields. Instantly the murmur of the strikers became an uproar, and open threats of violence were made.

As a side light upon the temper of the Ludlow colonists, an incident that happened November 30, 1913, four days before the big snow, may not be amiss. Company K of Denver, 103 strong, the largest company in the guard, was stationed at Ludlow. Bernardo Verdi, the Italian leader of the colony, came to the military camp early in the morning and threatened violence if strike breakers entered the district on the 8.30 a. m. train. The military policy of this camp had been, among other things, to cover the Ludlow station at train time with a detail of 10 men and a sergeant. The sergeant reported by phone that the entire colony was at the depot "spoiling for trouble." The captain ordered the first lieutenant to assemble the company and hold it subject to orders, and took two sergeants to the depot.

The colony was out in force. Small rocks covered the road, and the women carried clubs that would have put to shame the maces of the middle ages.

Many had spikes driven through them. Others were guarded limbs of trees with sharpened branches. Some were just plain boards and billiard cues.

The detail was ordered to fix bayonets, and with much grumbling and muttering the depot and grounds were cleared. But when the road was reached trouble began. The crowd refused to move farther and violence was imminent. The detail had a front of from 100 to 150 feet to cover, and opposed to the 10 sentries was a solid mass of strikers, with their club-swinging women in the front rank, giving vent to all manner of profanity, and a sullen bunch of men in the rear urging the women to violence. If trouble had started nothing on earth could have prevented some women being bayoneted and others shot, and then Company K, called on to protect the peace, and impartial as to the merits of the strike, would have been branded to the world as murderers of defenseless women and men protecting their homes from gunmen. And among these women were two who have since gone to President Wilson to represent the strikers' side of the battle of Ludlow.

Luck was all that saved the day. Three leaders of the strikers, Bernardo, Weinberger, and Jones, were picked out of the crowd and turned over to the sergeants with instructions to shoot them on the first sign of trouble. They protested that they were not responsible, but admitted they were the leaders of the colony. When they saw that the orders would be enforced they managed to signal the crowd and before the train arrived a large number had gone back to the colony. No strike breakers arriving, the incident was closed. But it illustrates the violent character of the Ludlow strikers.

The next step was the raising of the embargo by the governor, and importation of strike breakers. The military authorities made every effort to enforce the State law. At Ludlow, and elsewhere, commanding officers were instructed to and did examine every man who entered the district looking for work. Each had to be asked if he knew that a strike was in progress, had been so told before he signed up, and was willing to go to work under those conditions. Further, the strikers' colony was pointed out to them and they were instructed that the men in the tents were out on strike.

Again the agitators shouted "To arms!" The terrible Colorado blizzard alone prevented an outbreak at this time and proved the most effective settlement of violence that the State has yet seen. For six weeks the district was under 4 feet of snow, the strikers were effectually penned in their colonies, strike breakers filled the camps, and mines operated to capacity.

The snow disappearing, the hatred of the strikers for all troops grew apace. Strike breakers were protected and the term "scab herders" was applied to the soldiers. The dislike of the strikers for the soldiers was caused by the fact that the presence of troops made the nonunion miners feel secure, and hence made the success of the strike very doubtful.

The militia in the main made a splendid record. During a service in the field of nearly six months and until the Battle of Ludlow, only two men were killed by the troops, one accidentally and the other a fugitive from justice. A district of several hundred square miles was policed and absolute order prevailed.

The Colorado troops, according to the annual reports of United States Army inspectors, have as fine a body in the rank and file as can be found in the country. The majority of the companies come from the small towns of the State and number in their ranks some of the best young manhood in Colorado. One of the Denver companies was composed entirely of former college men. The only interest any of these men had in the strike was to wish for a speedy settlement and all were disinterested as to the merits of the controversy. Their one desire was to get back to their homes.

A soldier can not be made in a few days. Discipline is the habit of obedience. The militia had many men who committed abuses, but this was to be expected among 1,400 men, many of them recruits unused to restraint and military training. The military game was a hobby with many, but the permanent pursuit of none. The wonder is, with a constantly growing hostility among the strikers, the abuses were not greater. As the officers learned the game better and got their men used to team work these conditions became less frequent.

The Colorado militia has long been cursed by factionalism. Many chair warmers and sycophants have been retained by various adjutant generals. The result has been that a real esprit de corps has been prevented, and many inferior officers have been allowed to creep in. To these few, the enlistment of mine guards, and the hostility of the strikers can be traced the troubles between troops and union.

First Lieut. K. E. Linderfelt, placed in command at Cedar Hill, 1½ miles from Ludlow, has, throughout the strike, been the Nemesis of the strikers. A member of the guard off and on for many years, a former sergeant of the Regular Army, a veteran of many wars, and a typical soldier of fortune, he was the worst man that could have been put in command of troops charged with preserving the peace. As a fighting man there was none better or braver. Personally likeable when casually met or in conversation, he was possessed of an insane hatred towards "red-necks" or "wops" as the strikers came to be called. When the troops entered the Ludlow district on November 1, 1913, he with other mine guards was personally disarmed by Col. Davis, of the Second Infantry, though Linderfelt was then a battalion adjutant in that regiment. At this time he was a deputy sheriff though not drawing pay from the county, and was in charge of the mine guards during the battles at Berwind, a C. F. & I. property. (Mr. Welborn, president of the C. F. & I. testified before the congressional commission that Linderfelt was paid by his company (Vol. II, p. 554). Linderfelt before the Industrial Commission said he was paid by the county. The county records show no such payment.) Later he put on his uniform and was assigned to duty in charge of Company B, Second Infantry.

This was a Trinidad company, composed at that time almost entirely of Mexicans, and had been called out by the sheriff about two weeks before the other troops took the field. The Mexicans were gradually eliminated, and Americans took their places. Only one of the original members was left at the time of the Battle of Ludlow. In its ranks were then numbered mine guards, men enlisted in the district, and men transferred from other companies which had been relieved from duty. These transfers came late in the campaign, and were a good average bunch of men.

The old mine guard element, led by Lieut. K. E. Linderfelt, was always in trouble with the colonists. This group and the strikers constantly sought opportunities for assaults upon each other, and each made the most of its opportunities. Company B had the best of it, because it carried arms. The result was that while the First Infantry company at Ludlow was usually on good terms with the strikers, played baseball and football with them, and its men could go into the colony unarmed, Lieut. Linderfelt and his men went in parties armed to the teeth, in constant danger of being wiped out if caught unaware.

K Company left the field March 13. B Company—its strength about 35—moved a detachment of 12 men to K's old camp, and Maj. P. J. Hamrock, formerly in command at Aguilar, was ordered to Ludlow.

Hamrock is an Irishman and an ex-Regular. His few critics (before Ludlow) were never able to say worse of him than that he was a saloonkeeper. A crack rifle shot, honest, fair and square, "Pat" was universally loved in the guard. As major he was in charge of the district. Lieut. Linderfelt, nicknamed "Monte" was in direct charge of the company. The major tried to keep order, Monte to force disorder. Several strikers were booted off the depot platform, assaulted in the roads, and "run ragged." On the other hand the soldiers were the constant recipients of threats that they would be wiped out by the strikers.

On the departure of K, and foreseeing a withdrawal of all the troops, the colonists began to bring in from the hills and arroyos the guns hidden from the search of the soldiers. They planned further attacks upon the mines and the driving out of the hated scabs. They also hoped for a chance to get Monte and his men, but did not dare so long as a strong supporting force was in the field.

A troop of cavalry, known as Troop A, was enlisted among employees of the operators. These men were anything but impartial, all were violent opponents of the unions, and the agitators seized upon this incident as a means to further inflame the strikers.

Friday, April 17, 1914, all other troops were withdrawn; Company B and luckless Pat were left. Events moved swiftly. The strikers now grew arrogant, the operators fearful and good citizens began to leave. Mine guards came back into the district, and the searchlights again threw their beams across the sky.

The strike was apparently lost. Radicals urged violence as the only way to enforce victory. Tuesday at dawn was set as the time to wipe out the soldiers and then to march on the coal camps of the C. F. & I. at Berwind and the Victor-American at Hastings and Delagua. Some of the colonists warned their friends in the coal camps to move before the attack. A succession of trivial incidents precipitated the battle on Monday, and Ludlow, through the agency of a bitter and untruthful press, became the most misrepresented spot in the United States.

Of the battle itself, little need be said. Started by the strikers, it was finished by the soldiers. But of the results volumes have and will be written. One significant fact has been overlooked. If the troops started the battle, where did the strikers so quickly get their arms and ammunition, when presumably they had turned all over to the soldiers on demand and search? Or did they hide them as they did from the United States troops? Why were these guns at hand?

The soldiers were in uniform, on duty, and representing the State. Whatever their past offenses, the strikers had a remedy in a legal manner. An attack upon the troops was an assault upon the Government.

Until darkness fell, and their ranks were augmented by reinforcements from Troop A, the conduct of the soldiers was most exemplary and praiseworthy. But the approach of night gave cover to liberty, and riot reigned as the battle ceased. Three prisoners were captured, one assaulted by Lieut. Linderfelt, and all three shot under the infamous "ley fuga" of the Mexicans. The colony, already on fire in one corner, was burned to the ground.

The assault upon Tikas and the murder of the three prisoners can not be too severely condemned. As the men were outlaws they could have been shot in their tracks and never captured, but once taken they were entitled to be kept inviolate. These murders by this mine-guard group should be as severely punished as should the murders by the strikers, and both should receive the extreme penalty of the law. On the other hand, however, the heroic work of the other officers and men who participated in the Ludlow battle should not be overlooked and unstinted praise should be given them for their conduct in resisting an attack by superior numbers.

The next day dead bodies of women and children were found huddled in a small pit under one tent, and the papers published far and wide lie that machine guns had mowed down women and children. This falsehood was deliberately spread by union leaders, whose own physicians had personally testified before a coroner's jury that there was no sign of a bullet wound on any but the Snyder boy. He was not in the pit, and was shot in the forehead while standing beside a tent, facing to the rear. The boy's father pulled the body back into the cellar, and when rescued from there by the troops carried the body to the depot.

The world has heard little of the horrible mutilation of the bodies of Pvts. Martin and Hockersmith by strikers, of the percussion-capped, soft-nosed, and poisoned bullets of the unionists. All that went out was that "gunmen militia had murdered defenseless women and children."

The fact that prisoners had been assaulted and killed was first given out by the board of officers appointed to investigate the Ludlow battle. If it had wished to shield anything, all it had to do was to keep quiet and nothing would ever have been known of these incidents.

But that strikers built rifle pits in front of and in the colony, that they dug cellars for their women and children to hide in, that they used both on the day of the battle, and deliberately forced the troops in self-protection to return the fire has not been told. That women and children were rescued from the colony by soldiers was not admitted by strikers, though these unfortunates were cared for, fed and sheltered, and sent to Trinidad, where they later lodged in the strikers' tent colony. Though all the inhabitants of the tent colony were accounted for on Thursday after the battle, and this fact was admitted by John McLennan, president of the State federation of labor while he was a prisoner at Ludlow, yet for weeks the leaders sought to inflame their followers with statements anent women and children buried and concealed at Ludlow!

Then what happened? A machine gun was delivered to strikers at Aguilar by union leaders. Delagua was attacked, men killed and women shot upon. The water plant was destroyed, the Royal mine blotted out, 35 men, women, and children shut in, and the entrance dynamited. The Chandler mine in Fremont County damaged by strikers under a flag of truce. The Walsen mine at Walsenburg assailed, Mrs. Gregory shot in the arm, and troops sent to the defense. Maj. Lester, of the medical corps, was killed and Lieut. Scott and Pvt. Miller injured. (For their own purposes of concealment, and to encourage their own ranks, the strikers did not make public the fact that in this attack upon the troops their losses were very heavy.) The Heckla mine, in Boulder County, was next surrounded and thousands of shots poured into it, while the sheriff was imprisoned inside. Calls to arms were published in the Denver papers, signed by union leaders, asking union men for arms and ammunition and to drill to exterminate mine guards and militiamen. The camp at Forbes, near Ludlow, attacked at dawn, burned to the ground, nine killed, Japs shut up in a house and burned to death. And all this done under the "excuse and provocation" representations of the agitators that women and children had been deliberately killed at Ludlow by soldiers! If this was true, why were any rescued?

Who killed these innocent sacrifices? Not the soldiers, because they were not struck by bullets, the militiamen had not dug the pits, and rescued all occupants of the colony finding therein. Then it must have been the strikers who dug the pits for their families to seek safety when they started hostilities. The majority of the women and children rushed for the arroyo. All were dressed, as the battle began after 9 in the morning. These few hid in the colony, and were used as the excuse for anarchists and black-hand assassins to commence an era of rapine and destruction unheard of before in America.

What an opportunity was missed by union leaders! Instead of sympathy the strikers now have the opprobrium of all good citizens. Instead of trying to win by truth they rest on falsehood and violence. Only May 18 the three most prominent union leaders in Colorado, McLennan, Doyle, and Lawson, sent out telegrams that "barrel-house bums and gunmen militia destroyed Forbes and Ludlow." Does this invite confidence?

Now, about the National Guard. Its condition is serious. Compelled to remain silent under abuse, hampered in the field by constant truces made by the governor with armed forces in rebellion against the State, its spirit is broken. How would you like to arrive in Ludlow, to hear the purr of a machine gun, the rattle of small arms, be down there to maintain order and uphold the laws, see hundreds of armed men in the hills shooting in your direction, and be told, "No; you aren't able to handle this situation, so the lieutenant governor has made a 48-hour truce in Denver"? Then to have these men slink away from the hills and break out in other parts of the State? Again, to have a company in the battle at Walsenburg surrounded by scores of strikers, fighting for its life, and have the other troops forbidden by the governor to go to its rescue or even to fire if fired upon? Or to know the night before that Forbes was to be wiped out, to implore the officer in command to be allowed to go to its aid, only to hear that the governor would not allow a movement in that direction? Then to be awakened at dawn with a horrible din of small arms, the crackle of a machine gun, to hear the latter cease its roar, the rifle fire diminish and die away, and see smoke come over the hill? And you sit in camp, damned as cowards? And the men who did the deed of death and destruction march gleefully back to Trinidad and openly boast in the streets of their exploits. Do you wonder the guard is ashamed of its governor, has no esprit de corps, and wants to quit a game of vacillation?

But give this same guard (eliminating the mine guards and Company B, Second Infantry, and giving it a different chief) an absolute order, "You go into the district and keep the peace, and do it under martial law," and to a man the National Guard will respond, the situation will be taken over from the Regulars, and quiet maintained.

But law and order is no solution to the strike itself. The laws must be enforced and the violators punished. So much for the results of the strike and the needs of the State.

Now, for the merits of the strike. There are two sides to every controversy. When two men fight in a back alley with no onlookers they usually settle their difficulties. But when two large factions of society fight the State or the Nation must step in and end the conflict. Under martial law strikers can be deported or the mines closed. Neither is fair, yet each side cries for this remedy to be applied to the other. Compromise must be brought about. Both sides must win a little, lose more, and shake hands. But it should be understood that a settlement does not exempt law breakers on either side from punishment.

Recognition of the union is the main issue with the strikers. The right to run their own business in their own way is the contention of the operators. They further claim, and the evidence before the congressional commission bore this out, that the strike was called by a convention of delegates from the various camps, many of whom had worked in them for only a day or two, and that others were paid to attend. In other words, that the convention was not representative of the working miners of southern Colorado, and hence did not state any claim of their employees. The strikers object to the Baldwin-Felts men, but the operators have every right to object as much to the one hundred or more Greek soldiers whom they claim were brought in by the strikers to act as gunmen on that side.

If strife is to cease, a scheme that incorporates three factions in the struggle must be adopted. These three are the operators, nonunion miners, and strikers. The operators now recognize only the first two; the strikers refuse to deal with the second. The United Mine workers makes its boast that when a contract is signed with it by a mine, anyone, whether union man or independent, can get work; yet it at once becomes a grievance, and the miner is forced to quit if he don't join the union.

Hence, each is fighting for the closed shop—the union to close it to the independents and the operators to close it to the unions. It is said on good authority that the unions do not thrive without the check-off system, in which the mine collects the union dues from the wage of the workers. Hence recognition of the union involves this plan.

One big hitch in the whole series of difficulties in the coal-mining districts is that the union is not incorporated. While it demands a contract with its organization, the individual members alone of which can be sued, its members are practically judgment proof, and hence the claim of the operators that a contract with the union gives no protection to them.

The union demands are—

1. Recognition of the union.
2. Ten per cent advance in wages on tonnage rates and day wage scale.
3. Eight-hour day for all classes of labor in or around coal mines and at coke ovens.
4. Pay for all narrow work and dead work, which includes brushing, timbering, removing falls, handling impurities, etc.
5. Checkweighmen at all mines, to be elected by the miners without interference by company officials in said election.
6. The right to trade in any store they please, and the right to choose their own boarding place and doctor.
7. Enforcement of Colorado mining laws and abolition of guards.

Of these demands the third, fifth, sixth, and the first half of the seventh are already given by law, but the right to guards on their own property is likewise given by law to the operators. Every fair man agrees that the second and fourth can easily be made the subject of arbitration, and the analysis discloses the issue again to be recognition of the union.

Several of the union's demands, of course, are put in for the purpose of trading and are not seriously pressed as grievances. But what these are the union officials will not yet state.

The writer suggested a permanent commission selected by the participants as the solution of the contest. The union leader to whom it was referred stated that there was merit in the scheme, but objected to recognition of the "scabs." The operators, with whom the plan was taken up, objected to the unions and resultant trouble with agitators. Nevertheless, I believe that a plan along the following lines can be worked out and a solution achieved through it. At any rate the situation has grown to such importance nationally that a permanent, neutral board between the two factions must result.

The scheme as proposed to the two factions is as follows:

Outline of a possible scheme of strike settlement.—Two classes are the sufferers in this controversy. In the first are the operators, the union strikers, and the nonunion workers. The second is the public.

No one wins all he strives for. The scheme suggested here is a compromise which offers promise of immediate settlement and possibly a permanent peace in the coal-mining industry of Colorado.

Coal mining has become a quasi public utility. The numerous difficulties between capital and labor require a neutral board to act between both for the interests of all. A State board is political; one selected by the parties directly interested can be nonpartisan, permanent, and effective.

Permanent board.—An impartial board of six members to be selected to act as a third party between the two factions. Three of these members should be composed of persons not directly or indirectly interested in either the coal companies or the unions, these to be selected in such manner as the operators and the unions should agree upon. The other three members to be optional with the interested parties and to have no voting power, being simply advisory, and representing operators, unions, and nonunion men.

This board to be maintained by an equal assessment placed on both sides. There are some 14,000 coal miners in the State. An assessment of $1 a month on each worker and the same amount per worker on the employer should give an ample sum for all purposes set forth herein. This board shall—

(a) Employ checkweighmen at all mines, who shall likewise inspect all scales. (The men by law are now given the right to checkweighmen if they pay for them. Laws 1913, p. 191.)

(b) Employ inspectors at all mines, who shall likewise train rescue workers. (The operators already spend large sums for this purpose.)

(c) Arbitrate, if possible, all differences between miners and operators, except recognition of the union, which shall not be a subject for arbitration, as an absolute open shop shall prevail.

(d) Give entire publicity to all its work and reports and encourage naturalization.

The things to be done by the various factions are:

I. BY THE OPERATORS.

(a) Men may belong to the union if they so desire. (Rev. Stat., 1908, secs. 3924-3925, gives this right.)

(b) Provide a meeting place for all men of camp to gather for whatever discussion they wish without interference. (Right to assemble given by constitution, this simply facilitates that right and provides for comfort therein.)

(c) Employees given an opportunity to purchase homes in mining camps. (This should make a better and more permanent class of employees.)

(d) Abolition of scrip. (Abolished by State law, 1899, p. 426, and also by mining companies, but indirect evasion exists through issuance by some company stores.)

(e) Abolition of all saloon interests, except rental and right of regulation. (Saloons seem to be necessary evils in mining camps or the men won't work. The severer the regulation the better the camp and the greater the output of coal.)

(f) All men formerly employed, except those under indictment, to be taken back to work. (This does not prevent subsequent prosecution of any men found guilty of violence.)

(g) Fullest compliance with the laws and cooperation with the permanent board for at least two years.

II. BY THE UNION STRIKERS.

(a) Call off the strike, and call no new one for at least two years.

(b) To cooperate with the permanent board for at least two years.

III. BY THE INDEPENDENT WORKERS.

(a) To remain at work, free to join a union or keep out, without molestation by either side.

(b) To cooperate with permanent board for at least two years.

CHASE EXHIBIT.

STATE OF COLORADO,
OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Denver, December 12, 1914.

From: The Adjutant General of Colorado.

To: M. J. Dower, secretary in charge of hearings, United States Commission on Industrial Relations, Senate Chamber, Denver, Colo.

Subject: Copies of orders.

1. Replying to your letter of December 11, on the above subject, I would state that a copy of orders pertaining to the campaign will be furnished as soon as they can conveniently be written. They are somewhat numerous and, of course, can not be given publicity until the close of the campaign.

2. A copy of section 398, Revised Statutes of Colorado, governing picketing is herewith inclosed.

JOHN CHASE.

[Chapter XV, Revised Statutes of Colorado.]

SEC. 398. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to loiter about or patrol the streets, alleys, roads, highways, trails, or place of business of any person, firm, or corporation engaged in any lawful business, for the purpose of influencing or inducing others not to trade with, buy from, sell to, work for, or have business dealings with such person, firm, or corporation, or to ticket the works, mine, building, or other place of business or occupation of such other person, persons, firm, or corporation, for the purpose of obstructing or interfering with or injuring any lawful business, work, or enterprise; * * * (L. 1905, p. 160, sec. 1.)

SEC. 402. Violation of act—Misdemeanor.—Any person, firm, or corporation violating any provision of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than ten (10) dollars nor more than two hundred and fifty (250) dollars, or to be imprisoned not to exceed sixty (60) days in the county jail, or both, in the discretion of the court. (L. 1905, p. 161, sec. 5.)

HENDRICKS EXHIBIT.

TRINIDAD, COLO., December 18, 1914.

HON. FRANK P. WALSH,

Chairman Commission on Industrial Relations:

I have read over my statement given before your commission at Denver and now supplement that statement with copies of telegrams and the military orders and letters which I did not have while in Denver, and I do this because they speak for themselves, where memory might prove faulty.

On November 12, 1913, and before that date, I had been requested by hundreds of citizens in Trinidad to advise them as to whether or not military law had been declared in the State of Colorado. Being unable to answer their requests satisfactorily to myself, I did send a telegram to Gov. Ammons, of Colorado, which said telegram is as follows, and a copy of which is hereto attached:

NOVEMBER 12, 1913.

GOV. E. M. AMMONS,

Denver, Colo.:

I request that you advise me by wire immediately if you have declared martial law in Las Animas County.

JOHN J. HENDRICK,
District Attorney.

DENVER, COLO., November 13, 1913.

J. J. HENDRICK,

Trinidad, Colo.:

Gen. Chase was directed to adopt all legal methods necessary to restore order and maintain law. Please consult him.

E. M. AMMONS,
Governor.

This telegram from the governor to myself did not convey the information I desired, and I could not tell therefrom whether martial law had been declared or not; therefore on the 13th of November I sent another telegram, of which the following is a copy:

NOVEMBER 13, 1913.

GOV. E. M. AMMONS,

Denver, Colo.:

Your telegram fails to give the desired information. Have you as governor proclaimed martial law in Las Animas and Huerfano Counties?

J. J. HENDRICK,
District Attorney.

In response to that telegram I received another telegram from the governor in words as follows:

DENVER, COLO., November 13, 1913.

J. J. HENDRICK,
District Attorney, Trinidad, Colo.:

Referring to your telegram of yesterday, consult Gen. Chase concerning military status of Las Animas County.

E. A. AMMONS,
Governor.

I was unable to determine whether the governor had declared martial law or not, and in his telegrams he absolutely refused to state whether he had declared martial law or not; but, at any rate, martial law prevailed.

A few days after Gen. Chase had threatened to arrest the district attorney and his office force for having dared to do their duty I was served with a notice by John Chase, a copy of which is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DISTRICT OF COLORADO,
Trinidad, Colo., November 15, 1913.

From: Commanding general, Military District of Colorado.

To: J. J. Hendrick, district attorney, third judicial district of the State of Colorado.

Subject: Military prisoners.

1. You are hereby notified that all persons arrested, incarcerated, and held as military prisoners in the counties of Las Animas and Huerfano, State of Colorado, are to be held subject to the order of the commanding general, Military District of Colorado, in regard to their confinement, trial, and final disposition of their cases, which notice you are respectfully requested to observe until further notice from the commanding general, Military District of Colorado.

JOHN CHASE,
Brigadier General, Adjutant General's Department.

This notice, as you will observe, practically prohibited my office from handling the public business of the district; from prosecuting cases in the civil courts, for the reason that we did not know and were never notified who were military prisoners and who were not; that numerous people were arrested and thrown in jail and held there incommunicado during the pleasure of the commanding general.

After this notice was served practically all, if not all, arrests were made by the military power without complaint or warrant, and they handled these criminal matters in such way as suited their pleasure.

In the case of The People v. L. A. King, who we had arrested upon a charge of assault to kill, at the instigation of the operators, rough their attorney, Northcutt, and before we were permitted to try the case in the civil court, we received the following order or letter from the military authorities, a copy of which follows and is hereto attached:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DISTRICT OF COLORADO,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE,
Camp at Trinidad, November 22, 1913.

From: Acting judge advocate.

To: Mr. D. M. Ralston, deputy district attorney.

Subject: The People v. L. A. King.

I am advised that a preliminary examination of L. A. King upon a charge of assault to kill is set for to-day. The military authorities have found it necessary and expedient to apprehend King and are detaining him for investigation in connection with certain matters cognizable by the military. It will not be possible to produce King upon his preliminary to-day. Having investigated the matter which he is charged in the complaint in the justice court, we are of the opinion that that particular case should be dismissed, but our present detention of the defendant has nothing to do with that matter. Believing that it would facilitate the work of both your office and mine, I request the dismissal by you of that charge. I trust that you will see your way clear to concur in this matter and will advise me of your action.

EDWARD J. BOUGHTON,
Major and Acting Judge Advocate, Military District of Colorado.

I was asked while on the stand in regard to the jury system prevailing in Huerfano County, and doubt if I made myself clear to the commission as to the details. I told the commission the statutory mode of drawing and empaneling juries. That is not where the fault is in that county. For about 15 years past Jefferson B. Farr, who testified before the commission, has been sheriff of that county. He dominated the politics of Huerfano County, and no man was elected or could be elected unless it met with his approval. He was a very powerful factor—in fact, the most powerful factor—in politics in that county and seemed to have the power of carrying things just as he pleased; that his word was a command to the voters; that his office was a political headquarters 365 days in the year. In the trial of a criminal case wherein Sheriff Farr took an interest I have never known it to fail in any case that the verdict was not in accordance with his wishes. If he desired a man convicted, there was no lawyer powerful enough to acquit any defendant where Mr. Farr was interested. It made no difference what the facts were, what the evidence was, nor who the party was, he had absolute control of the verdicts of the juries. When it came to summoning a special venire in a criminal case, the venire would be issued by the clerk and handed to a deputy sheriff, the deputy sheriff would make a break for the sheriff's office, which is on the same floor as the court room, and there Mr. Farr, the sheriff, would hand him a list of names to be summoned on the special venire. Always the venire returned would be men absolutely under the control of the sheriff and who would render any verdict desired by the sheriff. Whenever the special venire was exhausted the second, third, fourth, or fifth, if that many were used, would be handled in the same manner and go through the same process and the same result would be reached.

It may seem to an outsider that these statements are quite general and quite broad, but personal observation as well as personal experience have caused me to make these statements as matters of absolute fact. I have never in any community nor at any time or place known or read of any man who had such complete and absolute control over the destinies of the people where their rights and liberties were involved as had and as has Sheriff Jefferson B. Farr, of Huerfano County.

He has openly made the statement that any man could pick a hundred jurors in Huerfano County and that out of that hundred jurors he would pick a jury of 12 men that would render such verdict as might be desirable to him in any case.

This power has come to him and remained with him by reason of the fact that he has been backed up and supported in all his political manipulations by the large and powerful coal companies who operate in Huerfano County.

As an example of unwarranted military interference with regard to my duties as district attorney, I wish to cite one instance which originated in Aguilar, in Las Animas County.

A complaint was made by a woman under the statute against her husband for nonsupport of her and her family. This man had deserted his wife and family and was working in one of the coal mines near Aguilar. The complaint was lodged with the justice of the peace at Aguilar and the warrant was issued for this man's arrest, placed in the hands of a duly elected constable for service. He proceeded to the coal mine of the Victor American Fuel Co. at Delagua for the purpose of arresting the party for whom the warrant was issued. He was prevented by the military from serving the warrant, and he himself was placed under arrest and held a prisover for several hours, and was not allowed to arrest the criminal, although the defendant was working in the mine where these militiamen were doing guard duty.

There are numerous other instances of military interference with the civil authorities, but I cite this as one of the rankest examples of their lawlessness and disregard for all civil law and authority.

DOYLE EXHIBIT NO. 1.

EVIDENCE OF ALBERT ZINK.

- Q. Are you a citizen of Colorado?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. Seven years.
 Q. Were you in Walsenburg on October 24, the day the shooting took place on Seventh Street?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Were you an eyewitness to that shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just tell in your own way what you saw relative to the shooting.—A. I was painting my house on that day, and a bunch of four or five men came by my house and I heard them say there was a bunch of guards down at the corner drunk, and I went down.

Q. What did you go down for?—A. Oh, I don't know; I just went down to see what was going on.

Q. And when you got down there what did you see?—A. I saw about 15 or 18 guards standing in the alley back of the houses. There was a woman talking to a guard at the entrance of the alley, and I went up to see if the guards were drunk. They did not appear to be drunk, but they all had rifles; then I came back and stood at the corner of Seventh Street.

Q. And from where you stood on Seventh Street, could you see the teams that carried the furniture when they pulled out of the alley?—A. Just as plain.

Q. And when they came out of the alley, they came down the cross street and turned up Seventh?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many teams were there?—A. Three.

Q. And when the teams pulled out of the alley, they came down the cross street and turned to the left and went down Seventh Street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, up to this time was there any firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say all the guards had rifles?—A. Yes; they had rifles and revolvers both.

Q. Did you see anybody else with guns there?—A. None but the guards.

Q. What provocation if any, in your judgment, did the guards have for shooting?—A. I didn't see any; the street was full of children, and they were chasing after them and throwing tin cans and bits of dirt at them.

Q. How many people were on the street, do you think, at the time?—A. As near as I can remember there was in the neighborhood of 200.

Q. Now, from where you stood did you see the first shot fired or did you only hear it?—A. I saw the first shot fired and it was fired by a guard. I don't know who he is. He fired from the corner of Seventh Street, right near the Richards house.

Q. Was this man, who fired this shot, on foot or on horseback?—A. He was on foot.

Q. How many shots in all do you think were fired?—A. About 50.

Q. After the shooting started, what did the guards do?—A. They all lined up across the street and gradually backed away until they got down the cross street quite a ways.

Q. Did they keep on shooting, as they backed away?—A. You bet.

Q. And after they stopped shooting, what did they do?—A. They went in the direction down to the courthouse. I didn't see them after that.

Q. After the guards went away, what did you do?—A. I went around and saw the men that were killed, after which I went home.

Q. Is this the only shooting scrape you know of where the guards did the shooting?—A. I heard some shooting before that yet.

Q. What do you mean, on the same day?—A. No; it was several days before that.

Q. Where did this shooting take place and who did it?—A. It took place at the end of Seventh Street, and, I think, the shooting came from the guards on the Colorado Fuel & Iron property. I heard the bullets whistle and all the bullet holes I saw the next day came from that direction. A German fellow's house was shot through and the bullet passed about 1 foot above the bed, where a boy 10 years old was sleeping. I was in the house the next morning and traced the course the bullets took.

Q. Was there anything done on the part of the authorities to apprehend the parties who did the shooting?—A. Not so far as I know.

EVIDENCE OF H. C. JOHNSON.

Q. Where were you on the 24th of October, 1913?—A. Walsenburg.

Q. Do you know of any persons being shot in Walsenburg on that day?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did that shooting take place?—A. On Seventh Street, six blocks west of Main Street.

Q. At what time in the day did the shooting occur?—A. As near as I can remember it was between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. Did you see anybody do the shooting?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was the party who did the shooting?—A. I don't know. He was a stranger to me.

Q. How far were you away from the man you saw shoot?—A. I was on the opposite side of the street and about 150 feet east of the man I saw shooting.

Q. Did you see any more than one man shooting?—A. I saw three shooting.

Q. What kind of a gun did these men use?—A. Rifle.

Q. Where were you standing relative to the man who you saw shooting?—A. I was opposite No. 627 and the man I saw shooting was on the corner of Seventh Street and the cross street running north and south.

Q. Was this man on foot or on horseback?—A. He was on horseback, but jumped off his horse before he fired a shot.

Q. Did this man you saw shooting hit anybody do you think?—A. Yes. I saw a man fall immediately right in front of Fred Richards's house.

Q. Did this man you saw shooting fire any more than one shot?—A. Yes. He fired several shots.

Q. Did you see anybody else using a gun?—A. Yes. There was 16 or 18 men, some were on foot and some were on horseback, and I should judge I saw two or three men shooting from the ground and several shots were fired from men on horseback.

Q. Was there apparently quite a number of people on the street at the time?—A. There was a man moving his furniture from No. 627 to the camps. The teams were company teams and in charge of the guards.

Q. Where were these teams when the shooting started?—A. They were going up Seventh Street toward the company's property.

Q. How far would they be away from the house where they took the furniture at the time the shooting commenced?—A. As near as I can judge, they would be 100 yards.

Q. Was there any demonstration being made by the men you saw standing around?—A. No.

Q. What, then, in your judgment, did the guards shoot for?—A. There was nothing that would justify the shooting.

Q. Did not the women try to stop the teams from taking the furniture out of the house?—A. I don't know. When I got there the teams was leaving the alley at the rear of the house. I stood and watched them pulling out of the cross street onto Seventh Street, and I should judge the teams were fully 100 yards away when the firing began.

Q. Was there any attempt made on the part of anybody to apprehend or stop the teams from pursuing their way?—A. No.

Q. Did you see anybody throwing anything at the teams or guards?—A. I saw the women throwing tin cans and old brooms and such stuff at the teams and guards.

Q. Were there any school children on the street at the time this shooting took place?—A. Yes. School was just let out.

Q. Did you see anybody shooting outside of the guards?—A. No.

EVIDENCE OF SAMUEL HAUREZ, AMERICAN.

Q. Where were you born?—A. Washington, Ind.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty years.

Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. Between seven and eight years.

Q. Were you in Walsenburg on October 24, the day the shooting took place on Seventh Street?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where do you live in Walsenburg?—A. At 704 Seventh Street. Almost opposite to where the shooting took place.

Q. Tell the committee in your own way what you know about the shooting—A. I was standing in my own yard when the teams carrying the furniture came out of the alley onto the cross street, and there the guards were with them; some were on horseback and some were on foot. After the wagons had turned the corner into Seventh Street I heard a shot and when I looked around I saw a guard bringing his gun down from his shoulder.

Q. Did you see this man fire again?—A. I don't know. There were several shots fired. I saw Jess Russell run up and shoot the Finlander in front of Richards's house. I think he was shot before, because he leaned over and put his hands on his stomach.

Q. How long do you think the shooting lasted?—A. I don't know; perhaps about five minutes.

Q. Did you remain in your own yard all this time?—A. No; there was a bunch of women rushed up on our porch and pushed me in with them.

Q. Did you hear any shooting after you got in the house?—A. Yes, sir. Perhaps two or three shots.

Q. Did you see anybody else with guns that day?—A. No.

Q. Do you know this man Foster who is charged with having a gun?—A. No.

Q. Did you testify in the Foster case?—A. No.

EVIDENCE OF MAURICE TRUJILLO, MEXICAN.

Q. Were you born in Colorado?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. About 12 years.

Q. Were you in Walsenburg on October 24, 1913, the day the shooting took place on Seventh Street?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the shooting yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you come to be on Seventh Street at this time?—A. I live at 634, right across the street from where they were moving the furniture.

Q. And you were there when the shooting commenced?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell the committee in your own way what you know about the shooting. [Here the witness tells the ordinary story of the shooting.] Were there some of the guards mounted and some on foot?—A. Yes.

Q. How many of the guards were mounted?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you notice which way the guards went after the shooting?—A. Some went down toward the railroad track and the rest followed after the wagons.

Q. Were those who followed after the wagons on horseback or on foot?—A. On horseback.

Q. Where were you standing when the first shot was fired?—A. In front of the house where they were moving the furniture from.

Q. And you saw the man that fired that first shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was he standing when he shot?—A. On the cross street near the nigger woman's house.

Q. Do you know this man when you see him?—A. No; I didn't see him close.

Q. Was he on foot or on horseback?—A. On horseback.

Q. Did you see anybody else have any guns except the guards?—A. No.

Q. Did you testify in the Foster case?—A. No.

EVIDENCE OF ALEXANDER OSVIRK, AUSTRIAN.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-one.

Q. How long have you lived in Colorado?—A. Fifteen years.

Q. Are you living in Walsenburg at present?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. About eight months.

Q. Were you in Walsenburg on the 24th of last October?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. Do you know Mr. Proffit?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you with him on that day?—A. Yes.

Q. Whereabouts do you live?—A. I live on Seventh Street now, but at that time I lived at 530 Wyoming Street.

Q. How did you come to be on Seventh Street the day of the shooting?—A. I went with the crowd up there.

Q. What crowd?—A. I was standing by the pool room on Main Street and I saw a number of people going toward Seventh Street and I went too.

Q. Did you know why all these people were going toward Seventh Street?—A. No. I didn't know at this time. I thought there was fighting up there and I went to see.

Q. When you got up there what did you see? Just tell it in your own way.—A. I saw women on the inside of the fence throwing sticks and tin cans at the furniture and hollering "Scab," and the guards was in the alley back of the house looking at the women. After they got the furniture loaded, they pulled out and the guards went with it. When they got out to the corner of Seventh Street the guards began to shoot. The first shot was fired by Jess Russell and killed an Italian.

Q. How do you know it was Russell who fired the first shot?—A. I saw him throw up the gun and fire.

Q. Where were you standing at this time?—A. I was standing right in front of 633; when I saw two men shot, I ran into the house.

Q. Where was Russell standing when he fired?—A. He was at the corner of Seventh Street near Richards's house.

Q. Was he on foot or was he on horseback?—A. He was on foot.

Q. Was there anybody else shooting besides Russell?—A. There was a bunch of shots fired. I thought they were all firing.

Q. Did you see anybody else with guns outside of the guards?—A. No.

Q. How many people do you think there were on the street when the guards began to shoot?—A. There was a big bunch of people, lots of women and children.

Q. How was it that there were so many children there?—A. On account of the schoolhouse there—the school was just let out.

Q. You say you saw Russell fire the first shot; did that shot hit anybody?—A. Yes; he got that Italian. I jumped inside of the fence and got in the clear.

EVIDENCE OF TONY BELICH.

Q. Where were you born?—A. Austria.

Q. How old are you?—A. Thirty-six.

Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. Eight years.

Q. Were you in Walsenburg on that day? Do you know anything about it?—A. Yes; there was shooting on Seventh Street.

Q. Tell us in your own way the story. You were downtown and saw two wagons loaded with guards?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were they going?—A. They came off of Fifth Street, went through to White City, and then came out on Sixth Street, then upon Seventh Street to Mrs. Pisarczyk's house. This number is 627 Seventh Street. When they got there they started to move the furniture onto the teams. When I got there there was one wagon already loaded.

Q. How many guards did you think were there?—A. About a dozen anyway.

Q. Did they all have guns?—A. Everyone had two, not just one.

Q. Did you see anybody else have any guns besides the guards?—A. No; I didn't.

Q. Was there quite a number of people in the street at that time?—A. Yes; from three to four hundred people.

Q. Did you see the men doing anything in the way of throwing stones?—A. No men; but I saw the children throwing them.

Q. Where were you while they were loading the furniture?—A. I was standing in the middle of Seventh Street looking into the yard.

Q. You could see them then loading the furniture from where you were?—A. Yes; I could see them.

Q. How many wagon loads of furniture were there?—A. (No response.)

Q. Did you stand there until you saw the wagons loaded and moved away?—A. Sure.

Q. Where were the wagons at the time of the first shooting?—A. The wagons had pulled out of the cross street into Seventh Street, and the guards lined up on the cross street and began shooting down Seventh Street toward the town.

Q. Did you see the first shot that was fired?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you know the man if you saw him who fired the first shot?—A. Yes; if I saw him.

Q. Did this shot that was fired hit anybody?—A. Not the first one. With the second shot the Italian fell.

Q. Did you see the Italian after he was shot?—A. Sure I saw him.

Q. Was there anybody else shot besides this Italian?—A. Yes; this man, the Finlander, shot in front of Richard's house.

Q. Was that all the people that were shot?—A. No; one Austrian fellow was shot and died the next day, and an American shot through the foot.

Q. What, if anything, in your judgment was there to make the guards shoot at the people?—A. Because the children and women called them scab herders.

Q. They did not offer any violence?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many shots do you think the guards fired?—A. I can't tell.

Q. Would there have been 50 shots?—A. More than that.

Q. And after they had stopped shooting, what did the guards do?—A. They just ran away to the fence of the company ground.

EVIDENCE OF ANNA PISARCZYK.

Q. Where were you born?—A. In Pueblo.

Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. Fifteen years.

Q. Were you in Walsenburg on October 24?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was considerable shooting done here that day. Do you know anything about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you an eyewitness to that shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us in your own way what took place. Whereabouts on Seventh Street did this shooting take place?—A. On the corner of Seventh and the cross street in front of Richard's house.

Q. What in your judgment led up to the shooting? What provocation if any did the guards have for shooting?—A. No provocation. My husband ordered the guards off his property and out of the yard.

Q. What were the guards doing in that yard?—A. Standing with their guns, looking at the people.

Q. Were the teamsters loading the furniture on the wagons at this time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When your husband ordered the guards out of the yard did they go out?—A. Not until "Shorty" Martinez ordered them out.

Q. You heard "Shorty" Martinez tell them to get out of the yard, did you?—A. I did not, but my husband did.

Q. When the furniture was loaded on the wagons and they started to move out of the yard into the alley, and from there on Seventh Street, were you in a position to see the teams as they moved out?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any attempt made to keep the teams from driving away?—A. Nothing except children were throwing stones at the wagons.

Q. Where were you at the time the teams started to move?—A. I was standing in the yard of Mrs. Thomas. I saw the teams drive out of the yard into the alley; then I went out on to Seventh Street and walked along toward Richards's house. I saw the teams when they came around the corner and turned up Seventh Street, and the deputies were following the crowds.

Q. Where you standing relatively when the shooting began?—A. On Seventh Street, near Mrs. Richards's house.

Q. Did you see or hear the first shot that was fired?—A. I saw the first shot.

Q. Do you know who it was that fired the first shot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it?—A. Jess Russell.

Q. Where were you relative to the first shot that was fired?—A. I was in front of Mrs. Richard's house.

Q. Are you positive it was Jess Russell that fired that shot?—A. Yes.

Q. And you saw the Finlander stagger toward the fence and you turned and ran back to Mrs. Thomas's house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any other shooting after that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any other shots?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many shots do you think were fired?—A. So many, I don't know.

Q. Were any of the guards arrested and charged with the shooting?—A. No.

Q. Was anybody arrested charged with the shooting?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. You were summoned as a witness to testify in court relative to this shooting in a case in which a man by the name of Foster was charged with having fired the first shot?—A. Yes; I testified in this case.

Q. Did you see this man Foster that day?—A. No, sir.

EVIDENCE OF MOSE NELSON.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-two.

Q. Where were you born?—A. Walsenburg.

Q. Was you in Walsenburg on October 24, 1914?—A. Yes.

Q. There was some shooting done in Walsenburg on that day; do you know anything about it?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the shooting?—A. Yes.

Q. How did you come to be on Seventh Street at this time?—A. I saw the people going there and I was curious to know what was going on and I followed the crowd. When I got there they were loading wagons up and ladies were throwing rocks and tin cans and they were hollering "scabs."

Q. What did you see then?—A. I came out on Seventh Street.

Q. What did you see from Seventh Street?—A. I saw the teams coming down the cross street and turning up Seventh Street.

Q. Where were the guards then?—A. They were following behind the teams. I saw Jess Russell pull his gun to his shoulder and I saw him pull the trigger and shoot. The first shot killed the Italian. Then I went in the house.

Q. You say that when you got there they were loading the furniture onto the company teams in the back yard, this house, No. 627?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. Now, there was quite a number of people around?—A. Yes; quite a few.
- Q. Did you see any guns or weapons outside of those the guards had?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you see the men make any attempt to prevent them loading the furniture on the wagons?—A. No.
- Q. Did you see the women make any attempt?—A. No. They only threw tin cans and coal and hollered "scabs." They tried to play the hose on them, but it would not reach.
- Q. You saw the teams, did you, when they started to move into the alley and down the street toward Seventh Street?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Where were the teams when the first shooting began?—A. They were turning out of the side street onto Seventh Street.
- Q. And where were you standing at that time?—A. I was standing on the opposite side of the street on Seventh Street.
- Q. From where you were standing, could you see the first shot that was fired?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know the man that fired the first shot?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What is his name?—A. Jess Russell.
- Q. When you saw Jess Russell fire did he hit anybody?—A. I don't know whether he hit anyone, but the Italian fell just as soon as that shot was fired.
- Q. Was there any other shots than this you heard fired?—A. Yes.
- Q. How many shots in all do you think were fired?—A. I can't tell.
- Q. Would there be 25?—A. More than that I think; perhaps 50.
- Q. Now, there were other parties shot besides this Italian you saw fall?—A. Yes.
- Q. Did you see any other people after the shooting was over?—A. I saw the fellow they called "Kris" through the window lying on a table.
- Q. How many people do you think were in the street at the time they started the shooting?—A. Between two and three hundred.
- Q. About what time of day was this?—A. About 3.30 or 4 o'clock.
- Q. Were there any children in the street?—A. Yes. They were just coming out of school up the street.
- Q. After the shooting was over, did you notice which way the guards went?—A. I don't know. I went in the house.
- Q. After the first shot was fired and you saw this Italian fall, you went into the house?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You were not on the street after that until it was all over?—A. After it was all over.

EVIDENCE OF MR. ROMAROVSKI.

- Q. How old are you?—A. Seventeen.
- Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. Four years.
- Q. Where were you on October 24 when the shooting took place on Seventh Street?—A. I was down there where the shooting was.
- Q. What were you doing on Seventh Street at that time?—A. I live on Seventh Street.
- Q. Where were you when the shooting took place?—A. I was standing in front of the colored fellow's house on Seventh Street.
- Q. Did you see anybody shooting?—A. Yes; I saw the guards shooting.
- Q. Do you know any of the guards who done the shooting?—A. Yes; I know Jess Russell.
- Q. Did you see Jess Russell shoot anybody?—A. Yes; he shot at me; and I lay down and he shot through my cap and hit the Finlander in the stomach and killed him.
- Q. There was quite a lot of people around there at the time, were there not?—A. Yes; I think there was about two hundred.
- Q. Were there any children on the street at the time?—A. Yes; school was just let out.
- Q. Did you see anybody do any shooting besides the guards?—A. No.
- Q. Did you see anybody have any guns besides the guards?—A. No.
- Q. How did you come to be down there at that particular time of day?—A. I was down town and I saw the guards going up Seventh Street and somebody said they were going to move some scabs, so I went up Seventh Street to see them move the scabs.
- Q. Did you see them moving the scabs?—A. Yes; the stuff was all loaded on the wagons when I got there and they started out.

Q. You say, started out; where were the teams when you saw them?—A. They were in the yard back of the house; they were all loaded and were just starting out.

Q. And you saw the teams pulling out of the yard back of the house and they came through the alley into the cross street and out onto Seventh Street?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were the teams when you saw the first shot fired?—A. They were coming down the street and the guards were following in back of them.

Q. Did you see anybody throwing stones or tin cans or anything else at the guards?—A. No.

Q. You say that Jess Russell shot through your hat and the bullet hit the Finlander; did you see him shoot more than once?—A. Yes; he shot at me about four times.

Q. Was Russell on foot or on horseback?—A. He was on foot.

Q. Did you see this Finlander after the shooting was over?—A. Yes.

Q. How many times was he shot?—A. Twice.

Q. Did you see any other men that were shot?—A. Yes; I saw an Italian who was shot through the head.

Q. Was he dead?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see anybody else besides the Italian?—A. Yes; I saw a Slav who was shot and died next day.

Q. Did you see any others?—A. Yes; I saw a man who was shot through both feet.

EVIDENCE OF FRED HENNEY.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Walsenburg.

Q. How long have you lived in Walsenburg?—A. I lived here for two years this last time.

Q. Were you in Walsenburg on the 24th of October, 1913, the day the guards did the shooting on Seventh Street?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the shooting?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were you at the time the shooting took place?—A. Right across the street from where they were moving out the furniture.

Q. What were you doing there at that time?—A. I was at my own place of business.

Q. What business are you in?—A. Butcher business.

Q. And from your place of business you could see what was going on across the street?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell the committee in your own way what you saw.—A. When the wagons came out of the side street on to Seventh Street there was a lot of children there, and they began to cheer and hallow "scab" and throw bits of dirt at the wagons.

Q. Did you see anybody shoot?—A. Yes; I saw Jess Russell come around the corner of Mrs. Richards's house and fire into the crowd, and I saw the Italian fall down on the sidewalk.

Q. Was Jess Russell the only man you saw using a gun?—A. No; I saw all the guards firing.

Q. Did you see anybody else using a gun besides the guards?—A. No.

Q. Was the fact that the children were tantalizing the guards the only provocation they had to shoot?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were you when they were loading the furniture on the wagons?—A. I was standing in front of the house where they were taking the furniture out of.

Q. From where you stood could you see into the back yard where they were loading the furniture?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any guards back there?—A. Yes; and Albert who owns the property ordered them out of the yard.

Q. Did you hear him ordering them out of the yard?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did they go then?—A. Just out of the yard in the alley.

Q. How many teams were there?—A. I only saw them loading one team.

Q. Did you see the team when it started to move out of the yard?—A. Yes. That was the time I moved back to my shop again.

Q. Did you see anybody try to stop the teams?—A. No.

Q. And you say that when the teams were turning the corner into Seventh Street you saw Jess Russell shoot into the crowd?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he on horseback or on foot?—A. On foot.

Q. You know Jess Russell when you see him?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there many people on the street at the time?—A. Yes; there was between three and four hundred—perhaps five hundred.

Q. And a great number of these were children, were they not?—A. Yes; the school was just let out and there was all kinds of children and women in the street.

Q. How many guards do you think were there?—A. I don't know. There must have been between 15 and 20—perhaps more.

Q. How many shots do you think were fired?—A. I don't know; perhaps between fifty and a hundred. I done some soldiering myself, and in fast shooting three or four men are liable to fire at the same time.

Q. Did you notice which way the guards went after the shooting?—A. No. I went over where the dead men were and did not see where the guards went.

EVIDENCE OF WILLIAM PROFFITT.

Q. How old are you?—A. Twenty-eight.

Q. Are you a resident of Walsenburg?—A. Yes.

Q. Was you in Walsenburg on October 24 when the shooting took place on Seventh Street?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you know about that shooting, just tell it in your own way.—A. (The witness here tells a well-connected story of how he and two others, Charley Dorte and a man who went by the name of "Alick," a Slav, saw about 20 guards moving through the town shortly after midday and out of curiosity followed them until they finally reached Seventh Street).

Q. About what time in the day would that be?—A. Between 3 and 4 o'clock.

Q. How do you know it was between 3 and 4 o'clock?—A. As I remember, the school children were let out of school just at that time.

Q. Was there many people on the street at that time?—A. Yes; quite a crowd.

Q. Did any of this crowd outside of the guards you have spoken of have any guns?—A. No.

Q. Did you see any men throw stones or anything else at the guards?—A. No.

Q. There was quite a lot of women there was there not?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the women throwing anything at the guards?—A. I saw a woman in the yard next to where they were loading the furniture pick up some pieces of nut coal and toss it over the fence at the mules.

Q. Where was you standing when you heard the first shot?—A. I was on the corner of Seventh Street and in front of Simon's house.

Q. Did you see the first shot fired?—A. No. I only heard it.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I turned and looked in the direction from which I heard the shot fired and I saw a man raise his gun and fire. After he fired he ran down the street and shouted, "line up boys," and the guards ran around and down by him, leaving him at the rear of the line. Then he raised his gun and fired again and shot a man who was standing in front of Fred Richard's house.

Q. Do you know what this man's name is who you saw shoot this man in front of the Richard's house?—A. No.

Q. Can you describe him to the committee?—A. Yes; he had on a gray sweater coat and wore a large mustache.

Q. How many shots in all do you think was fired?—A. I should judge between 25 or 30 shots.

Q. Was there anybody else shot besides this man you refer to?—A. Yes. There was three other shot.

Q. After the guards stopped firing, what did you do then?—A. I started to cross the street to where the man lay who was shot in front of Richard's house. "Shorty" Martinez was coming out of the side street on horseback. He was apparently trying to get his gun back into his scabbard, and he said, "Now see," with a sarcastic grin on his face.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. Yes; but they didn't none of them fellows have any guns, and he said, "no."

Q. What did you do then?—A. I went over and looked at the man who was shot.

Q. Was he dead when you got there?—A. No.

Q. What did you do with this man?—A. I didn't do anything. I went on down the street to where there was an Italian laying on the street dead.

Q. Was this all the dead men you saw?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there anybody else shot during that time do you know?—A. Yes. Mr. Youst was shot through the neck, but I did not see him.

Q. Was there any others?—A. Yes; there was a Slav shot through the neck, but I did not see him.

Q. You mentioned that school was let out about that time. Was there any school children on the street when the firing was going on?—A. Yes; all the school children were out on the street at the time.

DOYLE EXHIBIT NO. 3.

(In pencil:) DENVER, COLO., December 16, 1913.

Whereas the Colorado State Federation of Labor, now in convention assembled in Denver, consisting of over 500 delegates, representing the allied bodies of working people in every section of the State, has been called for the purpose of considering the strike of the Colorado coal miners, and for the purpose of considering the conduct of the militia and their officers, and those responsible for such conduct; and

Whereas the convention has made a careful investigation into the said matters for which it was called to assemble; and

Whereas it is deemed advisable to publish to the people a declaration of the grievances to which said coal miners and their families, and those who sympathize with them in their efforts to better their conditions of life and to obtain greater safety in their work, have been submitted, and to adopt resolutions touching the said situation as it has existed and now exists; therefore, It is hereby declared by the convention, after a careful review of the whole situation, as follows:

First. That the working people of the State of Colorado, without regard to the particular branch of industry in which they are engaged, indorse in the most emphatic and earnest manner, the calling of the coal miners' strike. They hereby pledge to the said striking miners their most earnest, hearty, loyal, and unfaltering support, both morally and financially, in the great struggle in which they are engaged. The working people of this State recognize that the contest of any branch of labor to better its condition is the contest of every workman, and the convention now assembled assures said coal miners that the whole body of the working people of this State stands shoulder to shoulder and man to man with them in the contest in which they are engaged, and will so stand with them until said strike is settled upon honorable and fair terms satisfactory to said miners, no matter how long it may last. The convention sends to the miners in their tents and colonies throughout the State, and to their wives and children, the message to be of good cheer, and to remember that they do not stand alone. The convention bids them to remember, in the face of persecution, that no such cause has ever triumphed without martyrdom. It bids them to bear in mind that they have back of them the unbounded admiration, love, and appreciation of other workers throughout this Nation. It bids them bear in mind that the persecutions practiced upon them so long, first by the coal operators and then by the military satraps, can not go on much longer. Already a brighter day is dawning, and soon the entire State and Nation will shout in unison that their demands may be granted. Martyrdom for such a cause is glorious. Persecution only hastens the day of triumph.

Second. The working people of this State, through their hundreds of delegates now assembled, resent in the most emphatic terms the statements, so industriously circulated by the coal operators and those ignorant of the true conditions, that the strike of the coal miners was brought about through the efforts of so-called agitators, and did not represent the real wishes of the miners themselves. The facts shown by our investigation are that the miners themselves were unanimous in their demand that a strike be called. Week after week, and month after month, for a long time preceding the strike, the men who work underground, pressed upon their local district, State, and national officers their demands that a strike be called, until the pressure became so great that it could no longer be resisted. The men who work underground, those who take their lives in their hands every day and go down into the mines, never knowing but what they have gazed for the last time into the faces of their wives and children, declared that conditions were intolerable.

The mine owners were defying the laws of the State, passed to prevent mines from being mere death traps. The mine owners were continually and constantly cheating their men out of their just wages by giving them false weights on coal.

The mine owners were defying the law which provides for a checkweighman. They were discharging men who undertook to insist upon the enforcement of this law.

The mine owners were violating the law requiring that there be no discrimination against men who join unions. Banded together themselves, they denied the right of the workingman to organize for his own benefit. They rightly argued that with a strong union organization the miners would be in a position where they could make demands and not have to crawl before their employers like serfs, slaves, and peons.

The mine owners were robbing their men through the guise of company stores, at which they were given to understand they must trade in order to hold their places.

The mine owners were using the iniquitous scrip system.

The mine owners, in many instances, controlled the county and precinct officers, for the express purpose of preventing an aggrieved miner from getting justice. Not a single coroner's jury in Huerfano or Las Animas County has for many, many years passed the slightest criticism upon a mine owner, no matter how terrible and shocking was the carelessness which caused explosions in which hundreds of lives were snuffed out. To elect officials who would do their bidding, corruption, bribing, and bulldozing of the most terrible sort have been effectively resorted to by operators and their agents.

The mine owners have at all times had under their command, to do their bidding, large numbers of men hired, paid, owned, and controlled by the mine owners, who were commissioned as deputy sheriffs. Thus, under the guise of law, the mine owner could have arrested a miner, have him carried before and convicted by a justice of the peace, who was another tool of the operator, and have him thrown into jail, in the custody of a brutal jailer, still another tool of the operators.

The Colorado mine owners refused their men a living wage. They continually refused to pay them the wages which the operators in our sister State of Wyoming were glad to pay, while, at the same time, they were, by their combinations in violation of law, continually raising the price of coal on the people of Colorado.

Little wonder that the miners demanded that a strike be called. The great wonder is that a strike was not called earlier. It should not be forgotten, also, that no strike was called until repeated efforts were unavailingly made for a conference with the operators. Like the overlords and feudal barons of old, the coal operators took the position that it was beneath their dignity to have any conference. Patiently and forbearingly and courteously the union officials repeatedly asked for a conference, but none was granted, and then, as a last resort, after many weeks, when the demands of the miners could no longer be denied, the strike was called. To such a strike, forced upon us by the haughty, tyrannical, and overbearing conduct of capital, the workingmen of Colorado pledge the support of themselves, their lives, and their property.

The convention expresses to Messrs. White, Hayes, Green, Lawson, McLennan, Doyle, and other officers and leaders of the United Mine Workers of America, their unbounded confidence in the work they are doing to support the striking miners, and return thanks to Almighty God that there are such men in the ranks of the working people. The convention bids them to remember that Wendall Phillips, Charles Sumner, John Brown, and many other men to whom the American people are now building monuments, were, in their day and time, classed as undesirable agitators. The officers of the United Mine Workers of America are men who know the coal-mining business from top to bottom. They have been selected by the miners as their representatives because they are men of sobriety, industry, energy, intelligence, and loyalty to their brother workmen. It is an insult to common decency and to every workingman in the United States for an employer to say that he will have no conference with such men, and this convention now goes on record that it is its judgment that unless a conference is granted the strike should continue as long as a workingman is left alive in this country.

Third. The convention has carefully reviewed and considered the course of the militia sent by Gov. Ammons to Huerfano and Las Animas Counties. It finds and declares:

1. That the constitution of Colorado expressly provides that the "military shall always be in strict subordination to the civil power."

The courts of Huerfano and Las Animas Counties have been open and actively engaged in the trial of cases, unimpeded and uninterrupted. Yet, John Chase, the commanding officer of the militia, had no sooner reached those counties with his militia, than he declared that martial law was to prevail, and that his arbitrary will was to supersede all law and all courts. Thomas Jefferson, in the famous Declaration of Independence, wrote that one of the greatest grievances of the colonies was that the King of England had attempted to subordinate the civil to the military power. Chase and Maj. Boughton, both of them Peabody appointees and tools of the mine owners of the Cripple Creek days of deportation, formally published an announcement that they had formed a military court which would try and execute striking miners without judge, jury, or counsel. They hoped thus to terrify the strikers into going back to work. That they knew they had no such power, and that they were acting in violation of all decency and law, is conclusively shown by the fact that although this drumhead court was formed weeks ago, Chase and Boughton have not had the courage to dare to put a single man on trial. The convention puts itself on record as believing that the military officers only desisted from their purpose to try men without judge, jury, or counsel by the fear of the terrible retaliation that would follow such a course. The working people of Colorado are peaceful and law-abiding, but if a workingman is ever tried and executed in this State by military commission when the courts are open and unimpeded, then other lynching parties are liable to be formed. If this be treason, let the coal operators make the most of it.

Thwarted in their desire to execute miners without judge or jury, Chase and Boughton have, since the first day they went to Huerfano and Las Animas Counties, violated and trampled upon every constitutional right guaranteed to the people of this country. They have arrested and confined men in prison for many weeks at a time on no charge whatever, and have defied the civil authorities and courts to release them.

They have beaten and maltreated the men, kept them awake at night, starved them, and sought by torture to make them confess to some crime, promising them rewards if they would make some statement derogatory to the officials of the union.

One of the instances of torture was the case of a striking miner, who was set to digging his own grave with the statement by the militia that he would be shot at daybreak.

They have used the militia, not for lawful purposes, but for the purpose of breaking the strike. They have acted as escorts in the bringing of nonunion men into the State and into the mines.

They have recruited the militia from the ranks of desperate and wicked mine guards and private detectives.

They have acted as press agents for the coal operators.

Their militia has robbed and stolen from the houses of the miners, and from the persons of their prisoners.

Not content with making war on the miners, they have insulted and imprisoned women.

They have violated the United States mailing law, and have opened and read the letters of union men.

Chase and Boughton have held men incommunicado for weeks, in violation of all law and decency, denying them the right to see any member of their families or their attorney. This was not done even in the days of Peabodyism. It was not done even in barbarous West Virginia. It was not done even in the Civil War, when the country was in the throes of a national rebellion. It remained for this system of military tyranny to be inaugurated in Colorado under the Democratic administration of Gov. Elias M. Ammons.

They have violated the sanctity of the homes of the miners.

Chase and Boughton have attempted to abridge the freedom of speech, although both the Constitution of the United States and the State of Colorado forbid the freedom of speech being abridged.

They have violated the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State of Colorado in that they have made unreasonable searches and seizures and arrests without warrant and without probable cause.

They have trampled under foot the statement in the constitution of Colorado that courts of justice shall be open to every person and that right and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay.

They have violated the fundamental principle of liberty and constitutional right that every man's home shall be his castle, and have intruded themselves into the homes and by the firesides of the miners and have insulted and reviled them and their wives and children.

They have published fictitious and forged confessions for the purpose of prejudicing the public against the miners.

They have been petty tyrants and mere tools and lick-spittles for the mine owners.

These and many other outrages too numerous to mention have been committed by the military despots, who have been allowed to usurp power and trample upon every right secured by the constitution.

This convention declares now and gives fair warning in the name of the millions of American workmen that these things will no longer be tolerated. No surer or more certain course can be followed if it is desired to turn workmen into anarchists.

We call upon the great body of Americans to not drive workmen into the ranks of the anarchists. The law was not made simply for the rich. There is not a man who will read this declaration but knows that if Osgood, Brown, and Rockefeller, who are fighting the strikers with a malignity hitherto unknown in American history, were arrested that they would not be held incommunicado or denied counsel. Can any fair-minded man blame us for bitterness when the laborer is thus, by the officers of the law, denied the rights granted to the rich? We have no quarrel with the rich man and we seek to prejudice no one against him. We do, however, demand for the laborer every privilege before the law which the rich man has. We frankly avow our intention to get those rights for laboring men. We intend to get them lawfully if we can.

Again, we say, if this be treason, let the coal-mine operators make the most of it.

A FLASK TO CARRY POWDER INTO MINE.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, February 11, 1913.

Mr. B. W. SNODGRASS,
Superintendent, Delagua, Colo.

DEAR SIR: As you know we have succeeded in getting a flask manufactured to carry permissible powder into the mine. I understand that at some of our mines most of the men carry the powder into the mine in gunny sacks and other careless manners. I think you ought to do what you can to induce the men to get these flasks, which we had made for this purpose. They are inexpensive and I think they will last a long time with the proper amount of care, therefore, I would be very much obliged to you to take this matter up fully before the men.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

(Above letter also to Gray Creek, Hastings, Bowen.)

[V. A. M. 12276.]

RECOMMENDATION FROM MINE INSPECTOR.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, February 19, 1913.

Mr. G. H. WILLIAMS,
Superintendent, Radiant, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Herewith a letter which I received from the State mine inspector this morning which explains itself. You notice he speaks about some naked wires in the first right main entry. Will you kindly inform me whether this is a feed wire or return wire. He also speaks of putting in a telephone. I was under the impression that we had a telephone in the mine; however, if we have not, make the requisitions necessary to put one in from the engine house to the foot of the slope.

Return Mr. Dalrymple's letter with the information I have asked.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

TRYING THE FIREPROOF MATERIAL.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, February 25, 1913.

Mr. B. W. SNODGRASS,
Superintendent, Delagua, Colo.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of a letter from W. F. Murray, explaining his method of testing the fireproof paint, and I am somewhat favorable to using it for shelving for the adobe dust and, as recommended by him, I am very much in favor of building a door, treating the lumber as he treated some in an experiment. There is hardly anything that will not burn if it is held in a fire long enough, for it seems to me that it would be a hard thing to get a very disastrous fire from lumber treated as he treated the experiment. It might be that you would have to build some kind of a trough, water-tight, and soak the boards in it before you build the door. I would like to have you try this anyway.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

[The Victor-American Fuel Co. Office of vice president and general manager. Circular No. 157.]

To all superintendents:

At any time in the future when you have any of your employees arrested for violating the statutes or the rules of the company, you will make a notation of such arrests and the punishment they received on the monthly operator's report to the State mine inspector, which is forwarded to this office each month.

Kindly acknowledge receipt of this circular.

W. J. MURRAY,
Vice President and General Manager.

DENVER, COLO., July 1, 1912.

[The Victor-American Fuel Co. Office of vice president and general manager. Circular No. 162.]

To all superintendents:

As you know, we have had a very slow period the last three or four months and the indications for business at present are good. I want you to do everything you possibly can to increase your production so that we may, as the old saying goes, "Make hay while the sun shines." I want you, however, first, to watch the safety of your men, and under no circumstances allow your anxiety to get out coal make you forget to watch the safety of the men in your employ.

Kindly acknowledge receipt of this circular.

W. J. MURRAY,
Vice President and General Manager.

DENVER, COLO., October 2, 1912.

7352 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

[The Victor-American Fuel Co. Office of vice president and general manager. Circular No. 163.]

To all superintendents:

There has been instructions sent out from this office and verbal instructions given repeatedly that no rooms can be turned off an entry inside of the last crosscut; notwithstanding that, it is being done. This positively must be stopped, and you will be held personally responsible for any violation of this in the future.

Kindly acknowledge receipt of this circular.

W. J. MURRAY,
Vice President and General Manager.

DENVER, COLO., October 16, 1912.

[The Victor-American Fuel Co. Office of vice president and general manager. Circular No. 165.]

To all superintendents:

In case it becomes necessary at your mine at any time to carry canvas from the last crosscut to the face of any entry under no circumstances must canvas be put up where there is rock, slate, or other material piled along the rib until after all such rock and slate has been removed, and when canvas is carried from the crosscut to the face there must be as much area for the air to travel as possible.

Kindly acknowledge receipt of this circular.

W. J. MURRAY,
Vice President and General Manager.

DENVER, COLO., November 22, 1912.

[The Victor-American Fuel Co. Office of vice president and general manager. Circular No. 177.]

To all superintendents:

I am attaching herewith a blue print showing a method I want you to adopt to prevent the cars from running over the end of the rails in all dip places in your mine. This is not original with me, as I have seen it worked years ago, and if this prop is kept across the track in the manner it is shown on the blue print it will, I am sure, prevent accidents of the kind we have had in the last few months. We have had two serious accidents from the cars running over the end of the rails, in one case breaking a man's leg, and in the other case injuring one of the men so badly that he died a few hours later. There can be no such accidents as this happen if you insist on the mine boss compelling the men to use this method of blocking. Should I happen to visit any place in your mine that is going to the dip and find the cars without a block of this description, or if anything happens without this block being in use, I will hold you and the mine boss strictly responsible. Accidents of this nature can be prevented, and they must be.

Acknowledge receipt of this circular.

W. J. MURRAY,
Vice President and General Manager.

DENVER, COLO., April 15, 1914.

[The Victor-American Fuel Co. Office of vice president and general manager. Circular No. 179.]

To all superintendents:

Some time ago instructions were issued that in all dip and raise working places a block should be used to prevent cars from running over the end of the rails or running down hill in case the room was raising. I had a blue print made giving my idea of such a plan. On receipt of this circular, write me, stating whether instructions are fully complied with or not.

W. J. MURRAY,
Vice President and General Manager.

DENVER, COLO., August 24, 1914.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW AT YOUR MINE.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, February 26, 1913.

To all superintendents, Colorado division.

DEAR SIR: As soon as matters can be arranged, which will be early next week, we will work eight hours per day at your mine; that is, eight hours will be a day's work for all inside men. This means that there will be eight hours' actual work, commencing work at 7.30 a. m., half hour for lunch, and quitting at 4 p. m. There will be no reduction in wages per day, as the same will be paid for 8 hours as has been for 10 in the past to the inside men. * * *

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

KEEPING THE ROADS SPRINKLED AT DELAGUA.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, March 20, 1913.

Mr. SAMUEL DEAN,
Mine Inspector, Delagua, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Your report of the 17th, under the head of "Conditions of mine," in regard to "Dust" you say: "Dust in Inby of the fourteenth east parting; fourth north has not been kept sprinkled regularly." Some months ago I wrote you a letter on this matter and told you I wanted you to see that the roads were sprinkled, conferring with the superintendents at all times, and to a certain extent you were responsible for having the roads sprinkled. I would like to know whether you have any objection to this. If you have not, why was the road that you speak of not sprinkled?

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

DENVER, April 1, 1913.

W. J. MURRAY, Hastings.

We received to-day from Graman 10 copies of house bill 124 as amended by the Senate and have sent 1 copy to each superintendent.

RECOMMENDATIONS FROM STATE MINE INSPECTOR.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, April 16, 1913.

Mr. M. E. SOMERVILLE,
Superintendent, Maitland, Colo.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of a letter from the State mine inspector's office, with some recommendations which his deputy made on his last visit to your mine. I wish you would proceed to comply with these recommendations, if possible, at once. Notify me when they are completed. * * *

Yours, truly,

THE LAWS OF AN EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, April 22, 1913.

To all superintendents, Colorado division.

DEAR SIR: When we put the eight-hour day into effect at your mine it had not become a law, but since that time it has and the law states that no man shall work more than 8 hours underground in any 24, unless in cases of emergency where life and property are in danger, or words to that effect. * * * If you find at any time that you have to work the men more than eight hours because of the exception that is provided for in the bill, you must state on the time report why the men were working more than eight hours. When you ask any man and compel him to work 9 or 10 hours you are liable. If for any reason he would stay in the mine more than eight hours without your knowledge it seems to me that we are not responsible, however we do not want to take any chances.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

THE NEW MINING LAW AND AIR COURSE.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, April 24, 1913.

Mr. D. J. GRIFFITHS,
General Superintendent, Trinidad, Colo.

DEAR SIR: You know that the new mining law states that at any mine where the air courses are too long for sufficient air not getting to the face of the entries that the inspectors can order the company to sink a shaft or another opening to assist in ventilating the mine in proper shape. Here is something that might, unless there is a great deal of care taken, work serious hardships, and to take care of this we ought to see that the air courses are driven of sufficient width and the area ought not to be reduced by false or other obstruction, hence this is something you ought to pay close attention to in the future.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

CIRCULARS RECEIVED FROM STATE MINE INSPECTOR.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, April 28, 1913.

Mr. JAMES CAMERON,
Superintendent, Hastings, Colo.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 26th relative to the circulars which you received from the State mine inspector, but you doubt whether they will be any more effective than the boards printed at the mines or the one with the sign written in chalk. According to the new mining law there is no virtue in the chalk notices whatever, and it states that all signal signs and danger signals must be printed on a board or iron plate. I wish you would give me the number of signs and the kind you have at your mine at present and I will take the matter up with the State mine inspector and see if he will allow us to wear these out before we are compelled to buy new ones. As I have said before, I would like to have the number of notices of all kinds that you have and where they are placed, and if you have any which the fire boss uses in places where he wants to keep the men out in the morning.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

[V. A. M. 13003.]

DENVER, COLO., May 2, 1913.

Mr. JAMES DALRYMPLE,
State Coal Mine Inspector, Denver, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Along the lines of some correspondence we had a few days ago in regard to educating the men so that they would be able to comply with the mining law when it went into effect, I met all of our superintendents in Trinidad on April 20, and went over all such matters as this very thoroughly.

I inclose herewith a copy of letter which I have received from our superintendent at Delagua. I suggested that he take the matter up with the deputy State mine inspector, and have the following communication from him:

"Deputy inspector says operators are not liable under new law for six months. Does not know whether miners are liable or not. Wishes us to communicate with chief inspector. Please advise."

It is very evident from the stand these men have taken that somebody will have to be punished or some drastic means employed to compel them to take care of themselves.

I would be obliged to you if you would give me your idea or any advice which you think we might pursue in this case.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

CHANGES MADE BY THE NEW MINING LAW.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, May 14, 1913.

To all superintendents Colorado mines.

DEAR SIR: On receipt of this letter I would like to have you write me fully how you are progressing in the improvements and changes to comply with the new mining law which will be in effect in a few weeks. I would like to know what changes, and the number you have made, which the law calls for. I realize that you will have hardly made them all, but I would like to know what has been made and what progress you are making, so that we will be in shape by the time expires which we are given by law.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

CHANGES TO COMPLY WITH MINING LAW.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, May 21, 1913.

Mr. J. W. BELL,
Superintendent, Bowen, Colo.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 19th in regard to your efforts to get conditions into shape to comply with the new mining law. I am aware, of course, that we would have less work to do at Bowen, owing to the natural facilities, to comply with it than at some of our other mines, and my idea was to keep working along the lines of the requirements, so that when the law is put into effect we would be as near the requirements as we could possibly be. It is a question to me whether the pillar boss you speak of will cut any figure when the law comes into force, for, as I understand it, no person without a certificate of competency can instruct miners in regard to doing their work, aside, of course, from the superintendent.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

[V. A. M. 13331.]

DENVER, May 31, 1913.

Mr. JAMES DALRYMPLE,
State Mine Inspector, Denver, Colo.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 29th in regard to any suggestions or assistance we might be able to give in arranging the mining law into different languages. Some time ago—I think you will remember—I spoke to you about my intentions of having several hundred small booklets printed in six different languages. We took the matter up with a Boston publishing house, who finally informed us, after several letters written back and forth trying to correct different phrases in the languages, we succeeded in making them understand what we wanted. I intend to visit the mines south of Pueblo next week, and I will see if they have got any men in their employ who might be able to assist along the lines you suggest.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO HOW TO AVOID ACCIDENTS TO OUR EMPLOYEES.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, June 18, 1913.

All superintendents, Colorado division.

DEAR SIR: We are mailing, under separate cover, a supply of Suggestions as to How to Avoid Accidents to our Employees, printed in six different languages—English, Austrian, Hungarian, Italian, Montenegrin, and Greek. As you will notice, these are particular instructions to miners, drivers, trackmen, timbermen, and trappers. In order to have these pamphlets accomplish the purpose which we thought would guarantee the expense of having them produced, would suggest that you have some arrangement made whereby they could be presented to each employee personally, with the explanation of the different languages in which they are printed and the value of the book both to the employee and employer. We do not wish to make any charges for the book, but want you to impress upon the employees that they are of value and should not be mislaid or destroyed and would suggest that when any party leaves the employ of the company you request them to return the book. It might be well to have this understanding when the pamphlets are given out, avoiding, if possible, the giving of books to any person who can not read any of the six languages in which it is printed. A further supply of these pamphlets will be furnished upon request. Would like to hear from you occasionally as to what benefit, if any, you can notice has been derived from this effort.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

SOME APPARATUS REQUIRED BY MINING LAW.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, July 1, 1913.

Dr. J. R. ESPEY, Chief Surgeon,
Trinidad, Colo.

DEAR SIR: The mining law of Colorado, recently passed, section 89, reads as follows:

“Every mine employing as many as twenty-five men underground shall be equipped with apparatus as follows: ‘One resuscitating apparatus with a suitable supply of auxiliary apparatus and first aid to the injured outfit, including stretcher with woolen and waterproof blankets with each stretcher and a suitable supply of olive or linseed oil.’”

Are all of our mines equipped with first aid to the injured outfits, including stretcher with woolen and waterproof blankets, and what would you consider a suitable supply of olive or linseed oil?

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

SMALL BOOKS OF MINING LAWS PUBLISHED.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, July 1, 1913.

To all superintendents, Colorado mines.

DEAR SIR: If you will refer to the recently passed mining law in Colorado you will find section 28 requires that as far as possible each underground employee shall have a copy of the law, to be furnished by the owner to each employee at first cost. We are sending you, under separate cover, 25 copies of this law, printed in English, which you will notice is marked very plainly on the cover, “Price, 10 cents.” Will you kindly see that these are distributed to all English speaking and writing employees underground and such outside employees as desire a copy? These will be charged against your mine at 10 cents per copy, and you will credit all collections, so that the account will balance when all books have been disposed of. See former letter in regard to the care and returning of these books.

Yours, truly,

W. J. MURRAY.

BOOKS OF MINING LAWS SENT TO YOU.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, July 15, 1913.All superintendents, Colorado division.

DEAR SIR: Some time ago we sent you a supply of books, printed in English, of the new mining law in Colorado. Will you please advise what success you have had in distributing these books to employees and the attitude in general on this subject. A further supply of these books may be had if you do not have sufficient to meet the demands.

GETTING READY TO COMPLY WITH MINING LAW.

[Vice president and general manager.]

DENVER, COLO., July 15, 1913.All superintendents, Colorado division.

DEAR SIR: With an idea of complying with the new mining law in regard to maintaining stretchers, blankets, first aid to the injured outfits, etc., at each mine, will you kindly advise just what condition your equipment is in at the present time at your mine. If the first aid to the injured outfits are not complete it should be restocked at once from the supply of the local surgeon. Also advise the conditions of your stretchers, and if you have sufficient blankets to meet all requirements. A prompt reply will be appreciated.

ALL SUPERINTENDENTS NOT COMPLYING WITH MINING LAW.

[Vice president and general manager.]

TRINIDAD, COLO., December 21, 1913.All superintendents, Colorado division.

DEAR SIR: I find some of our superintendents are not complying with the mining law, and the time given by the last session of the legislature to comply with it has long since passed. On receipt of this letter I want you to get the copy of the mining law which you have at your mine and go over it paragraph by paragraph and check off in pencil any part that you are not complying with. If you will do this you will readily see whether you are living up to the law or not. If you are not in every case, then the parts which are being neglected must be remedied at once. After you have gone over the law thoroughly I want you to write me fully what success you are having in complying with its provisions. There will be no excuse taken for neglecting this.

DENVER, COLO., April 20, 1914.To all superintendents, Colorado division.

DEAR SIR: Has the Manufacturers' Magazine, which the company subscribed for you for the last 12 months, been of any benefit to you whatever? If so, kindly let me hear in what way. By reading and studying it, have you been able to get any information from it that was of value?

Yours, truly,

GOVE EXHIBIT NO. 7.

TELEGRAPHIC CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FRANK E. GOVE, COUNSEL FOR THE VICTOR-AMERICAN FUEL CO. AND CONGRESSMAN ——— AT WASHINGTON.

As indicating the state of mind of the Colorado coal companies for a few days after the Ludlow disaster, the following telegraphic correspondence between Frank E. Gove, attorney for the Victor-American Fuel Co. and a certain Congressman at Washington was offered the commission while Mr. Gove was on the witness stand. Mr. Gove did not at the moment have the correspondence, and it was directed by Chairman Walsh that he furnish it later, so that it might be inserted in the record.

(NOTE.—By mutual arrangement the name of the Congressman is withheld. The name is known to members of the commission, and according to Mr. Gove was not to be disclosed unless it seemed absolutely necessary.)

LUKE GRANT.

APRIL 23, 1914.

— has asked me to wire you situation in detail each day. I will be very glad to do so. Trust you will bear in mind, however, that it is nearly as difficult to get accurate details either here or in Trinidad as in Washington. What I send I hope may be reliable.

APRIL 23, 1914.

To-day's Post contains following message issued from union headquarters here: (Quote:) Robert Bolton, United Mine Workers, Trinidad, Colo.; Charles Haines, United Mine Workers, Walsenburg, Colo.; Thomas Scott, United Mine Workers, Florence, Colo. Please rush messages and repeat back each of them. Three hundred and fifty militiamen left here on special train at 12.25 for strike district. Gen. Chase had command of men at depot. He is believed to have taken 12.15 train. Special coming over Colorado & Southern consists of nine coaches, three baggage cars, one supposed to contain ammunition and two machine guns; engine 628. Denver report says flat car with Gatling gun will be placed in front of engine; also that men will detrain before reaching center conflict. In order that these militiamen with their two additional machine guns may not repeat the horrible Ludlow massacre of women and children, we urge you to watch for their approach across country from La Junta or ordinary route. E. L. Doyle. (End quote.) This practical declaration of war is being advocated throughout the State among union people. We regret the apparent favorable response from various quarters and many newspapers in the State which grossly misrepresent facts are largely responsible.

APRIL 23, 1914.

To-day's Post contains following interview with Lawson: (Quote:) It has now become a war of extermination. We now have the sinews of war backed by guns and ammunition and the faith, loyalty, and financial backing of every union-labor man in the country, and we propose to carry the fight for recognition of the union and have our rights to fair treatment required in the laws of the land respected. It is not now a question of negotiation for the settlement of our wrongs. Rockefeller has declared that he is fighting for the principle of nonrecognition of the union and that he will lose his investments in Colorado and other thousands of dollars in money in support of his position. Union labor over the country presents a united front in opposition to this attitude, and we propose to see it through no matter what the cost. The murder of the women and children at the tent colony Monday caused by the use of explosive bullets and the machine guns, coupled with the deliberate firing of the tents, resulting in an awful harvest of death, has cinched the determination to fight to a finish. (End quote.)

APRIL 23, 1914.

To-day's advices disclose marching of strikers on Rouse mine and at other points under declaration to destroy property and attack militia on its arrival. There has been much indiscriminate shooting from Ludlow northerly all day, but so far as I know no casualties have occurred.

The official report of Monday's fight by Maj. Hamrock, who was in command, is given out by Associated Press to-day. If not published in papers you read advise and I will send by wire.

APRIL 23, 1914—MIDNIGHT.

Gen. Chase and militia left here this afternoon. Since then everything has been quiet all along the line. Strikers from vicinity of Ludlow have been moving north all day. Many armed strikers have been moving south from vicinity of Walsenburg. Dispatches from points near Rugby report several hundred strikers gathering along railroad with expressed purpose of attacking troop train. Train now, midnight, nearing Walsenburg. General public is excited. Extraordinarily sensational stories about murder by mine guards at Ludlow has inflamed many. The truth is gradually coming out here and greater calm may be expected. In the south the Ludlow incident and Lawson and Doyle attitude has so inflamed strikers that apparently nothing can stop them. Four mines near Aguilar have been burned and several dynamited. One of the owners of the Empire mine, who was imprisoned in mine with other men, women, and children, escaped through another mine this afternoon, and was captured by strikers and is still held by them. All wires to south constantly interrupted all afternoon.

APRIL 24, 1914.

I must retract statement that Empire mine owner escaped. Troops left Walsenburg on train at 6.30 this morning. Detrained at Monson, 10 miles south, at 9 o'clock. Now slowly advancing south. Some firing by advance cavalry and few stragglers being sent back. No casualties reported at noon.

APRIL 24, 1914.

Responsible party at Trinidad has just talked to Gen. Chase at Rugby station. General says several hundred strikers who were in one body this morning have split, one branch going back into mountains, the other south toward Aguilar. He is making preparations to follow them, and says he will rescue four men, three women, and six children now sealed in Southwestern mine, equipment of which was burned yesterday, within next hour or so, and hopes to rescue the eight men in Empire mine before night. Little shooting and no casualties at 2 o'clock.

APRIL 24, 1914.

Troops entered Aguilar about 4.30. All parties imprisoned in mines liberated. None dead, but two shot. No armed strikers in sight. Aguilar troops in practical touch with Ludlow detachment. I believe no serious trouble should be now anticipated. Tremendous tension which has existed in southern camps is largely released. Public opinion here still very much inflamed, and papers still printing the wildest possible rumors of wholesale slaughter by and of troops in march south. As a matter of fact, few shots were fired and none hurt.

APRIL 24, 1914.

Quiet everywhere at midnight. Late this afternoon and shortly before governor arrived lieutenant governor and Hawkins, attorney for union, entered into a compact or truce to effect that troops should go no farther and remain inactive and strikers should cease attacks. Directions were forwarded to Chase and strike leaders to this effect. The public is divided, the better element disgusted at executive interference with discretion of military commander in field, the majority probably approving action as restraining the soldiers from further murder, as the press has represented Ludlow incident. Governor now conferring with a number of citizens. He approves truce, but all conferees anxiously perplexed as to future. It is truly a grave problem in the light of labor attitude generally. All sorts of union locals are thoroughly aroused. Wyoming coal miners tender 3,000 armed men as aid. Even typographical union is equally misled by false reports of outrages. Women's organizations also aflame. The so-called truce will, irrespective of its policy or propriety, compel some comparatively calm thought all around.

APRIL 25, 1914.

Late yesterday strikers took possession of the Sunnyside mine and drove postmaster and others out of town. They still have possession. Notwithstanding truce strikers last night drove all men away from Pinon mine and blew up McLaughlin mine tippie and fired many shots into the Maitland property. Forced entrance to Rockvale store and carried away guns and ammunition. The Chandler property in Fremont County was fired into continuously by 90 men from 6 this morning until 2 o'clock. No one killed, but camp riddled. Eight guards unable to repel attack. Upon direction of their attorney strikers finally ceased firing. Possibly some of this breach of faith can be attributed to the absence of notice of truce. Territory occupied by troops quiet to-day. Approximately 500 armed strikers now on streets of Trinidad, and great anxiety is felt there. Military commission appointed by Gen. Chase to investigate Ludlow. Also another committee headed by two judges of appellate courts.

APRIL 25, 1914.

Strikers last night by force secured large amount of explosives from store in Trinidad. At 7 o'clock to-night they reopened the attack on Chandler. The governor will immediately request Federal troops. I trust I am not an alarmist, but in my judgment President should grant this request if constitutionally possible. The situation is certainly beyond the control of the governor. Strikers will, I think, gladly submit to a comparatively small force, but will probably never overcome their hatred of the militia, which they regard as corporation hirelings.

APRIL 26, 1914.

A mob of perhaps 500 or more armed men occupied the streets of Trinidad to-night. The county jail was fired upon. One man was shot on street. First National Bank Building surrounded and occupants fled. Strikers stacked many guns in union hall. Citizens kept off streets and a reign of terror prevailed until a late hour. Now quiet. Firing on Chandler continued until wires went out at 10 o'clock. One company man had been killed and two strikers had then been captured endeavoring to burn houses. Hawkins, strikers' attorney, is now endeavoring to induce leaders to again compel strikers to cease attack. Many appeals from many sources are going to President to grant governor's request for Federal troops. It seems to be a uniformly popular move.

APRIL 26, 1914.

Chandler has fallen into hands of strikers. After 30 hours almost continuous firing into camp the strikers gained entrance under Red Cross flag. At least two camp men killed. Fear is entertained for men and property now held by strikers. Strikers now hold several properties. Some looting of stores and houses, but little actual destruction of property so far to-day. All efforts to secure protection for Fremont County properties from sheriff, militia, or otherwise has been abandoned, and remaining mines there will be surrendered to strikers if attack is made. Radiant will doubtless go to-night, at least that is present prospect as strikers are headed that way. Strikers are putting up tents on site of former soldiers' camp in Trinidad and have control of city.

APRIL 26, 1914.

The governor has finally permitted Chase to send small detachment to Fremont County and will arrive there about 4 o'clock in the morning. Great excitement prevails in town of Canyon City based upon the Chandler episode. They have organized a protective committee. I am bound to think all this unnecessary. Reports are still conflicting as to whether Chandler equipment was destroyed. Best information is to effect that no damage was done. Radiant has not been attacked, and in view of early coming of troops we are hopeful that it will not be. There has been no disorder at Trinidad or Walsenburg to-night.

APRIL 27, 1914.

Men from Chandler here to-day say sheriff Fremont County visited camp yesterday morning and said strikers would thereafter respect truce, but that coroner would arrive later under white flag. Later several groups of men arrived with flag and Red Cross bands on arms. Guards were suspicious but afraid to shoot. Strikers surrounded guards and took town, all men escaping. The camp equipment has not been damaged beyond upsetting furniture in houses and looting store. However, company has not been able to get into possession because of danger of returning over hostile roads. Chase reached Canyon City this morning with about 200 men. Since this force left the southern district trouble has broken out again there. Sopris was fired upon from hills early this morning and all men called from mine. In Walsenburg there has been some shooting near Walsen mine and wife of boarding-house keeper badly wounded. Late this afternoon some of the buildings at McNally mine were burned and all men driven into town. To-night the machinery has been dynamited and tipple burned. All this seen from Walsenburg courthouse. The delay in sending Federal troops is causing widespread disappointment. Possibly knowledge that such an order has issued would help even in advance of arrival of troops. There is much evidence of change of sentiment here. People are waking up to the fact that they have an insurrection at hand and not a band of murdering militia to curb. The strike issue is becoming of secondary importance for the time being.

APRIL 28, 1914.

Attack on Walsen mine renewed again this morning. Detachment of militia which went to Walsenburg last night now flanking strikers in effort to drive them away. Early this morning a vicious attack was made on Hecla mine in Boulder County and is still in progress. Gen. Chase is dividing his forces and is now headed for Boulder County with hundred men.

APRIL 28, 1914.

Attack on Walsen mine has continued entire day. Small detachment militia has not stopped the firing. One hundred additional militia now preparing to go to Walsenburg from Ludlow. Strikers fired on militia in Chandler to-day, but were driven off. Hecla attack has been one of most vicious thus far. Strikers told sheriff of Boulder County to disarm men protecting property or they would. Men in company office telephoned bullets sounded like hail and thought they should be heard here on phone. Chase reached there at 5 o'clock after being fired upon and captured six men. No one else in sight and all quiet to-night there. One man killed in south and one in Walsenburg so far as known. Rumors of more, but not verified. Federal troops from Russell left Cheyenne hour ago. Nothing definite from those from Leavenworth. Mass meeting in Boulder demanded and secured calling of grand jury. Strike leaders and some prominent newspaper men are likely to be indicted for murder. This is the prevailing sentiment in that county. Hickey arrested with others 5 miles north of Denver carrying guns and 1,300 rounds ammunition in automobiles to strikers at Hecla.

APRIL 29, 1914.

Four hundred strikers in two parties attacked Forbes mine for an hour and a half this morning. They burned everything in sight, including 33 mules; killed 7 miners, including 4 Japs; wounded 2 others, who were taken to Trinidad late to-day. Strikers continued firing upon the Walsen mine early this morning. All militia there unable to drive them away. Early this afternoon flanking party reported to have killed a number of strikers, and through attorney in Denver Gen. Chase was induced to declare truce of one hour, with understanding that all strikers would surrender their guns to him at 5 o'clock. Prior to truce one soldier had been killed and two wounded. During truce McNally mine again fired upon and surgeon under Red Cross flag tending to wounded soldier was killed. No guns were delivered at 5 o'clock, nor have they since been surrendered. No shooting in Walsenburg 11 o'clock to-night. Regulars from Russell took over Fremont County district this afternoon. Militia stationed there immediately entrained for Ludlow and are now south of Pueblo. They are going through to Gray Creek and possibly Sopris and Morley, where an attack is expected before morning and before arrival of Regulars from Leavenworth, due to arrive Pueblo 2 a. m. Unnecessary to add all quiet in Fremont County. Boulder County has been quiet to-day.

[Resolutions adopted at a great mass meeting of the citizens of Denver at the State capitol, May 15, 1914, and reaffirmed at mass meeting, Washington, May 21, 1914.]

We, men and women of Denver, assembled in mass meeting, are dealing with a crisis caused by the entire collapse of our State government in a desperate emergency. Our legislature has proven itself impotent or corrupt and our executive has publicly admitted his helplessness. We know that with the dangers threatening the country outside, it is impossible that Federal troops should remain indefinitely upon police duty in Colorado; we know, on the other hand, that their withdrawal means the outbreak of civil war upon a scale even more terrible than during recent weeks. We therefore declare it our conviction that there exists a condition of military necessity such as to justify the President of the United States in using his authority to force an immediate settlement of the dispute upon a just basis to be determined by a Federal commission of conciliation. Inasmuch as it is well known that the miners are willing to submit their cause to such a tribunal, and that the only obstacle to such a settlement is the attitude of the coal operators, we declare it our conviction that the President should use his military authority to close down the mines until the operators decide to yield to public sentiment and the claims of justice and humanity; and that, furthermore, the President should make clear that unless such concession is quickly made he will take possession of the mines and operate them in the interests of the consuming public.

We are convinced that this course of action offers the only hope of an honorable settlement of a dispute which has shamed our State before the world. In order that the facts and arguments which have led us to this conclusion may be properly presented to the President we are resolved to appoint a committee of representative citizens of this State to proceed to Washington and request an audience. And we furthermore invite the representatives of the miners to appoint a committee of women who have personal knowledge of the horrors of the recent civil war to accompany our committee and interview the President, in order that he may be informed at first hand what are the conditions against which this meeting protests.

We believe that in the above resolution we are embodying the opinion of all citizens of this State who are humane and enlightened, and we call upon the public sentiment of the country to manifest its sympathy with us. Raising our hands in this meeting, we declare our solemn resolve that there shall be no more bloodshed in this State, and that the coal strike shall be settled, not according to the arbitrary will of either of the contending parties, but upon a basis of justice and humanity, to be determined by disinterested authority. We believe that such an authority is found in President Wilson. We have confidence in him; we know that the miners have confidence in him; and we declare our belief that if the coal operators have not confidence in him it is because they know that their course can not be defended before the bar of public opinion.

LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 2.

PORTIONS OF THE LUDLOW TENT COLONY INQUEST.

BURNEY B. SIPE, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. Your name is Burney B. Sipe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are the coroner of Las Animas County, Colo., are you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were such coroner on April 20, 1914?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made an investigation into the death of Louis Tikas et al.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will state at this time that the reason for putting you on the stand at this time is to give us the names of the parties who lost their lives at Ludlow on the 20th day of April, 1914. I am not familiar with the names, and I don't believe the jury are. You investigated that matter, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What dead bodies did you know of that were found at Ludlow as a result of a battle and fire that occurred on the 20th day of April, 1914.—A. Alfred Martin, 30 years old; Premo Larese, 18 years of age; Louis Tikas, 35; Frank W. Snyder, 12; Frank Rubino, 23; James Fyler, 43; John Bartoloti, 45; Rogerolo Pedrigone, 6 years old; Celorine Pedrigone; Charles Costi, 31; Cedelmo Costi, 27 years old; Lucy Costi, 4 years old; Onafiremo Costi, 6 years old; Pedro Valdez, 37 years old; Elvira Valdez, 3 months old; Mary Valdez, 7 years old; Eulolo Valdez, 8 years old; Rudolpha Valdez, 9 years old; Frank Petrucci, 6 months old; Lucy Petrucci, 3 years old; Joe Petrucci, 4 years old. That concludes the list of names which I have of the deaths at Ludlow on the 20th day of April.

Q. From your investigation, Mr. Coroner, of the disaster at Ludlow, can you state to the jury how those persons came to their death? Take Louis Tikas.—A. He came to his death by gunshot wound.

Q. Did you examine his body?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many wounds did you find?—A. Three, I think; I am not sure, but I have my physician here, who can tell you about that.

Q. Did you examine him with reference to any other wounds?—A. Abrasions about the head.

Q. Who else was shot or killed at that place, Mr. Sipe?—A. Alfred Martin was shot, Premo Larese was shot, Louis Tikas was shot, Frank W. Snyder was shot, Frank Rubino was shot, James Fyler was shot, and John Bartoloto was shot. The other names which I have read of persons dead lost their lives by fire.

Q. Didn't you fail to state one man, Mr. Sipe?—A. Charles Costi.

Q. Wasn't there another Costi that was shot there?—A. No, sir; that was all that was shot.

Q. Did you bring those bodies in yourself, Mr. Sipe?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know who did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it?—A. I had them brought in by Mr. George, or rather William, Code.

Q. They were not brought direct to your undertaking establishment, then?—A. No, sir; they were not.

Q. Those bodies have all been buried as far as you know?—A. Yes, sir.

TESTIMONY OF DR. PERRY JAFFA.

PERRY JAFFA, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. Dr. Jaffa, you are the county physician of Las Animas County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, with reference to the end of the men, women, and children at Ludlow, you made an examination, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you post the bodies?—A. No, sir; I only made an examination of the bodies.

Q. Did you examine the body of Louis Tikas?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State to the jury the cause of his death, and the condition of the injuries on his body.—A. I will have to use my notes.

Q. Go ahead and use your notes.—A. He had a scalp wound on the right side of the head, about 1½ inches long—done with some blunt object; five bullet wounds—three entrance wounds, and two exit—one entered about the left dorsal region, under the scapula, passing through the left lung and the base of the heart, taking a downward course in the right lung, and lodged near the median line over the seventh rib, under the skin—that bullet was removed; another entered in the lumbar region of the right side, exit in the same side; wound in the second costal cartilage of the right buttock, the exit in the same side; that isn't exact, but about that.

Q. Did these bullets enter from the rear or from the front?—A. From the back.

Q. Did you examine the skull?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know if it was fractured?—A. No, sir; it was not fractured.

Q. What was the condition of his face?—A. It was scratched, and a few contusions about the face.

Q. Dr. Jaffa, in your opinion, what was the direct cause of Mr. Tikas's death?—A. It was due to gunshot wounds.

Q. Have you the bullet with you that was removed from his body?—A. No, sir; Dr. Scannel made the autopsy.

Q. Who else did you examine, Doctor?—A. I examined the other bodies.

Q. What was the cause of the death of the people?—A. I have it down William Snyder. Which is it?

Q. Change your record to Frank Snyder. Now, then, you are going to testify to the wounds found upon the body of Frank Snyder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just go ahead and tell what they were.—A. There was one bullet wound, the bullet entered on the farther end of the cerebrum, about 1½ inches, on the right side; the exit was on the opposite side of the skull—that bullet went straight through.

Q. What was the condition of the skull?—A. Well, the entrance wound was small, but the exit wound was a large hole about 1½ inches in diameter. Now, then, William Fyler, there was a bullet that entered on the right side of the nose, and the exit was at the back end; there was also a bullet wound through the right wrist.

Q. Then, there were two shots that penetrated William Fyler?—A. Yes, sir; two. John Bartoloto had two wounds, one right over the heart, and the other one was a little bit to the right of that, both entrance wounds—there was no exit to either one; he was also shot through the right arm and through the right leg.

Q. That made four shots in him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get any of the bullets, Doctor?—A. No, sir.

Q. But the ones near the heart were sufficient to cause death?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who next?—A. Frank Rubino, I think he had two wounds, both wounds were so close together, right over the right eyebrow, we were a little bit doubtful as to whether it was two wounds, two bullets, or whether the bullet had divided.

Q. It caused his death?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who next?—A. Premo Larese, we could not tell where the bullet entered, or the exit—the entire top of the head had been blown off. There seemed to be a mark like a bullet wound, but we could not tell whether it was the entrance or the exit wound—that mark was on his forehead.

Q. Was there any powder burns on that body?—A. No, sir. Charles Costi, the bullet entered over the right temple; and that concludes the people killed by gunshot wounds.

Q. Now, calling your attention, Dr. Jaffa, to the testimony of Mr. Sipe, you heard that statement, did you not? He gave the names of the people that were found dead out there.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make an examination of the bodies of those women and children?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the cause of their deaths?—A. They were caused by asphyxiation.

Q. Smothered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe the condition of the bodies that were burned.—A. Those that were burned were slight, some very—were pretty badly burned.

Q. Were they burned so badly that their legs came off?—A. Well, Mrs. Costi's arm was burned off, but there were no legs burned off.

Q. Was there a leg on one of the children that was burned off?—A. No, sir; it had been injured in some way, and in trying to get out of there he dislocated it, or it was due to some one falling on it—they were all jammed in so small a place—but, I think, in trying to get him out that it was dislocated.

Q. Dr. Jaffa, did you assist in taking out any of those bodies from that cave?—A. I did not.

JUROR CASIMIRO CRUZ. Did you notice if any of the women or the children had been shot?

A. No, sir; I believe that Frank Snyder was the only child that was shot.

MR. HENDRICK, Doctor, did you visit the Ludlow tent colony for the purpose of seeing where these people were found dead?

A. I did.

Q. What kind of a place did you find there? Just describe it to the jury.—

A. It was a hole in the ground, I would say about 6 feet in diameter, the entrance to it was such that you had to almost crawl into it in order to get in at all; it was very small, probably 2 feet wide and 3 feet high. When any amount of people would get in there, you could not get any air, and asphyxiation would be in a very short time.

Q. What was over the hole, if anything?—A. It seemed to me that there were railroad ties over the top of it, and filled over with dirt.

Q. Was that inside of a tent?—A. There wasn't any tent there at that time.

Q. Well, had the tent burned down at that time?—A. Yes, sir; there were some marks there, and I supposed that a tent had stood there at one time.

Q. Was there any burnt lumber around there?—A. Yes, sir; from the indications there, those people all crowded in there, and couldn't get out on account of the cave being so small, and they afterwards died.

TESTIMONY OF DR. ACA HARVEY.

DR. HARVEY, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. Your name is Dr. Harvey?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your full name?—A. Aca Harvey—Aca Harvey.

Q. You reside where?—A. At Aguilar.

Q. Were you in the vicinity of Ludlow on the 20th of this month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you go there?—A. About 1.30 in the afternoon.

Q. Now go ahead and tell the jury what you saw and did there, give us what experience you had, if any?—A. Well, I didn't go at once to the tent colony because there was firing over there, shooting, shooting at everyone that passed by the road.

Q. Who did?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Where were the shots coming from?—A. From every direction, coming our way, some were shooting from a string of cars that was on the C. & S. E. bridge and from a house and corral on the hillside.

Q. Could you see any of the bullets strike the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know if the mine guards were stationed at either of those places you just spoke of?—A. I believe so.

Q. What were you riding in, if anything?—A. In a buggy.

Q. Who was with you?—A. Dr. Davis. We were stopped in front of Mr. Bayes's house and that is about three-quarters of a mile away from the tent colony. They told us we wouldn't go any farther, that it would not be safe.

Q. Who stopped you?—A. Several people. There was some men in Bayes's yard, there was some children and women there also.

Q. How far away from this corral and house you testified to?—A. I judge it was three-quarters of a mile from that corral and cement house.

Q. The tent colony was between that corral and Bayes's?—A. Yes, sir; in the middle.

Q. Who did those people seem to be shooting at?—A. At anyone that came in sight.

Q. Could they have been shooting at the tent colony over there?—A. They were shooting probably 100 feet above the tent colony. We were on a kind of a ridge over there; Mr. Bayes's house is higher than the tent colony.

Q. Higher than the tent colony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell what next happened.—A. Do you want me to tell what I done there?

Q. Tell what you did there, and what you saw there.—A. Well, we met some parties from the colony that had made their getaway, who advised that just one of us go over to the colony, and so I voluntarily said I would go, and then they advised Dr. Davis to return to Aguilar. So I and Mr. Bayes, he helped me carry my surgical instruments, cases, he said they were too heavy for one man to carry, so we started over to the camp. These people we were talking to said that there was some wounded man up near the C. & S. bridge and up by the pump house, just to the west of the tents. Before starting out I got a white flag and we started over there. We went straight east and turned and got in an arroyo and followed the arroyo up to within 100 yards of the railroad bridge. Then whoever it might have been in that cement house about 300 yards away started to shoot at us.

Q. Who was it doing that shooting?—A. I supposed it was the militia and guards up there. One of those bullets just about struck Mr. Bayes on the head, some whistled by me. In order to get to the bridge I had to pass by an open space. I hugged up as close to the arroyo as I possibly could. I made a run and got by the open space, and I jumped into the bank or a little cave in the bank, cave out. I had my medicine antiseptic solution with me, and unfurled my flag and started to wave that, but every time I stuck it out it would be shot at.

Q. Any bullet holes in that flag?—A. Yes, sir; five or six holes in it.

Q. Have you got that flag with you?—A. No, sir; it is down at Dr. Beshor's office. I waited there about three-quarters of an hour. There was a couple of the union men come there and got into a little pit dug in the side of the hill, and they started to shooting back at whoever was doing the shooting, and when those men seen the people that were doing the shooting they turned their attention to them; then I jumped out of the cave I was in and made a run to the bridge. I found a man there who was shot through the head. He was not dead, but he was dying. I suppose there were about a dozen or fifteen men there. They told me that there was another wounded man in a cellar up by the pump house 100 yards away, the railroad bridge would protect me, so I crawled away and got within 50 or 60 feet of the cellar at the pump house. I filled my pockets with dressings and all the time I was crawling to the pump house the bullets were falling thick and fast around me. About the time I got in there the machine gun turned loose and they kept that up for some two or three hours.

Q. Which direction were the bullets coming when the machine gun was turned loose?—A. All about; I could hear the bullets dropping all over; there was a constant spatter of bullets.

Q. Was any of the bullets that were used explosive bullets?—A. I believe so from the noise they made.

Q. Where were the militia and guards stationed, if you know?—A. Some were up by the steel cars and intrenched behind the banks.

Q. Where was the machine gun located? Was the machine gun on Water Tank Hill in operation?—A. That is south of the depot; I don't know, sir.

Q. You spoke of some man dying down there by the bridge. Do you know what that was?—A. I don't know his name. He was shot in the left side of the head.

Q. He died, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that Charles Costi?—A. No; he was found farther up, south and east.

Q. Go ahead and tell what else you did.—A. When I got to the place those men called a cellar I found in place of a cellar a well. It was about 80 feet deep.

Q. Were there any strikers down there?—A. I think there was four ladies and children at that time. When we would go down 10 feet or so there was a platform, and then down from there was another platform, a stairway down from the first platform, and so on until you get to the landing. There was quite a number of women and children in there, and the wounded man was on the first landing; there had been two men shot there. One of the men that was shot crawled away. He was not so disabled that he could not get away.

Q. The man in the cellar that was wounded, who was he?—A. I don't know. I believe he was a Greek; I took him for a Greek, anyway. Well, they kept that firing up with the machine gun over that cellar or well until it was almost dark, when a freight train came from the north; there was a long string of them, so the people that were in there made their getaway while those cars were going by. Those cars come between us and the parties doing the firing.

Q. What time of day was that?—A. It was getting dark.

Q. What time, do you know, Doctor?—A. No; I don't know.

Q. What did you do next, Doctor?—A. Well, we went down to that bridge and got the wounded man and we removed him over to Mr. Bayes's house and dressed the wounds over there. There was some 25 or 30 women there when I got back to Bayes's.

Q. What next?—A. Well, I stayed all night at Bayes's ranch. There was a few men—strikers—came there, and they were told to go away and not stay there. We thought that if the militia saw any men there that they would fire at the house, so we told all the men that stopped there to go on. They kept the women and children there and cooked and fed them all right.

Q. Where were you when the shooting first started, Doctor?—A. I got over there about 1.30 to Bayes's ranch.

Q. What were the indications around there?—A. I did not look around much.

Q. What was the condition of the tents with reference to being shot up, as to whether or not it was full of bullet holes.—A. No; I don't know.

Q. Did you see the firing that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did the first fire begin?—A. About 7.30.

Q. Did it start from the southwest corner of the tent colony?—A. Yes, sir. It seemed to me that the big tent—the large tent that was used for their meeting and dances, and so forth—was set on fire. Well, the fire started in a little storehouse in the southwest corner next to the railroad, about the third or fourth tent from the big tent. The fire started in the storehouse and spread to the big tent. The fire stopped for about an hour or two and then it started again. We supposed they would all be burned up the next morning. When Mr. Bayes and I got up the next morning there were several tents standing.

Q. What became of them?—A. It looked as though they were pouring coal oil on them. Mr. Bayes got up on his water tower—his windmill there; he got up there, and had a pair of field glasses.

Q. What did he say he saw?—A. He said he saw the uniformed men throwing coal oil on the tents while another would apply the matches.

Q. You didn't see any of this firing of the tents yourself; it was just Mr. Bayes?—A. I could just simply see the blaze when it would flash up from the tents.

Q. Could you say it was the troops that were doing it?—A. No, sir; I am not positive whether it was the troops or not; Mr. Bayes said it was men in uniform. He had the field glasses; I wasn't up on the tower myself.

Q. Doctor, do you know whether or not Monday was a windy evening?—A. I don't think so. I was busy dressing wounded men, and when I came out of the house the firing had started again.

R. J. McDONALD.

R. J. McDONALD, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness was examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. What is your name?—A. R. J. McDonald.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. At Trinidad, Colo.

Q. What have you been doing, Mr. McDonald, in the last three or four or five months?—A. Since the 25th day of December I have been military stenographer for the military commission.

Q. Were you taking notes in investigations, and extending testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you out at Ludlow on the 20th of this month?—A. I believe it was if the 20th was last Monday.

Q. The day of the fight?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom did you go?—A. With the train that was called the reinforcement train.

Q. For what purpose did you go out there?—A. Merely curiosity, as far as I was concerned, Mr. Hendrick.

Q. What time did you get out there?—A. Shortly after 4 o'clock; I don't know the exact moment.

Q. Who was in charge of the train?—A. When we left Trinidad it was in charge of Lieut. Conner; and after we got there Capt. Carson with a few men up on the C. & S. joined us, and we detrained.

Q. How many men were on that train?—A. Eighteen or twenty from Trinidad, and some came down from Segundo.

A. Who were they?—A. Part were mine guards and part were militiamen.

Q. For what purpose were they going out there?—A. About 10 o'clock in the morning I was down in the armory getting ready to go to work, and the telephone rang, and Capt. Foreman's assistant couldn't understand what was said, so when it rang again I answered the phone, and it was Mrs. Linderfelt calling. She said the troops at Cedar Hill were being killed and that they wanted to have help.

Q. You went out there?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Where did the train stop at, Mr. McDonald?—A. This side of Rameyville, that camp back of Cedar Hill, is what I was told. Well, the men detrained there, the machine gun was taken off there. About the time the machine gun was being taken off I noticed an automobile there, a brown automobile, with quite a few people in it; there was a young girl there about 19 or 20 years old; I didn't pay much attention. I heard some one say: "Here is an automobile, so just put the machine gun in it and the driver will take it to the top of the hill, and then it will be just a short distance to carry it." I remember this young lady getting out of the machine. Then two men on horseback came down from the top of the hill and gave some orders.

Q. You remember what those orders were?—A. The orders were that the soldiers should detrain and go up to the hill. The automobile took the machine gun up to the top of the hill, and it was afterwards packed over.

Q. The driver of that automobile was the gentleman that just testified, Mr. Hall?—A. I don't know.

Q. What was done with the machine gun after it was taken to the top of the hill?—A. It was planted, if that is the proper term.

Q. Was it put into operation?—A. Shortly afterwards I heard its fire.

Q. In which direction were they shooting?—A. Probably a mile or a mile and a half to the hills in the direction of the Black Hills; the reason I apprehend that it was about that far is because some of the men were using 30-30's and they were told to "cut it out using the popguns" because they couldn't reach that far.

Q. Do you know if they were shooting at the tents then?—A. Not at that time that I know of but they did later on; it was probably 6 o'clock because some one gave an order and I heard it; some one said "There is 50 minutes yet before dark and we have to take and burn the tent colony."

Q. Do you remember who gave that order?—A. I think it was Maj. Hamrock or Capt. Carson; it was either one of the two, but I heard the order.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. I left there. Somebody said, "We will leave five men with the machine gun"; so we went from the top of the hill over to the steel bridge, and from there over to the railroad cut just north of the Ludlow tent colony.

Q. What occurred there?—A. Mr. Welsh was with me; he followed in the back and got in the Ludlow depot. About that time the firing was pretty heavy.

Q. You went to the Ludlow depot?—A. Yes, sir; probably after an hour's shooting we left the Ludlow depot and went up toward the tent colony. We followed out on the track from the box cars that were standing there, and Linderfelt ordered the men on the steel bridge to cease firing and advance slowly toward the tent colony. He turned around to me and said, "you aren't doing anything else, and you are a fairly intelligent man; you run up to the bridge and give that order." So I ran up to the steel bridge and told the men there that they were to cease firing and advance slowly toward the tent colony. One of the men there said, "Who gave you that order?" He said, "I don't know you and I won't obey it." Probably two minutes elapsed and Maj. Hamrock came down, and he gave the order for them to cease firing and advance slowly to the tents.

Q. Did you see Louis Tikas there that day?—A. I never seen him that day.

Q. Did you hear any one discuss him that day?—A. After we come down from the steel bridge by the railroad cut down there the tent colony was on fire. We heard quite a bit of commotion down there by the water tank, and somebody came in and said that Louie the Greek had been captured, and that they wanted to hang him. I said, "They don't need to hang him; why don't they just take him prisoner?" Mr. Welsh said, "That's none of our business," or something like that. Well, when we started for the depot—I wanted to go to the depot and stay there; I had seen enough and I didn't want to see any more—we met Maj. Hamrock and Linderfelt. Mr. Welsh said something to them about Louie the Greek, and Linderfelt said he wouldn't let them kill him or hang him, "but I broke or spoiled an awful good rifle." He was carrying it by the barrel over his shoulder.

Q. Do you know if he struck Louis Tikas over the head with that?—A. Nothing more than the talk I have heard, but I supposed so. We were about 20 or 30 feet from them when a fusillade of bullets were fired, and we went over the embankment, and then started to walk up the track to the depot, when some one came in and said that Louie had been shot; he said he knew it was Louie because he had a pair of red leggings on and a pair of field glasses.

Q. What time was that?—A. About 7.30.

Q. How soon after that did the tents begin to burn?—A. Before I went down the tent nearest the railroad track was on fire when I first looked.

Q. How did that catch on fire?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see any men around them at that time?—A. There was a commotion over by the arroyo, north of the Ludlow tent colony, some one ran out and said, "My God; God; dynamite," and it went up. Some of the soldiers were in the back of the railroad crossing at that time.

Q. Isn't it a fact that there was a railroad train coming along?—A. There were two freight trains, about 10 minutes apart before the passenger train; it was late that evening.

Q. Do you know if the railroad men had a conversation with any of the soldiers with reference to the fire?—A. I couldn't say; they pulled right through the depot without stopping.

Q. Do you know Mr. Riley, who was on the railroad that day; that train that evening?—A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know if he talked to the soldiers?—A. No; I don't, Mr. Hendrick. After I got down on the railroad cut those two freight trains passed me. I don't know if they stopped any place or not.

Q. At the time you saw the tents burning you were about a half a mile away, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; 600 yards away.

Q. What time did you leave the Ludlow depot that night?—A. At 11.20; I went to Pueblo and Denver.

Q. Were the tents still burning then?—A. Yes, sir. Tuesday night the tents were still burning when I went through, or rather the wood was burning; the frames.

Q. The canvas part was not burning?—A. No, sir; just the frames.

Q. To what extent, when you left that night, had the tent colony been burned up?—A. Possibly 14 or 15 tents in smoke at that time.

Q. At the time the tents were burning did you see anybody in and around them?—A. Well, when I was in the depot one man came and said that there was three pups, dogs tied there, and that he cut them loose, and another one came with an American flag, and some one asked him where he got it, and he said out of the tent colony, that he could not see it burn up. Pretty soon another man came in with a revolver, probably it was a .32, something like that; then another man carried in a double-faced looking face.

Q. Mr. McDonald, you went out there in the interest of a spectator?—A. I went for this reason, Mr. Hendrick: There had been several reports; first there were going and then they weren't going; I didn't have anything to do that day, so I thought I would go out and look over the grounds, never expecting anything like that to happen.

Q. Do you know who operated the machine gun?—A. I don't know his name; he was a militiaman.

Q. Do you know what that gun belonged to?—A. I don't know whether it was gotten from here or whether it belonged to the State militia; I am not positive.

Q. You don't know, Mr. McDonald, whether it belonged to the State militia or to the coal operators?—A. I could not state.

Q. These men that were armed and went out on that train with you, did they have Springfield rifles or Savage?—A. Some were the Springfield rifles and some Savages, and some were the Regular Army guns. They put their uniforms on down at the armory and some just had the Savage 3-30.

Q. Mr. McDonald, what per cent of those men were mine guards?—A. I couldn't hardly state; I think three or four were actually in service here, whether the others belonged to the State militia and were subject to call or not I couldn't state.

Q. Did E. J. Foreman command that squad; Capt. Foreman?—A. He was ordered to don his uniform, and he said he was going up the street, and the next I seen of him was at Denver at the depot Wednesday morning.

Q. So he was not out there?—A. No, sir; he wasn't there.

Q. The guards made up this party that went out that day, they came down from Segundo?—A. I think 20 came down.

Q. Do you know if they brought that machine gun down with them?—A. I don't know. There were three day coaches and a passenger car went out, and in front was a steel car, the most of them men.

WILLIAM SNYDER.

WILLIAM SNYDER, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness was examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. What is your name?—A. William Snyder.

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Snyder?—A. Now?

Q. Right now.—A. At 310 Elm, Trinidad.

Q. Did you live at Ludlow on the 20th of this month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you lived there?—A. Since the 26th day of September, or about that date.

Q. Of last year?—A. 1913.

Q. You went there immediately after the strike was called?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did your family consist of on the 20th day of this month?—A. Five boys, one girl, my wife, and myself.

Q. Where you and your family in the tent colony on the 20th of this month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How were you living there?—A. In a tent.

Q. What kind of a tent; how large?—A. It was 16 by 24.

Q. One room or more?—A. I had it partitioned off, about the center of it was partitioned; I had the lumber in it, about 5 feet, and then the drop curtains.

Q. How old are your children?—A. How old? From 3½ to 11 years and 11 months.

Q. Now, then, calling your attention to the early part of the morning, state what, if anything, unusual happened on the morning of the 20th of this month.—A. Well, the first thing that I noticed in the morning was four militiamen coming to the colony, as I understood it afterwards to arrest a man without a warrant, as I understood it, and that Mr. Tikas told them they could take anyone out of the colony if they had a warrant, but without a warrant they could take no one, as I understood it afterwards. This detail of four, as I understand, that they were to get that man by noon or that they would search the colony. At that time the militia were lined up on the C. & S. E. tracks. So I went in the store and said to my partner, it looks to me like there is something in the wind.

Q. Who is your partner?—A. Bill Barden.

Q. Where is he?—A. In Trinidad.

Q. What else?—A. So Mr. Tikas, as I heard later, heard rumors that the men were lining up on the other side of the track, that the militia and guards were lining up down there, and so he went down to verify that statement; he was a man that did not believe everything that was told to him; and on his way back three shots were fired, I think they were signal shots of some kind, I think it was meant to bring the rest of the militia out of the different canyons.

Q. What did it sound like?—A. Dynamite; it must have been.

Q. That is what it was.—A. In about two or three minutes, I couldn't say exactly, there was another bomb fired off and a third one.

Q. Did they come from the militia camps?—A. Yes, sir; from the grounds that are occupied with the soldiers, where the old K Company used to be. Just when these bombs were fired I looked up the track and I saw men on horseback, I supposed it was the cavalry. I could see those men hurry around that C. & S. track there by the C. & S. E. bridge. So the men in the colony left the tents so that if they started anything that the firing would be directed away from the women and children of the tent colony, as I looked at it. The militiamen were going in a southeasterly direction.

Q. Were the inhabitants of the tent colony leaving the tents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you during this time?—A. I was right there on the grounds, I was locking the store to start for home to protect my wife and children.

Q. What time were those bombs set off?—A. Somewhere between—well, I couldn't say exactly.

Q. Well, approximately?—A. About 9 o'clock or a little after.

Q. How soon after the bombs were fired was it before the firing began?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Tell the jury where the shooting came from mostly, which direction.—A. From the Colorado & Southern tracks.

Q. How long was the fire kept up toward the tent colony?—A. Well, the firing ceased about 12 o'clock at night. I don't know if they kept it up continuously at the tents or not.

Q. Were any of the tents struck by bullets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent?—A. I could not say.

Q. Did you see the tents catch on fire?—A. They were on fire before I got to look at them.

Q. I will ask this question: Do you know whether or not there were any shots fired from the tent colony occupants toward the soldiers?—A. No, sir; not that I know of.

Q. Did you fire any?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you get out of the colony?—A. As I judge, it was between 12 and 1, or 1.30, anyhow.

Q. Was your tent struck by any bullets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often?—A. It was struck four times that I know of, of my own personal knowledge.

Q. State whether or not any of your family were killed.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?—A. Frank, he was 11 years and 11 months old.

Q. Where was he?—A. He was sitting in a rocking chair when he was struck.

Q. Where was he struck?—A. By the temple, and tore out the brains.

Q. Did it affect the remaining brains?—A. Yes, sir; tore them out.

Q. Broke his skull?—A. Yes, sir; we have not been able to find the pieces of the skull.

Q. Tell what happened from the time that he was killed until you got out of there.—A. He was killed, I should judge, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the 20th of April. I had been outside and I heard the bullet pass by me. I had just stepped out, and I heard it strike something. I heard two distinct hits of that bullet; my next boy to Frank, George, said "Frank is shot." I said, "Where?" and I jumped in the other room and caught the boy before he fell out of the chair. Just then a bullet went over my head, and so I had to let the boy down on the floor on the wounded side and I layed down beside him. My wife was in the cave, and I said to her, "Frank is dead." He was still in convulsions. I picked the boy up and put him between the beds. My wife had started to come out of the cellar, and she fell in a faint, so I grabbed her. Then I went and got some water that my wife had been preparing to wash the dishes in and tried to wash the blood off of Frank's face, but the firing come so heavy that I had to stop. Finally I went over to Toller's tent, and from what I have heard since I must have come back in all that heavy machine firing. I got back home and I got down on the floor and took both of Frank's hands—he was just drawing up—and layed them across his chest, and then went into the hole with my wife and the other children.

Q. When did you get out of there?—A. Somewhere around 12.30 or 1 o'clock.

Q. Did anybody come to your tent while you were there?—A. Yes, sir; the militia came there.

Q. Who were they?—A. I don't know them.

Q. What did they say to you?—A. They set fire to the tent and opened it and come in.

Q. They set fire to your tent?—A. Yes, sir. My wife then said, "For God's sake save my children." I didn't want them to know I was there, but just about that time sister said something to me.

Q. What did they say to you?—A. They said, "What in hell are you doing in there?" I told them I was trying to save my wife and children, and they said, "You son of a bitch, get out of there, and get out God damn quick at that." My wife was out by that time; I believe one of the officers helped her out. I told them to hold on, I had a boy killed in there, and they told me to get him out damn quick. I picked the boy up and laid him down outside so I could get a better hold on him. I asked some of those fellows to help me carry him to the depot, and he said, "God damn you; ain't you big enough?" I said, "I can do it." I took him on my shoulder and sister by the other arm, and just then some one of the militiamen stopped me, and said, "God damn, you son of a bitch, I have a notion to kill you right now;" he said, "You red-neck son of a bitch; I have a notion to kill you right now."

Q. Do you know who he was?—A. I think I do; he is a guard in uniform.

Q. What is his name?—A. I would rather not tell it unless I just have to.

Q. Will you tell it to me in private?—A. Yes, sir. My wife kept on pleading. He said, "You have done as much shooting as anyone else around here." And I just kept on going until I got to the depot.

Q. Did your wife go with you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the tents burning at that time?—A. Yes, sir. While I was passing Snodgrass's store this man—that officer, Mr. Linderfelt—flashed a light and said, "What God damn red neck have we got now?"

Q. Which one said that?—A. The one we call Jesus Christ.

Q. Do you mean E. K. or K. E. Linderfelt, the man with the bull face?—A. That is right; he is bullfaced.

Q. He is a captain?—A. We used to call him lieutenant, but I think he is up in ranks now.

Q. Why did you call him Jesus Christ?—A. He told Mrs. Lowe that he was Jesus Christ, and that the other fellows were his Jesuses, and so we always called him Jesus.

Q. Where did you stay the balance of the night?—A. At the Ludlow depot.

A. Who was in there?—A. Some gunmen and militiamen.

Q. What were they doing?—A. Some laying on the floor, sleeping; some joking and passing different remarks, joshing. One of them said, "I got one red-neck son of a bitch, and at daylight I will go up and get another one."

Q. Did you stay in the depot all night?—A. Yes, sir; we had to, and about 5 o'clock they let me go over to Frabar's house, just before the No. 7 train was due.

Q. Did you know Louis Tikas during his lifetime?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is dead now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Mr. Fyler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how many women and children perished in that hole?—A. I heard that 11 children and 2 women and 1 man.

Q. That is right, according to the coroner's testimony.—Mr. Snyder, you have lived in the tent colony practically ever since it started?—A. Yes, sir; that is the only home I ever had and the only one I ever knew of.

Q. Do you know of any reason why those militiamen and guards should have burned that tent colony?—A. Just to get rid of us.

Q. Do you know whether or not the militia or mine guards or anybody else ever threatened to burn the tent colony? Or have you ever read it in any of the Trinidad papers?—A. I didn't have to read the papers. I am not positive, but I believe I have read it in the papers that they would clean out Ludlow. I was told to get out of the county by one of the militiamen and for me to stay out.

Q. You were told to leave the county?—A. Yes, sir.

JUROR. Were you ever at the ball game on Sunday?

A. No, sir.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM HALL.

WILLIAM HALL, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness was examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. State your name.—A. W. J. Hall.

Q. What is your business?—A. Automobile driver.

Q. For whom?—A. For myself.

Q. Did you have your automobile out near Ludlow on the 20th day of this month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the occasion of your being out there?—A. I was out at Tabasco, Mr. Hendrick.

Q. Did you go through Ludlow?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about what happened out there that day?—A. Nothing, except I was there when the special train went out with the militiamen, and so forth.

Q. What, if any, experience did you have?—A. Well, I came out from under that cement bridge that the train passes over about half way from Rameyville, and I was stopped.

Q. Who stopped you?—A. I presume he was a militiaman. I then recognized Capt. Carson. He was telling me to stop; he waved for me to stop, rather; there were others there that I did not recognize.

Q. What time of day was that?—A. Shortly after 4 o'clock.

Q. Who was with Capt. Carson, if anyone?—A. There was from 50 to 100 men there with him that I did not recognize.

Q. That train was going north to Ludlow?—A. Yes, sir; but everybody got off there by Rameyville.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any of those men as to what they were going to do?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they say anything to you or not?—A. One of those men asked me to drive the machine up the hill for them; he told me he wanted to put the machine gun in my machine, and asked me to drive the car back for him.

Q. Did he say anything to you about what was going on at Ludlow?—A. Not to me.

Q. Did you hear him say anything to anyone else?—A. Things were said at random to everyone, but not to me.

Q. What did you hear said there?—A. I heard some one ask where the militia and guards were located and where the strikers were.

Q. Those men were on the train, you say; where did they get off?—A. At Rameyville. Jack Cold loaded the machine gun in my machine. Jack took care of the machine part of it, and another fellow held the tripod, and I took it up the hill for them.

Q. Where was the machine gun unloaded at?—A. Right at the crest of the hill by the C. & S. E. tracks, Mr. Hendrick.

Q. Was that near the big steel bridge?—A. There is a general large hill near the steel bridge. That is where the machine gun was unloaded at.

Q. What were they going to do with the machine gun?—A. They did not say anything to me.

Q. What did they take it out to Ludlow for?—A. I don't know; I presume to shoot.

Q. Mr. Hall, did you hear any order given there that day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were those orders?—A. The orders were for those men to go in and clean out that colony. For them to drive everyone out and then to burn the colony.

Q. You heard those orders, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they put any ammunition in your machine?—A. Yes, sir; they put some boxes in there; I supposed that it was ammunition.

Q. What kind of boxes did they put in your machine, if any?—A. Big long boxes; the dimensions were probably about 6 inches high and 12 by 18.

Q. Were they machine-gun shells, or what was in those boxes?—A. I didn't know. Some were machine cartridges, I suppose, and some of the boxes had been opened, and all the men were loading up with ammunition.

Q. Those orders were to go out and destroy that colony and to burn the tents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who gave those orders?—A. I don't know; some man in uniform.

Q. Some man with shoulder straps on?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Had you ever seen him before?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Have you seen that man since?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, then, Mr. Hall, after they loaded that gun in your auto you took it up so far for them, and then they carried it the rest of the way, did they not?—A. Yes, sir; I took it to the top of the hill.

Q. How long after that was it before you heard any shooting?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you hear the machine gun in operation?—A. I heard something that I thought was the machine gun.

Q. Describe what kind of a noise it was making. Was it a rapid noise?—A. It was very rapid, Mr. Hendrick.

Q. Did you leave there and come back to Trinidad?—A. No, sir; I stopped at Rameyville.

Q. What did you stop at Rameyville for?—A. We were not in a position where there was any firing; we were on the hill.

Q. Did you hear any of the shooting where you were at?—A. Yes, sir; we could see the dust raise.

Q. How long did you remain there, Mr. Hall?—A. In the neighborhood of an hour and a half. It was 6 o'clock when we left Rameyville for Trinidad. I stopped on the hill, and if the firing had come my way all I would have to do would be to drive down the hill and be out of range of the bullets.

Q. Who was with you, Mr. Hall, if anyone?—A. Mr. Ryan and his daughter and another fellow, I think his name is Laird; he is a friend of Mr. Ryan's.

Q. Did you see the tents burning?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Hall, do you think you could recognize the parties that gave orders to clean out the tent colony? Would you recognize the man that put the machine gun in your machine?—A. I could recognize several of the parties, the one with the machine, but I don't believe I know who gave those orders, Mr. Hendrick.

Q. Did you carry that machine and ammunition in your automobile, voluntarily or not, Mr. Hall?—A. No, sir; I did not do it voluntarily, Mr. Hendrick. Those men seemed to have full authority over the car, and from the way I have seen them act around Trinidad here, I thought it would be best not to refuse to carry that stuff for them. I was under the impression that it was of no use to try to resist letting them have the car.

Q. Do you know if there were two machine guns from Trinidad?—A. I do not. However, if there were two machine guns from Trinidad I didn't see it, but I don't think that there was but one. Unless there was a possibility of two being clamped together, and I don't believe there was.

Mr. HENDRICK. That is all.

JOHN F. HARRIMAN.

JOHN F. HARRIMAN, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness was examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. State your name please.—A. John F. Harriman.

Q. What is your business?—A. Railroad conductor.

Q. Of what road?—A. Of the Colorado & Southern; freight conductor.

Q. Between what points on this division do you run?—A. Pueblo to Trinidad.

Q. When making your trips do you pass Ludlow?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State to the jury if you passed Ludlow on the 20th of this month.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What direction were you going on that evening or day?—A. Coming south.

Q. Did you pass the Ludlow tent colony, or what used to be the Ludlow tent colony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what time of day?—A. About 7.05 p. m.

Q. Who composed your train crew?—A. Engineer Bashford, Fireman Mack Alexander, Head Brakeman A. J. Riley, Rear Brakeman J. H. Gordon. We also had passenger on, Mr. Lowery, the D. & R. G. coal inspector.

Q. What is his first name?—A. I don't know.

Q. When you reached Ludlow that evening what, if anything, attracted your attention at or near the tent colony?—A. When rounding a curve, perhaps a mile and a half north of Ludlow, just on top of a hill, I noticed a fire. I was in the cupola in the caboose I first took it to be the depot, but I couldn't tell until we got closer what it was.

Q. What did you discover it to be?—A. The tent colony. The strikers' tent colony.

Q. Which tent was burning?—A. The first tent; the first three tents on the southwest corner were burning.

Q. Did you stop your train?—A. We stopped; yes, sir.

Q. State what occurred.—A. We come in there about 7.05 p. m. We were to take the sidetrack and let No. 2 pass; we were to take the sidetrack; the switch is nearly opposite the colony, only a little bit south of the opposite side when we stopped to take the sidetrack, when the gunmen and the militia under the tank, about 15, stuck their guns in the engineer's face and told him to get out, and to be God damn quick about it, we made no effort to go to the sidetrack then.

Q. What did you do?—A. We pulled out of there right away; we stopped there not to exceed a minute or two minutes, and we pulled through the switch and didn't stop any more.

Q. Did you have any conversation, or did Mr. Bashford have any conversation, with what you termed as gunmen, with reference to the burning of the tents?—A. I believe they told me they were shooting up the colony.

Q. Is the engineer here?—A. No; he went out on the 1.30 train to-day.

Q. Was he subpoenaed, Mr. Coroner?—A. We was; but we could not find him.

Q. How long did your train remain at Ludlow, Mr. Harriman?—A. Not to exceed two minutes; we got away just as quickly as we could, the firing was so hot.

Q. Did you or any of your crew make any effort to extinguish the fire?—A. No, sir.

Q. How many men did you see there with guns?—A. I had about 36 cars on the train and that put me back quite a distance, about four times twelve or thirteen hundred feet back of where the engine was. When I saw the tents were afire I jumped down from the cupola and went to the back door of the caboose and stepped out, the bullets weren't in my range, but just as I started to get back in a bullet sung by me through the air, so I went back in the car and went to my desk and blew out the light and hung my lantern up, and when we started to pull up I looked out the right-hand side of the door, on the right side of the tracks, and I could see the guns flash toward the colony from the point on the steel bridge across the arroyo and past the tank, when we got to the tank I saw several flashes.

Q. Do you know how many were there?—A. No; I don't; under the tank I would judge about 15. They laid along all the way to the pump house to the tank, this side of the tank, clear up to No. 2 switch, and that would be about 1,000 feet.

Q. Did you notice any soldiers come in the depot?—A. We didn't stop there; we kept on going. I looked out on the left side when passing the depot, and I didn't see anybody.

Q. Do you know how long those tents had been burning?—A. I should judge but a few minutes.

Q. How far were those men from the tents?—A. Well, along the track under the tank, just outside of the right of way, and they were on the other side of the right-of-way fence, about 1,000 feet from the right-of-way fence, to the first tent, or maybe 150 feet.

Q. Did you notice any persons at or near where the tents were burning?—A. No, sir; nothing but women and children crawling out of the right-of-way fence. They seemed to be, as I concluded, taking the advantage of the train while we were between them and the soldiers, and they were crying. I saw as many as 15 or more women and children getting out of there while we stopped there.

Q. Which direction were they shooting then?—A. Toward the colony; that is, according to the flash of the guns.

Q. Anything further you know, Mr. Harriman?—A. I don't believe there is anything else I could say.

JUROR. Was there any shooting from Water Tank Hill?

A. That is near the C. & S. E. bridge near Ludlow. I didn't see anybody there; it was dark.

JUROR. Did you hear the machine gun there?

A. The train was making considerable noise, and if there had been any shooting to any great extent I might have heard it, but I couldn't say.

Mr. HENDRICK. That is all.

A. J. RILEY.

A. J. RILEY, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows:

Witness was examined by District Attorney J. J. Hendrick:

Q. What is your name?—A. A. J. Riley.

Q. What is your business?—A. Freight brakeman on the Colorado & Southern.

Q. Between Trinidad and Pueblo?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you a member of that train crew on last Monday night, the 20th of the last month, coming from Pueblo to Trinidad?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You came through the town of Ludlow?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you approached the town of Ludlow on the north, what did you see?—

A. My attention was attracted to the fire; the blaze of the tents.

Q. What part were you on?—A. On the engine.

Q. Your train stopped there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what occasion?—A. We had to let the passenger train pass us there. I saw the tents blazing, two of them. Then I saw a man in a military uniform touch a blaze to the third tent.

Q. Repeat that, I didn't hear you.—A. I saw a man in uniform touch a blaze to the third tent; this was at 7.05 p. m.

Q. How many armed men did you see around there?—A. I judge there were about 100 strung along there from the arroyo and the pump house up to about No. 2 switch in the yards.

Q. That is, almost to the depot?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was on the engine besides you?—A. The engineer, Bashford, and fireman, Alexander.

Q. What, if anything, was said by any of the armed men there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said?—A. Ten or fifteen stuck their guns up to our faces and told us to move on and to be damn quick about it or they would shoot us.

Q. Did you say anything to those men?—A. No, sir; not a word.

Q. Who were those men that stuck their guns up in your faces?—A. Uniformed men.

Q. Did you see anyone that didn't have a uniform on?—A. No, sir; I didn't notice in particular.

Q. Did you see any women and children there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they going?—A. Along by the right of way, screaming and crying.

Q. Where is Mr. Alexander?—A. He is on the engine to-day.

Q. He and Bashford both?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything further you can state?—A. Nothing; but there was considerable shooting from the right side of the track from the guards.

Q. Was there any machine guns in operation that night?—A. The train was making considerable racket, so I couldn't have heard; but I did hear rifle shots.

Q. The machine was south of the depot by that steel bridge, on what is called Water Tank Hill. Have you seen that?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know if it was being operated?—A. No, sir.

JUROR. Did you hear any shots fired from the colony?

A. No, sir.

Mr. HENDRICK. That's all, Mr. Riley.

Mary Petrucci, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, on oath testified as follows: That her name is Mary Petrucci; that affiant had started to wash, and a little later heard two bombs go off, and noticed the soldiers running toward the steel bridge, and they started to shoot down at the colony; affiant states that it was about 9 o'clock; and then affiant went into her cellar hole; that when affiant went into her cellar hole she took her three children, ages 4 years, 2½ years, and 6 months, respectively; that affiant remained in the cellar until 6 o'clock in the evening, when her tent was set on fire; affiant states that her tent was the first one fired, as her tent was No. 1; affiant states that her tent was the tent nearest the railroad track; affiant states that when the shooting commenced with the machine guns the bullets were so thick in the tent that she shut her cellar door; that about 6 o'clock in the evening affiant saw some fire on her cellar door, and on looking out saw that her tent was on fire, whereupon she took her three children and went to the cellar hole occupied by Mrs. Costa and other women and children to affiant unknown; that shortly after affiant reached the above last-mentioned cellar hole the tent took fire, and the women and children commenced to cough, and they were all choked with the smoke; affiant further states that she lost consciousness until the next morning, when she touched and called to her three children, and they were all dead; affiant states that she went to the Ludlow station and came to Trinidad; affiant states that she does not remember anything of the trip from Ludlow to Trinidad; that affiant was taken sick with pneumonia caused by exposure and grief; affiant states that on account of being ill she never saw her three children after leaving them in the cellar hole; affiant states that when she came out of her cellar hole the guards were shooting after her, and she started to the cellar hole where Mrs. Costa was because it was dug in under like a mine, and affiant thought it would be safer, and the guards yelled, "Get away from there"; affiant states that she had the three children, and she had nowhere else to go, so I went in there.

Further affiant saith not.

STATE OF COLORADO, Las Animas County, ss:

William Snyder, of lawful age, being first sworn, on oath deposes and says: That his name is William Snyder. On Monday morning, April 20, at 8 o'clock in the morning, or about, after the gunmen had lined on the Colorado South-eastern tracks, they sent a detail of four to the Ludlow tent colony, presumably to arrest one man without a warrant. We refused to give up the man without the due warrant of law; that the said detail said that they would get their man if they had to search the camp; that we were to produce that man by afternoon or they would search. They went over to old Company K camp and reported, and from there they fired three signal shots, dynamite, I guess, or they would search. They went over to old Company K camp and reported, and from there they fired three signal shots—dynamite, I guess they were using—and all guards began to pull out of the canyons, that comprises the two canyons, and also between 20 and 30 cavalry on horses left the Company K camp and crossed the C. & S. track, main line, by the depot and took position south of the C. S. E. tracks. Our men realizing that trouble was in the air, in order to avoid a massacre and the shooting of men and children, went to the C. & S. E. tracks on the north and took up a position against them to keep them away from the women and children; that the gunmen, to start trouble, undoubtedly fired the first shot, and from that time on the battle raged, they using their machine gun, three machine guns being in action; that at about 4.30 our men, running out of ammunition, had to retreat, and from that on the Baldwin-Felts took our position and the colony, and they shot up the colony with the machine gun and rifles and started to burning the tents, not stopping to look if there were any women, children, or anybody else around. Owing to us turning our arms into the militia several times they took advantage of our unarmed situation and tried to carry out the threats that they had made—that they would clean Ludlow out, and did.

I myself, not being armed, stayed on the tent-colony grounds to protect my family to the best of my ability, and that about 4.30 p. m., when the thugs or militia had right flanked our colony and shot through my tent and killed our boy, showing clearly that they did not stop to see whether there were any women or children on the colony ground or not. Just previous to the time the boy was shot he got out of the hole or cave, where my children were, to get his sister a drink of water, and as the firing had slackened the children had left the hole, being out of the hole from five to eight minutes, and stepped into the bedroom of my tent. The boy Frank was sitting in the chair with his sister on the floor between his knees, and he was in the act of stooping to kiss or caress his sister when the bullet struck him above the temple on the right side and blew his brains out. I was standing near the front door of my tent and I heard the impact of the bullet striking the boy's head and the crack of the bullet as it exploded inside of his head. The boy was killed by an explosive bullet. I went to the boy to render what assistance I could, and while falling I caught him in my arms and in the act of letting him down to the floor two more bullets passed over me in the tent. Then I went to the hole where my family and children were, and seeing the boy in his death struggles went to him again; was in the act of washing his face when another bullet went over me. The firing became so heavy that I went to my family and stayed in the cave with them until they burned the tents. They fired this tent of mine by standing by the southeast corner with a piece of paper on fire in their hands, and as the tent was blazing they came in the tent. This I observed by looking out of the hole where we were located. As the tent was in flames they opened the door and came in, and then my wife pleaded to save her children, telling them they had already killed one, and for God's sake to save the others. Whereupon this officer assisted Mrs. Snyder from the hole and the other children.

By this time there was five or six of the militia or thugs in the tent and wanted to kill me; and I asked them to let me get my dead boy to the depot, and to which this officer consented, after cursing me, putting a gun to my head and threatened to kill me, and on leaving the tent with the corpse I laid him down outside of the door and put on my coat and I requested some one to help me carry this boy to the depot, when I was told that I was big enough to carry him myself, and which I did over my shoulder and my 3½-year-old daughter in my arms, when George Tittsworth, sr., who, to the best of my knowledge, set fire to the tent, threw a gun on me and said, "You God damn dirty son of a bitch, I ought to kill you right here; you have fired as many shots as anybody," and he touched my head, or nearly so, with his revolver and said, "I will kill you." My wife pleaded in behalf of her dead boy to let us get him to Trinidad, and this officer escorted us to the depot, but on passing Snodgrass's store at Ludlow Linderfelt threw his flash light in my face and wanted to know what "God damned red neck S. B. they had here," when Mrs. Snyder says to Linderfelt, "Please don't shoot him; they have killed one of my children already," when Linderfelt says, "It is a damned pity that all of you damned red-necked bitches were not killed." But we kept on till we got to the depot, and there the floors were covered with the thugs and provisions that had been robbed from Snodgrass's store, and they were joshing and making remarks over their day's work. While lying there listening to these remarks I heard one in particular say that he knew he killed one at the bridge and would have to go down at daylight and try and get another one. I heard several say they had killed one, two, or three, and they thought that they had a pretty fair day's work, but also thought themselves that the regulars would be in the next night.

I was called into the baggage room to be consulted by some officer in regard to the leaders and Louis Tikas in particular. They asked the question if Louis Tikas was not the cause of the troubles and a leader of the Greeks, and I answered, "No; he was the interpreter." They asked me if I saw a gun on Tikas, and I told them "No." They said, "Well, we killed him to-day and found a gun on him." Then they asked where the gunmen got their arms and ammunition; I said, "I do not know." I did not have any myself, so I was then asked what I was coming to Trinidad for. I told them as I had no place else to go at present I had to go to Trinidad to get relief and a place for the family to stay and to bury my boy. I was then advised I had better get out of this country altogether.

At the time the machine guns were turned on the tent colony the strikers were taking to the hills on account of their ammunition being used up.

Before the signals were fired Louie, having been notified that the south of the C. & S. E. tracks were swarmed with the militia with machine guns in position, pointing toward the colony, he went personally himself to see, and while coming back to notify the colony of the conditions the men had found out for themselves and started back to direct the fire away from the women and babes. All my earthly effects and cash were destroyed.

Further affiant saith not.

AFFIDAVIT.

I lived in Ludlow tent colony from September 25, 1913, until it was destroyed. We lived peacefully and happily together. We had no trouble whatever unless interfered with by guards or militia. On the — day of October we observed an automobile passing. It stopped, one man got out of it, and a shot was fired into the tent colony. That shot passed right over my head. This started a battle which lasted a couple of hours, during which no one to my knowledge was hurt. I was not in Ludlow colony during battle which followed a couple of days afterwards. I do not know, of my own knowledge, what happened at that battle. After that we were not annoyed until some time in November. One Saturday, it being pay day at the colony, some ranchers came down for their pay. Mrs. Odell and I did not have lamp chimneys, so Mrs. Haddow and I decided to go to Cedar Hill, that being the nearest place we could purchase them. When we left the colony the men were lined up receiving their pay. When we got to the section house we saw about eight guards on horseback coming toward us and coming fast. I said to Mrs. Haddow, "I would not be surprised if there would not be a fight when we come back." The guards always stationed themselves at the steel bridge, while fighting the union men, in order to protect themselves. To reach our homes, on our way back, we had to pass under this steel bridge. Before we got to the bridge on our return, two of our men, Italians, I think, told us to turn back, that the guards were shooting at them. Before we could turn the guards saw us, and began shooting toward us. We were compelled to go back to Cedar Hill and stay in the store until 9 o'clock, when the battle ceased until next morning. Our men, in order to protect us, always went to the hills, so when the guards started to shoot, our men had taken their guns and gone into the hills. The battle began again Sunday morning and lasted until afternoon, when word was received that the militia was coming. On Monday Dr. Lyons made a speech to the men, telling them to give up their guns to the militia. The miners gave up their guns. I do not know how this last battle started, for when I left our men were all in line ready to receive their pay.

Apparently the militia was all right. Some of them came to our dances. They were treated fine until they started searching our tent colony. Company K, when they came to search, treated us respectfully, but other companies treated us rotten. On the 31st of December, 1913, they came down to search, saying they were looking for guns. I told them we never have any guns in our house.

There was a company from Berwind, and six of this company came with their officers to my tent. He said to the men, "Tear up every damn board in the floor." They tore it up, and soon the officer came by and said, "Has your tent been searched?" I told him "Yes," and showed him where the boards had been torn up. I asked him if I could nail my floor down. He told me "Yes." My husband just got my floor nailed down when he came back and had it torn up again. This continued until my floor had been torn up three times. He said to one of the fellows in Company K, "Did you go through this damn stove?" The soldier replied that he did not think ammunition would be put in a stove where they had fire. Nevertheless, he was made to search the stove. I had a tent where I had my furniture stored. They handled my pictures so roughly that all the glass was broken and mirror in my dresser smashed.

The last time they searched, their excuse was that they were looking for some one who had been shot, and after they got in the colony, they searched the tents. This time they went through cupboards, dresser drawers, trunks, examined mattresses, but destroyed nothing. After that everything went on all right until the 19th day of April. On that day we were having a ball game. Four of the militia on foot, and one on horseback came to our ball ground. The four on foot had rifles, which were pointed toward the crowd. The soldiers had attended the ball games before, but had never brought their rifles. I thought to myself, "They are going to try to start trouble," but did not say anything. One of the men said to them, "You may watch the ball game, but it doesn't need guarding." The man on horseback then called to the man and told him he wanted to speak to him. The miner said he did not have time as he was playing ball. The soldier said, "I'll take you to the guardhouse and make you have time." A number of us women stood by and jollied the soldiers. One woman said, "If we women would start after you with baby guns you would drop your rifles and run." I turned around and laughed. He said, "Never mind, girlie, you have your big Sunday to-day, and to-morrow we will get the roast." I did not answer, but laughed again. He said, "It would only take me and my four men to clean out this bunch.

Then we went home and everything was quiet. In the evening we went to a dance. My husband came in and told me I had better go home, because those four men had come down to the tent colony and were trying to start trouble, but nothing happened until next morning, April 20, when a little after 8 o'clock I went up to Mrs. Jolly. She, Louis Tikas, and I were looking at some pictures that we had taken of our Easter Sunday ceremonies, when some one came in and told him that there were four militiamen there to see him. When he went out a soldier handed him a piece of paper with a man's name who was not in the tent colony. Tikas asked him who gave him authority to get this man, and did he get his authority from the civil authorities. The soldier told him no; he got it from the military authorities. Tikas told him that he understood that the military authorities in Las Animas County was out of commission. The soldier then said: "If you don't produce this man by afternoon, we will search the tent colony." Tikas then asked if Maj. Hamrock was up at the military camp. The soldier said, "Yes." Tikas told the soldier he would like to speak to Maj. Hamrock. Then they went away, the spokesman saying in a mean manner: "All right, we'll be back again." We went back to Mrs. Jolly's house to get the pictures I was looking at. I went home, put them in an envelope, and had them all ready to send when some one called: "Look out for trouble; the militia is coming." My children had just got out of bed, and were not all dressed. I ran out to see if the militia was coming. When I got out I met Mrs. Thomas, who said: "We had better take our children and go to the pump station, for I think there is going to be trouble." I did not think myself that there would be, but I told her to take my children, and if anything did happen they would be there. I then went over to where my husband was, in front of the tent colony, when I saw Tikas running toward the colony waving a white handkerchief, and when he was near the tent colony one bomb was fired. Before the second was fired he was in the tent colony and the machine guns began firing. On hearing the bombs our men started toward the D. & R. G. tracks on their way to the sand hills to lead the fight away from the tent colony. As Mr. Costa went by me I said: "Charlie, be careful, the soldiers are all around those hills." He said: "We must lead the fight away from the colony, or those machine guns will kill every woman and child in here." My husband told me to run to the children. I ran to the pump station and got in the barn. I stayed there until 7 o'clock at night.

From about 10 until about 5 o'clock shooting was almost continuous, not ceasing more than from three to five minutes. From about 3 to about 5 o'clock the bullets around us rained like hailstones, several of the bullets passing through the barn where we were hiding. I can not be sure of the time, but I should judge it to be about 6 when I first saw the tents burning. Mr. Barton said our only hope of escape would be if a train should come by. About an hour after a freight train came by, and I, with my children and about 14 others, I think, started for the arroyo. After we came out of the barn I looked to see if I could see any of the militia, and saw four standing behind a barn above us. As I stopped to get under the fence, two shots were fired at me, and missed me by about 2 feet, striking at the feet of a woman with a little baby in her arms. I laid still several minutes fearing to move. The woman fainted, and her baby fell. I can not remember how I got this woman, her baby, and my children into the arroyo. I remember seeing a dead man. I had heard him with others singing "The union forever," after he was shot in the afternoon. We went from the arroyo to Baye's ranch, and stayed one hour. It was not safe there, so we went to another ranch about 6 miles from there. We got a wagon from Mr. Bayes, put the old women and children in the wagon and the rest of us walked to this ranch, arriving about midnight. About 9 next morning Mrs. Thomas and I started to the Black Hills, a distance of about 6 miles, to secure water for the men. When we got at the foot of the Black Hills we met 10 Greek boys, who told us they had taken the men water so we need not go farther. We met a man in a wagon who took us back to the ranch. Later in the afternoon he brought us to Trinidad. I did not have on sufficient clothing when attacked, and my children were barefooted, not being fully dressed. I lost all of my possessions in the Ludlow battle.

AFFIDAVIT.

I was in Ludlow during the fight. I live close to the depot. My husband was not a striker, being a railroad man. About 9 o'clock Monday morning, the 20th, I was washing my hair, when my husband came in and said to me: "Come here quick to me; come here quick; I want to show you something." He pointed up to the C. & S. E. track to the left side of the steel bridge. I looked and saw two machine guns and saw men fixing breastworks and men all along the track with rifles. Two men on horseback came galloping down from the direction of the steel bridge in a very great hurry. They passed me and met a number of other men, I presumed, to get orders; then all turned and started back in the direction of the steel bridge. As they passed us one of them, a Mexican, shouted: "Good, we're off." When I saw all this it looked like there was going to be trouble. I ran across to warn my neighbors. I noticed several men on the ball ground. I had not noticed any excitement at the tent colony. I came right back home. Then the bombs went off and the machine guns and rifles began. We immediately went to the cellar. We occasionally put our heads up out of the cellarway and watched.

Shortly after the bombs went off we could see men with rifles, with mining caps on, as though they had come out of the mines, come across between the cars from the direction of the military camp. During the day my husband and I stuck our heads up out of the cellar, and a fellow in uniform cursed my husband terribly. He pointed a gun at my husband and asked him if he was a son of a b—— and a red neck, and said if he was he would kill him. I pushed my husband back into the cellar and told the man we were not strikers but railroad people.

He said: "What in hell are you hiding for?" I told him we had to, on account of the shooting. We remained in the cellar until about 4, when the switch engine picked us up and took us to town.

MRS. MARIAN DERR.

AFFIDAVIT.

I lived in Ludlow tent colony about 7½ months. On Monday morning, April 20, about half past 8 or 9 o'clock my brother John, the two Mahady boys, and myself went to the ball ground to practice. Seeing the militiamen and the union men running for the hills, we ran to Snodgrass's store for a hiding place. After we got to the store we decided to go to the tent colony to get our clothes. We just got started when one of the bombs exploded, and we ran back into the store. The other bombs went off after we got back into the store. We stayed in the store until about 4.30 or 5 o'clock; then a shot went near a window, another passed near, and we went into the cellar. We stayed in the cellar until about 6.30 next morning. At about 2 o'clock we heard an awful racket in the store above us. I heard one ask another for a match. We thought our time had come. The dog belonging to the Italian kept whining and scratching at the cellar door, but they did not discover us. The next morning about 6.30 we got out, got into a buggy belonging to an Italian rancher, and were trying to get away. Two guards pulled their guns on us and told us to halt. The Italian kept driving on, but I grabbed the lines and stopped him. They told us to get out of the buggy and hurry up. They told us to come up to them and asked us where we were going. In order to get away we told them we were going to work for the Italian on his ranch.

They asked us if we knew anyone around there, and we told them, "No, we didn't." They took us up to the C. & S. depot and called some one. Linderfelt came out. They had Dave Stewart and Rudolph Carson there, and when we came up he said to turn the other boys loose and hold us; that we looked guilty. They stood us up in front of the depot. The Italian was standing a little too far from my brother, so a soldier poked him in the ribs and made him cry. In a couple of hours an officer asked if we had had anything to eat. We told him we had nothing since the morning before. He told us to go with the guard to a store over by the post office and get something to eat. We told him we did not have any money. He told us it did not make any difference; we did not need any money. We went over and carried a lot of stuff over to the depot. I didn't care for much to eat just then, so ate a couple of apples and a bottle of soda water. They kept us here until 2 in the afternoon, and then took us over to the cookhouse. The cook told the officers he wanted us over there. Before they gave us our breakfast that morning they sent my brother, myself, and the Italian and a Greek, Mike Pappas, down near the pump house with cartridges. They said they wanted them to kill our wap friends with. Before this they told us to put a Greek who was shot in the foot on the train. Then we went to the military camp and carried water, coal, washed dishes, cooked, and did everything they asked us to do.

A man shot his gun accidentally at the depot. His name was Elston, I think. He belonged to the artillery. They took him prisoner and placed him guard over us. He was drunk nearly all the time. He cursed us and called us waps and red necks. While in the military camp I overheard them talking about starting to burn the red-neck store, but an officer came along and stopped them. While we were prisoners at the depot we saw Mr. Snyder putting his dead boy on the train. He was wrapped up in a white sheet. When we took the cartridges down near the pump house we saw Louis Tikas and Mr. Bartle lying dead by the road. The militiamen told us that Louis the Greek came out from the tent colony that night and begged for his life, saying he hadn't done anything to anybody and didn't want any trouble with anybody. They said at first they were going to hang him, but they told him to run, and then they shot at him. Some of the soldiers told us that Linderfelt wanted to make us run and then turn the machine guns on us, but some of the men said they would not stand for it, and went and got Maj. Hamrock. They said he said we had not done anything, and they did not need to do that.

One fellow by the name of Masters kept blowing about taking a watch from Mr. Fyler after he was dead. He cursed him and called him a red neck. It was either Mr. Fyler's watch or one just like it. They said Mr. Fyler came out with a bag of money in one hand and a gun in the other. They told me they wanted him and they got him. One of them said if he had been up when Mr. Snyder went away he never would have got away, that it should have been him killed instead of his boy.

They said Mrs. Jolly came out with a Red Cross, that she was working in a red-neck hospital down there, and that they shot her in the arm. They took two Slavs off the mixed train, searched them, and, when they found union cards, took them prisoners and took them up to the camp to work. One of the Slavs had a pretty good pair of shoes on; one of the guards told him to take his shoes off. The guard's shoes were worn out. He took his shoes off. He asked the Slav if his (Elston's) shoes would fit him. The Slav put them on and said, "Yes." Elston then told him to keep them, and he put on the Slav's shoes. Elston took the Greek's shoes and cut all around the heel. I did not see Elston do this, but the Greek said so, and I saw the shoe. He made the Greek work one night and all next day without sleep. They were harder on the foreigners than on us. They made us work from 6 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night. Once we worked till after 2, another night until after 3. When we would get through Elston would take us to a box car they called the guardhouse, and tell the other guards to shoot us the first move we would make. A couple of nights after Maj. Lester was killed the guard, Elston, cursed us, called us red necks and waps, and told us if we made a move he'd kill us, that he had a notion to bore a hole in us anyway. I asked him what a wap was. He said I was a wap. Then he said foreigners were waps. I told him I was raised in this country the same as he was. They said they killed 13 women and children in one hole.

Lieut. Lamey (I don't know whether this is exactly right, they called him Lamey) seemed to feel sorry about it. They cursed Mr. McLennan, and said they wanted to kill him. They told all of us not to speak to him. He looked so downhearted I spoke to him anyway. I do not think they saw me.

One of the officers told the guard to treat Mr. McLennan with respect because he was the president of the union. The lady postmistress out there they called red-neck postmaster. They did not like her either.

On Thursday they asked us a few questions. They asked us if we knew anything about the fighting; about who started it. We told them we did not know anything about it. We were afraid if we told the truth they would kill us. They then said they were going to hold us until they could get a lawyer there to take our affidavits. On Sunday night we were brought before Capt. Van Cise, Maj. Boughton, and some other military officer. They asked us if we knew who started the fighting and if the union men had made any preparations for fighting. We told them we did not know anything about it. We lost all our clothes. I did not even have a coat on.

They asked us why we did not go back to work. They said they would give us an order to any mine we wanted to go. I told them I didn't need any order, I knew all the superintendents and could go back without an order. They freed us Sunday night, but we had no money. We were afraid to walk for fear some one would shoot us, and we were afraid to ride for fear some of Linderfelt's bunch would get hold of us, and that would be worse, until Friday night when they gave us a ticket and sent us out. I had a little water spaniel that I thought so much of. He must have stayed in the tent because his hair and eyes were burned. He came to us Tuesday and they would not let me keep him. I felt sorrier about that than anything. We came to Trinidad Friday night.

Mrs. Clorinda Padilla: About 9 o'clock I heard two signal shots fired, and about five minutes after they started to firing with the machine guns, shooting to the tent colony at Ludlow, and then I put my four children in the hole we had made under the tent, and we stayed there in the hole without food and water until about 11 o'clock at night. They were shooting all day long, never stopped a minute. During the day I heard Mr. Snyder say that his boy had been killed. The tents were full of holes, like lace. I came out of the tent for a minute to get something for the children to eat, and while I was out there they began shooting again and a bullet came close to me, and then I went back into the hole. At some time late in the afternoon they started to burn the tents. When the tents were first fired, they did not burn my tent; later in the evening the soldiers came back to fire the rest of the tents, and they heard my children crying, and they said, "There is a family in there," and they helped me out and took me and the children to the depot. While at the depot three Mexican guards got mad at the women and said they ought to be burned in the tents.

I was going up to the store in the daytime, and the guards were all around the tents, and they start to shoot at the tents, and I only had time to get hold of my baby son, about 10 years old, and get into the pump; and the soldiers came up and tried to shoot inside where we were, and that came out of the pump when they tried to shoot with the machine guns and went into the arroyo. There were two dead men, and they jumped right top of them. Couple of soldiers came out of the arroyo and was going to kill both of us, and the little boy raised up his hands and said, "Don't shoot, for my mother's sake." I had a machine, and the soldiers took it out, and a lot of other stuff, and took it to the depot and kept it. They stole a trunk full of my clothes; I saw them take it with my own eyes. I had $5 in money that was stolen. They told me that I should be happy that you all were not killed.

Mrs. James Fyler, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says: That her name is Mrs. James Fyler; the first we know is three soldiers came down and demanded of Louis Tikas that he give them a man that they wanted in the tent colony; that they wanted him; and he asked them who gave them authority to come there, and they said that they came under the military laws, and he told them that the military laws were out, and that they could not have anyone in the tent colony, so then they went away and Louie told them to send Maj. Hamrock down and he would talk with him, and they did not send him and Louie went to the depot to meet Maj. Hamrock, and they had quite a conversation up there and the first we saw of Louie he was coming down waving his handkerchief for the crown to go back, as soon as he got in sight of the tent colony, and when he got to the tent colony Mrs. Dominsky and I were standing there, we were the only two that were out right in the crowd, and I walked over to my husband—he was looking for a pair of field glasses—and I asked if he had saw my boy, and he told me no, he had not; so just then they shot off one of the bombs and one of the machine guns on the D. & R. G. tracks; those were the first shots that were fired, and Louie waved his handkerchief at us and said, "Good by, I will never see you any more," so then we made our escape to the pump station. That was about 2 o'clock when the shooting started, and we stayed there all day, then, without even any water, food, or anything. Then, about 4.30, I would judge, they turned the machine guns on the tent colony with full force, and I should judge about 6 o'clock the tent colony started to burn, and about 7 o'clock a freight train came in from Aguilar, and we made our escape to the arroyo, and then we made our escape to Mr. Frank Bayes's ranch, and from there he hitched up his team and took us to Wineberg's ranch, and we landed there about 2 o'clock in the morning, and about 12 o'clock the next day we came to Trinidad. We got to Trinidad about 5 o'clock in the evening, and there I learned of my husband's death. I did not know he was killed until that time. The Sunday before, at 10 o'clock, we had a ball game, and we played the men and we got through about 1 o'clock; then we all went to the Greek's for our dinner, and then after that Louie took our pictures five different ways with our bloomers on; then we went back and played another game of ball in the p. m., about 2 o'clock, and during our ball game there were four of the militia came down, and each one carried a gun, a rifle in their hands, and we remarked about it on account of it being the first time they had ever carried guns at the ball game.

Affiant further states that from the time the shooting started in the morning there were only four men there on the grounds, the others having fled to the hills.

Further affiant saith not.

Mrs. Ed Tonner, who is about to become a mother, of lawful age, being first sworn, upon oath deposes and says: That her name is Mrs. Ed Tonner. At about 10 in the morning I was in my front room tent sweeping and I heard the two bombs fired, and I started grabbing for my five children, and to throw them into a cave right under my front tent, and I stayed there until about 8 o'clock at night. All this time from 10 in the morning until 8 o'clock at night the machine guns were going. Mr. Snyder came along and he said "My oldest son, Frank, has half of his head blown off," and he said "If your children wont lay down, slay them and make them lay down rather than have them killed," he said, and he held out his two arms like that [indicating] and they were full of blood, and it seemed that after he left his tent that the machine guns turned loose all the more. My tent was so full of holes that it was like lace, pretty near. It could have been about 4 when little Frank got his head hurt, and a little while after this they tried to set the tents on fire. I kept bobbing my head up and down, and Mr. Fyler said, "For God's sake keep your head down, or you will get it blown off." About 6 o'clock they turned around and tore the tent between the two tents, and they set the broom on fire with coal oil, and they set the tent on fire, with me right underneath with my five little children, then Gusta Retlich she helped me out with the children, grabbed them up, and then we run to a Mexican lady's tent farther down, and then Louie the Greek helped me, he helped me down into a hole and threw water in my face as I was fainting with all the children, and then Louie the Greek heard some Mexican baby cry, and he said, "I must go and see what I can do for it," and then after that he says "You people had better hit it for that ranch over the Bayes," and we stayed there until the next night; they were shooting at the ranch house, although we had a white flag out, but they shot just the same. Mr. Bayes then took us to another ranch called Powell's ranch. They let Mr. Bayes then take us to another ranch called Powell's ranch. They let Mr. Bayes through all right and back all right, but when he got back to his ranch they fired on him and hit one of his mules in the thick part of the leg, and the next morning we went from Powell's ranch to Aguilar. I was not expecting anything like that and I had very little clothes on. A thin skirt and a mother-hubbard apron, and my oldest shoes. Everything that I had in this world was lost. I lost a $35 watch, $8 chain of my own; gold watch of my husbands, worth about $25; and then I had a hair chain of my own hair, worth $5; watch charm of my children's hair, worth $5; $16 pair of glasses; bracelets of my little girl's, worth $5; opal ring, $7; $10 in money. Not a thing left in the world.

And we stayed in the cellar all day until the soldiers took us out about 3 or 4 o'clock in the p. m. They would come inside of the tents and take the best things and then set fire to the tents. LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 3.

JUNE 5, 1914.

MY DEAR COLBY: Of course I need scarcely tell you that I appreciated so much our visit. I have been giving some consideration to writing you the kind of letter that you suggested, namely, in stating concretely what my idea was as to what Mr. Rockefeller, jr., might do in the present situation in Colorado. Of course I differ so vitally and fundamentally with Mr. Rockefeller upon some of these big questions that I suppose I have a right to assume that he would not think of doing some of the things that I would like to see him do. I think, of course, it is one of the greatest opportunities a young man ever had in the history of the world to actually be a Christian and to put into practice the advice of Jesus Christ to the rich young man. Of course to put that into practice would require Mr. Rockefeller to busy himself in studying the present industrial and economic conditions in this country and finding out how he can best dispossess himself and those about him of their possession and their power, which means, of course, to change the laws of property under which they were able to create the conditions that are responsible for them. I say this in all kindness, and, of course, if Mr. Rockefeller could understand me, which, I quite understand, is practically impossible, he would not feel the slightest offense at my frank expression of views concerning not so much him, but the conditions that are responsible for him and those with him. In a measure, except as I am interested in the wonderful opportunity of Mr. Rockefeller, I am rather indifferent to what he does, because he can no more stop or seriously interfere with the evolution (as I hope it will be rather than revolution) now going on in the world—as men become more enlightened and intelligent—than he could interfere with the orderly processes of birth in nature. It may not come in his time, my time, or yours, but it is just as sure to come as there is a God in heaven. The laws of property and the conditions that are largely responsible for misery, crime, and the kind of slavery in this country that is chiefly responsible for Mr. Rockefeller's power and wealth, are going to be abolished or changed to more nearly approximate real justice. I am one of those who trust and hope and will work for its abolition peacefully and through the kind of laws that we already have, but I am also one of those who really fear very much that it will have to come forcibly. My fears in this respect are largely due, not to the extremists, the radicals, the Socialists, and the anarchists, but to the blindness of men like Mr. Rockefeller and those around him.

I hope neither you nor Mr. Rockefeller will misunderstand me. I am perfectly aware and credit Mr. Rockefeller with perfect sincerity in believing that he is a Christian, but of course—according to my philosophy and beliefs and understanding—I do not think that he is either a Christian or begins to approach Christianity. But I do believe that because I want to regard him as sincerely blind, that if he could only see the light he would really be what he now only thinks he is—a Christian. Sauls or St. Pauls are just as possible in this day and age as they have been in other days. Some of the most progressive men I know were just as blind 10 or 20 years ago as Mr. Rockefeller seems to be now. And right here let me say that I do not wish to judge him. I may, of course, be mistaken, but I am merely drawing my conclusions from what he is purported to have said and what I know he has done.

But I must not use my opportunity to write you by attempting a discussion of the problems that would perhaps only be futile for our immediate purposes. My real purpose in seeing Mr. Rockefeller was as follows:

First. Just as I have visited men in prison, who were there largely through conditions in their lives, and I visited them because I wanted to help them.

Second. Because I wanted to try and convince him that he could help himself by helping us in our present struggles in Colorado. My plan was this: To present some phases of this situation that I feel he knows nothing about and that he has never seriously considered, that would justify him in saying to me personally that I could say to President Wilson that while he did not admit that he controlled the situation or that he believed personally there was anything to arbitrate, or that their company was in any way to blame for conditions in southern Colorado, that nevertheless if the President saw fit to appoint a commission made up of men of known integrity, fairness, and justice, who might be acceptable to him, that he would use his personal influence with his associates to get them to consent to submit to arbitration by such a commission, and that he personally—under the conditions mentioned—would permit the public to know that he was using his personal influence to that end. The reasons, of course, would be that there were other people who did not agree with him that there was nothing to arbitrate, and that by consenting to such an arrangement it would restore peace—at least temporarily—to our distracted State. If Mr. Rockefeller, jr., would have asserted himself, even to the extent here mentioned, even though it did not result in an arbitration, it would have been of great help to him and others who would like to see a better understanding in this country between capital and labor. And, of course, I believe that if he would have sincerely taken that attitude (and, of course, I believe it would have been sincere) it would have resulted in the President appointing such a board and both sides consenting to abide by its findings. At least, the effort would have been more than worth while and would have put Mr. Rockefeller in a much better position before the public than he now occupies and given us a hope in this State that we do not seem now to have.

I feel rather grateful that because of my experiences in these struggles that I positively do not feel any of the bitterness that generally attend it, and the things that people say about me do not at all disturb me. If I can be of any small service in helping to change the conditions that are chiefly responsible for the difficulties we are facing in this country, I shall count it a privilege, and in that sort of work it would have been a pleasure to me personally to have met Mr. Rockefeller, to have understood him better, and I hoped to have had him understand me better. I very much fear, however, that under the circumstances that would be impossible. But if it is not, as I wrote Mr. Rockefeller, at some future time under most any conditions he names I would be glad to see him and discuss these matters.

My trip East was altogether unexpected and taken with great reluctance, if not indeed rebellion, for I felt that there were others who could do whatever might be done a good deal better than I could do it. I had already arranged to leave here the latter part of June for my vacation in July and August, that I shall devote mostly to my Chautauqua work that I am in the habit of doing every summer. My wife has not been at all well, and I shall probably take her to Battle Creek, which will require me to leave a week or 10 days earlier than I anticipated, so that I shall probably leave Denver about the 18th of June. My work will be, in part, in Pennsylvania, New York, and New England. I shall pass through New York several times during the summer, but I think it would give me an opportunity to either see you or Mr. Rockefeller in connection with this matter, if you think it possible or worth while.

With kindest regards and good wishes, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

HON. EVERETT COLBY,
Attorney at Law, Newark, N. J.

LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 4.

BENJAMIN LINDSEY, Esq.,
Denver, Colo.

DEAR SIR: When reading the interesting interview on Colorado which you gave in Chicago, en route to Washington, I was reminded of a meeting of a dozen or more doctors at a prominent sanatorium in Denver last winter at which time the deplorable state of affairs surrounding us was mentioned. The superintendent of the sanatorium, known for judgment and conservatism, made the statement that what was most needed in Denver was five funerals and the name "Judge" Lindsey headed this list of those whose demise would contribute most to the return of peace, power, and plenty in our State and particularly in Denver.

I have thought your ability to "grand stand" might be directed in a more helpful way if you had the good of your State uppermost in mind rather than going about encouraging the "yellow" journals to knock our State, your home State. We have most certainly suffered long and patiently while you and others indulge yourselves.

I appreciate your deranged mental state, but in your solitude try and right yourself or be charitable and move where your nature will be neutralized and allow a measure of peace to emerge from the state of anarchy you are in a part responsible for in Colorado.

Respectfully,

A. M. MOORE.

LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 5.

In examining the reports of the State coal mine inspector, 1907-8, relating to Las Animas County alone, it was found that 38 married men were reported killed in coal-mine accidents. No record was kept of dependent children.

In 1909-10 a record of dependent children was kept as follows: In 1909, 18 heads of families were killed, leaving 38 children; in 1910, 90 heads of families were killed, leaving 249 children; in 1911, 25 heads of families were killed, leaving 77 children. In 1912, 20 heads of families were killed, leaving 74 children.

Mine accidents in four years deprived 438 children of their breadwinners.

The State coal-mine inspector's report, covering the State, shows that in 1909-10 374 children were left fatherless from coal-mine accidents alone. In 1911-12 248, making a total of 622 in the space of four years.

The report beginning January 1 and ending December 1, 1913, shows the following: Number injured per 1,000 employed, 27.5; number of tons produced for each life lost, 84,263; number of tons produced for each nonfatal accident, 26,183; number of widows left, 51; number of children left fatherless, 108.

DENVER, December 21, 1914.

Sometime in the early winter of 1914 I asked the State board of charities and corrections, through their secretary, to furnish me with a statement of the number of dependent or fatherless children made so through deaths of fathers in coal-mine accidents. Having misplaced the report furnished me at that time, I was again, on December 12, 1914, furnished by the State board of charities and corrections of the State of Colorado with the above statement on this typewritten sheet of paper at the statehouse in Denver. I secured the statement at this time to file with the Industrial Relations Commission, as being one of the items as to why the Juvenile Court of Denver is interested in the industrial problems pertaining to coal-mine difficulties. At the time this statement was first issued I personally gave it to all of the Denver papers. I used it in an address at the statehouse at a conference called under the auspices in part of the State board of charities and corrections. The Denver Express was the only paper that published any part of it.

Mr. ELI M. GROSS,
Statehouse, City.

MY DEAR MR. GROSS: On Saturday, May 27, I had a conference with the deputy labor commissioner and chief factory inspector of this State. I asked him for an opinion upon the following questions:

First. The conditions concerning child-labor evils in this State and the necessity for additional legislation for the protection of children against such evils.

Second. What part, if any, has been taken by an organization known as the State bureau of child and animal protection, with offices in the State Capitol Building, for the enforcement of existing laws and securing additional legislation that has been deemed needful for their protection.

He informed me that you were one of his deputies, in every way reliable, and, because of much personal work done by you and first-hand information from your own investigations and experience in the last legislature, in every way especially qualified to answer these questions, and he therefore asked me to direct this inquiry to you, assuring me that he would heartily approve any report you are good enough to make in this matter. If you can, therefore, furnish me such a report at your earliest convenience I would greatly appreciate it.

Sincerely,

BEN B. LINDSEY.

DENVER, COLO., May 31, 1911.

Judge BEN B. LINDSEY,
Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR SIR: In answer to your communication of May 29 I beg to report as follows:

Up to May, 1909, Colorado had no factory inspection such as exists in many other States. Up to that time as to child labor the State bureau of child and animal protection pretended to assume the duties that ordinarily devolve upon factory inspectors. But since Colorado—now a State of nearly a million people—had been growing in industrial development it has been recognized for several years past that this kind of an arrangement was not satisfactory. While the State bureau of child and animal protection rendered absolutely no assistance in the legislature of 1909 in securing the passage of the law providing for factory inspectors, we know that the effort to obtain such legislation had your earnest support. Under this law I was appointed a factory inspector in May, 1909. When we came to consider the subject of child labor in this State the officers of this department were confronted with a public statement diligently circulated by the State bureau of child and animal protection to the effect that there were no child labor evils in Colorado. The impression thus created had taken such a firm hold upon the minds of the people that it was difficult to have statements to the contrary credited, for they were immediately met with this authoritative announcement—always insisted upon even in the face of complaints to the contrary. It led the people of the State into a false security against such evils—at least this is my firm conviction after two years of active service as a factory inspector in this State. Believing at first that a bureau bearing such a name was what it pretended to be, I was naturally one of those deceived as to real conditions until I became disillusioned through my own personal investigation and the sights I witnessed with my own eyes.

Some time after I was appointed you may recall a conference I had with you, in which you told me that while you had also been disposed to accept these statements of the State bureau of child and animal protection, that you were becoming suspicious and wished me from time to time in my inspection trips to get such facts as I could. I found that while in Denver, largely due to a very effective compulsory school law that compelled the attendance of children up to the age of 16 years for the entire school term from September to June—with certain exemptions permitted between 14 and 16—and a juvenile delinquent law that made any child or children who failed to comply with this law, and the contributory delinquent law that made any person thus in violation of the school law employing children subject to a penalty of not to exceed one year in jail or $1,000 fine, it was very seldom that I encountered improper child labor in Denver. In addition to this system of juvenile laws we had some child labor laws proper that while by no means sufficient were of some value until the decision of the supreme court (Burcher v. People, 41 Colo., 495). There the court passed upon the constitutionality of the law of this State regulating the employment of children and women, and held that under the constitution of this State only the general assembly might declare employments injurious or dangerous to health, life, or limb, in accordance with the constitutional amendment of 1901—a precaution which the legislature had absolutely failed to do in any previous child-labor law as such, or in any bill presented to the legislature except in a bill drafted by you and presented to the recent legislature. This decision caused it to be contended by some of the ablest lawyers in the State that Colorado had no child-labor law, and the only protection afforded the children was through the juvenile laws referred to that were drafted by you and enacted by the legislature in 1903. But in a city like Denver, with its juvenile court and school attendance officers to enforce this school and contributory delinquency law, and in many counties similarly situated, the children could be adequately protected except possibly during the summer vacation months against the evils of child labor. But I found from my first inspections of coal mines and coal-mine disasters in the southern part of the State that this system of laws, however worthy and effective in other parts of the State, was not sufficient for any sort of adequate protection for the children. This was due to two causes—first, the absence of a child-labor law proper upon which we could place any dependence in view of the decision of the supreme court mentioned, and second, because of the political conditions we encountered in dealing with some of the great fuel corporations whose activities extend into various sections of this and other States. I found that these corporations so completely controlled the politics of their local counties that school officers depended upon to enforce the system of laws that you had secured in 1903 were responsive rather to the interests of these corporations than to the demands of the home and the interests of the children. Of course most of my work in these coal districts concerned the investigations of disasters in mines in which numbers of lives were lost. The very first investigation of this kind undertaken by me you will find reported on pages 31 and 32 of the Biennial Report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Colorado, 1909-10. From that report I quote the following on page 32:

“Two of the victims were Mexican boys, 15 and 16 years old, respectively, who were employed as trap boys. The younger of the two was killed on his or more. If this boy were as illiterate as most of the Mexican workmen are, then he was employed in direct conflict with the State law, which forbids the employment of boys under 16 years of age who can not read and write.

“Wishing to ascertain the attitude of the company on the question of child labor, I dropped down to Segundo and found several boys working there under the legal age. A small lad told me that he had received 25 cents per day for assisting in drawing coke from the ovens. He was 10 years old. For his name and the names of others under 14 years of age I refer you to Segundo schedules that are filed in your office. The company officials explained the presence of these children on the ovens by stating that drawing coke is contract work; that is, the workman receives 95 cents per oven for drawing; and if he can use his children to advantage, it is no business of theirs; that is, for the officials to interfere. Now, I wish to call your attention to this: That in the work of drawing coke from the ovens the opening is broken out, displaying a mass of molten coal, which is brought to lower temperature by playing a stream of water on it. This results in clouds of gas and smoke rushing out and enveloping those who must draw the coke. It is in that gas-charged atmosphere that these children must work.

"It was on February 11 that I was in Segundo, and at that time there were no age certificates on file in the office of the superintendent. On February 23 I was in Sopris, a camp just a few miles below Segundo, and found five age certificates on file, signed by parents, certifying that the boy named therein was over 14 years old, and each certificate was dated February 15, 1910. I only mention this to show that there is a master mind at the head and nothing is overlooked or left to chance when the interests of the company are at stake, fifteenth birthday and had been working in the mine for a matter of six months and I might mention that I have found that the officials of the company—that is, the men in charge of the work, from the division superintendent down to the lowly washer boss—are all men of high efficiency, excellent, likable men, and thorough gentlemen in the ordinary acceptance of the term, but they have all been trained in the same school, whose first lesson is 'loyalty to the company.' So imbued are they with this idea that to their minds anything that is profitable for the company is right and anything that threatens dividends is wrong."

During that investigation I spent six weeks in the southern Colorado coal camps, and in connection with my other work I had occasion at first hand to see and know exactly what I am talking about, and to all of which I am willing to give testimony in any way. I can say to you positively, then, that in practically every camp where coke ovens were operated children were employed. In each case this employment would have been in absolute violation of those laws existing in many of the States for their protection, but not under any child-labor law proper on our statute books. All of this proved the need of an up-to-date child-labor law.

As soon as my report upon the Primero disaster was made public I was astounded to note that E. K. Whitehead, who is now and has been for more than 10 years past the secretary and director of the work of the State bureau of child and animal protection, rushed into the public press with a denial of the facts, and by wide circulation of this denial it was again sought to create the impression, which he has for years past so persistently spread abroad, that there is no child-labor law in Colorado. I had been personally on the ground, often talked with these children while engaged in these dangerous occupations—one of them positively not over 10 years of age—while Whitehead made no pretense of any such experience. I may say here that during the fight for a child-labor law during the recent legislature, when the most bitter opposition to any genuine bill was that encountered from Whitehead, claiming to be backed by his State bureau, I went personally to his office to convince him that his denial of my report was false and unjust to the children of this State, for it was really playing these young lives into the hands of the great corporate interests for exploitation in the manner I had been able to prove. Whitehead's only excuse for his denial of my official report and positive statements was an alleged investigation which he claimed to have had made through some employee of his State bureau. I asked to be confronted by that man, and in Whitehead's office, in his presence and that of one Dr. Mary Bates and one W. R. Callicotte, the bureau's lobbyists, this officer, whose name I can not recall, admitted, upon being questioned, that he had visited these coke ovens at a time of day when no work was being done. Whitehead seemed dumfounded at the frank confession made by his alleged investigator.

At this conference I urged, in view of my own experience and personal knowledge, the absolute necessity for a new child-labor law. Whitehead then pretended that he was willing for the enactment of such a law notwithstanding his former statements to the contrary, and the rumors that were constantly heard that the bureau through Whitehead and his lobbyists would do all they could to prevent the passage of a real child-labor law. As the session of the legislature progressed I found that these rumors were positively true, and that Whitehead, who directed the work of the bureau, had no desire for the passage of a real child-labor law designed to guarantee real protection against children especially subjected to these terrible conditions in the coal fields. My proof of this charge you, of course, know, but briefly summarized it is this: There were three child-labor bills introduced in the legislature just ended, one drafted by our department, another drafted by you, and another drafted, so far as we can gain any information on the subject, in Whitehead's office; that is, the bureau of child and animal protection. Our bill was defeated. That left for consideration the bill drafted by you and introduced by Mrs. Jones, known as H. B. 513, and the bill supported by the State bureau of child and animal protection, known as H. B. 364, by Mrs. Lafferty. About April 1, when the fate of these two bills was in the balance, there was distributed among the members of the legislature a copy of the monthly magazine known as "Child and Animal Protection," published by the State bureau of child and animal protection, containing an article on child labor, and, in view of the terrible conditions that I have related, contained this amazing sentence: "This bureau, which alone has enforced the child-labor laws in this State up to this time, is not anxious to have a child-labor law enacted. We are still able, as heretofore, to put an end to it at once whenever it is discovered." But at this time having lost our own bill we had joined hands with the forces working for the passage of the Jones bill. Whitehead, claiming to represent the State bureau, urged the passage of the Lafferty bill.

I need not go into details as to what a hopeless, inefficient, and unconstitutional measure that was. That was shown up in arguments before committees and in typewritten memorandums you circulated. In these exposures it was shown to be the most outrageous imposition ever sought to be imposed upon the people of any State as a child-labor law. Its passage would have been very pleasing no doubt to those who have been benefited by the work of the bureau. The bill would not only permit the shameful exploitation of little children in their coal mines and coke ovens, but would actually legalize it. The magazine, Child and Animal Protection, authorized and published by this State bureau, and through pamphlets and statements similarly issued by its secretary, Mr. Whitehead, have contained the vilest denunciations of men in this State who have fought the improper corporate influences we encountered in our effort to protect the children. They have sought in every way to discredit them in order to make their own well-known political activity effective and successful. I have no hesitation in saying that from my own experience as a factory inspector that the State bureau of child and animal protection, directly or indirectly, is one of the most effective weapons in the hands of special interests in this State in their efforts to destroy men or effective measures affording real protection and doing real justice to the children of this State. After the exposure of the child-labor bill backed by Whitehead and his bureau they did not dare to push it further, and there being left only the Jones bill referred to they then proceeded by every means within their power to try to kill that bill. After a most terrific fight against them in the closing days of the session, through the hardest kind of work by this department, the officers of the Juvenile Court of Denver, the labor organizations, various women's organizations, and others really interested in the protection of children, this dastardly effort of the State bureau of child and animal protection was prevented and the Jones bill was passed.

The bureau can not deny responsibility for the acts of its agent, for never once has it repudiated them, nor did any of its other members show any activity to assist those engaged in the real fight for the protection of children. In strange contrast to their public statement that we needed no child-labor law and their effort to pass one that legalized the work of little children over 13 year of age in mines, smelters, coke ovens, and every possible dangerous kind of employment is section 3 of the law passed in spite of their opposition, which absolutely and positively prohibits any child under 16 years of age under any conditions whatever and without any right to a permit from any source whatever to work "in any underground works or mine, in or about the surface workings thereof, or in any smelter, coke oven," and, indeed, in any other of the common and well-known dangerous employments which most of the model child-labor laws of the Nation forbid, and which this State bureau was anxious and did everything in their power to legalize and permit.

Very respectfully,

ELI M. GROSS.

LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 7.

JUNE 1, 1911.

HON. BEN B. LINDSEY,
Judge of the Juvenile Court, City.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 29 addressed to the sheriff and chief of police in this city, Mr. Hamilton Armstrong, in which you ask for a report from our department concerning our experiences in the matter of the protection of children against the evils of child labor in this city and county, and any difficulties we have encountered in connection with such laws or obtaining the passage of such laws, has been referred to me by him for reply. I have, as you know, for the past seven years, been especially detailed by the police department to look after all cases concerning juveniles, and to secure as far as this department is able to secure the enforcement of laws for their protection.

As to child labor, we have long had, as you know, the set of laws drafted by you and passed early in 1903, consisting of the school law, requiring children to attend school for the entire school year—from September to June; the juvenile delinquent law, making children guilty of nonschool attendance up to 16 years of age delinquent children, except where they have permits between 14 and 16 for the causes mentioned in the law, and the very important contributory delinquent law which has enabled us to reach most of the child-labor evils in this city, although in recent years we have felt in Denver, as it has been felt in other parts of the State, the necessity for a good child-labor law proper, especially in view of a decision of the supreme court which is said to have invalidated practically all the child-labor laws of this State. Our work during the past two years therefore has been to enforce such laws as we have, and to get on the statute books of the State such laws as we ought to have. In enforcing our statutes on this subject I have come in contact with some rather flagrant abuses from time to time, and these, of course, have been promptly checked by our department, and where that could not be done or where it seemed necessary, as it has in some cases, complaints have been filed in the juvenile court.

The State bureau of child and animal protection has given very wide publicity to the charge that no department of State government has undertaken to enforce these laws except their department, and in every way they have sought to secure the exclusive privilege of enforcing these laws, not only in Denver but throughout the State. Their efforts in this respect have been so exceptional and unusual as to occasion some suspicion as to their purposes and motives, for it is well known in this State that some of the representatives of big business interests have been most active in the support of that society, who have been likewise active in opposing legislation and the enforcement thereof designed to help the children that might invade their privileges. I firmly believe this to be the case as to the subject of child labor as from my own experience—not only in enforcing the laws but in the active part I have taken in securing other laws which were much needed.

You may recall the cases of Mary McGrath, age 13, residence 1128 Thirteenth Street; Hazel Morin, age 13, residence 923 Fourteenth Street; Olin Frazer, age 13, residence 1129 Thirteenth Street; and Irene Burke, age 11 years, residence 565 Bannock Street. (The addresses given were those at the time the cases came under my observation.) These cases may serve as an example of some I have had to deal with. I found these children working in various cheap theaters of this city without a permit from the school authorities. I found these children going home from these theaters, where they had been working, as late as 11 o'clock at night unaccompanied by parent or guardian. Of course, I apprehended them and in the course of my duties visited their homes, talked to their mothers and also the various managers of the theaters, threatened to file informations against them in the juvenile court for contributing to juvenile delinquency. I recall distinctly that a few days after I consulted the parents regarding this matter they came to me with a statement that they understood that the humane society had charge of such cases. They had gone to Mr. Whitehead, the secretary of that society, and Mr. Whitehead had said to them that there was no law whereby I had any authority to proceed against them or the managers of the theaters for employing these children under such conditions. You no doubt recall that I brought these children and their parents before you with the result that they were immediately taken out of the theater and—notwithstanding the uncertainties under our child-labor law—as a result of the threatened prosecution and the promise of the theater managers not to again employ the children and the parents not to permit it, we were able to end the abuses referred to.

By an arrangement you made with the police department of Denver some seven years ago, I was especially detailed to patrol the business district of the city in the interest and especially enforcing the laws for the protection of the children, and because of this fact largely there have been comparatively few evils of child labor, but in this entire experience I do not recall having come in contact with a single officer of the State bureau of child and animal protection, or hearing of any work undertaken by them for the protection of children against such evils in this city. The statements that they constantly spread abroad that they are solely responsible for the enforcement of laws for the protection of children against such evils are of course absolutely false.

Now, as to obtaining needed legislation. Having been detailed on your court from the police department on this special work for the past seven years, I have naturally joined hands with you and the court in the rather terrific fights that have been carried on here for the passage of laws that have been drafted and presented to the legislature by the juvenile court. During the session of the legislature just closed, I think I can fairly say that no individual was more active than I was in helping secure the passage of H. B. 513, known as the Jones bill, drafted by you to cover the deficiencies and difficulties in our present child-labor situation. It may seem almost incredible, but it is a fact, and I think those connected with the lower department and other organizations similarly interested in securing such legislation will assure you that our most active and even bitter opposition came from the State bureau of child and animal protection in our efforts to get the Jones bill passed. In the first place their agents and lobbyists privately circulated the statement that we did not need any child-labor law. While so far as we could get them committed in writing or in any public way, they took the amazing position (for a bureau claiming to protect children) that if any child-labor law should be enacted, it should be a bill known as the Lafferty bill, house bill 364. This Lafferty bill, as pointed out by some of the best experts in the State on this subject, was so cunningly drawn as to leave nothing to be desired by the great coal mine and other interests in the State, the cheap theaters, and influences of that kind that have contributed most to child-labor evils. It was shown that the Lafferty bill actually legalized the labor of children over 13 years of age in practically all of the dangerous employments, such as mines, smelters, mills, coke ovens, and that work known as that of breaker boys about the surface workings of coal mines. In arguments made by you before the joint committees of house and senate, and in written memorandums and statements, and from the opinions of able lawyers, it became perfectly clear that nothing would do more to jeopardize the welfare of the children of this State in regard to child labor than the passage of the Lafferty bill, which was proposed by the State bureau of child and animal protection. You may recall how diligently I worked with my friends among the so-called machine politicians to get them to spare the children of this State from any such calamity. You know how men in authority, at private conferences between them, you, and myself, stated that the bill you prepared to avoid these difficulties, would never be passed, and that the program was to kill it, and if any bill was passed it was to be this Lafferty bill. These men you talked to in my presence were men who represent the powers in politics in this city. But through the hardest kind of work—indeed, one of the most terrific struggles in which I have ever engaged—we were able to defeat the intentions of the powers to carry out a program proposed by this State bureau which was against the welfare, protection, and best interests of the children in Colorado. As you know while you were in the city during the legislative struggle I was constantly in conference with you, and while you were away we were in constant telegraphic communication, and I think some of the finest legislative work ever done—and all of it perfectly legitimate and in every way commendable, requiring skill and knowledge of politics and politicians—was done largely through your direction in order to defeat the “interests” in this matter.

I was almost constantly in the legislature during its closing hours when the result of this fight was in the balance, and notwithstanding we had succeeded in killing the vicious Lafferty bill, the agents of this State bureau of child and animal protection were using every influence in their power to the very last to defeat the Jones child-labor bill drafted by you to cover the weaknesses and defects in our child-labor situation. The Lafferty bill not only legalized the dangers of child labor referred to, but it made no effort whatever to protect children in those dangers to be encountered in the cheap theaters and other places which at the time no law of this State was believed to cover. W. R.

Callcotte, in the pay of the bureau, and an agent of Whitehead, was their chief representative in the very critical periods referred to. I am perfectly satisfied from his attitude, actions, and conduct that he was bringing to bear every influence in his power and hoping against hope to the end that a real child-labor law such as the Jones bill would not pass the legislature. I have his written statements that he was opposed to the bill, and his conduct in trying to bring about its defeat is so notorious that I doubt if it will meet with a denial from any source.

I have been a police official in this city and county for 11 years, and I am thoroughly familiar with politics and political conditions in this State, and I can say without hesitation that the Senate bureau of child and animal protection has not only not been the chief factor as claimed by them in enforcing child-labor laws, but, on the contrary, have had very little, if anything, to do with such enforcement during that experience, and it constituted the chief obstacle in securing laws which could be enforced.

Very respectfully,

JOHN S. PHILLIPS.

LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 8.

[News, Dec. 3, 1914.]

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE BUSINESS MEN'S COMMITTEE FOR THE 1915 BUDGET, SUBMITTED TO THE CITY COUNCIL.

RE JUVENILE COURT.

In view of the conflicting statements in regard to the value of the work of this court made to this committee, we desire to say that our recommendations are made simply with a view to effecting economies and business efficiency.

The appropriation under this head for the current year was $17,000; $25,000 is asked for the year 1915. No reasons are given in the statement of the court justifying any increase for next year.

We find that the judge of this court, during the past years, has been absent from the city a considerable portion of the time. We believe this to be a public scandal, showing that either there is not sufficient work to justify the existence of the court or that the judge is not giving his whole time and attention to it.

We recommend a reduction of at least two in the number of probation officers; that the work of the clerk and deputy clerks be done by one employee; and, as there is not sufficient work to keep the stenographer regularly employed upon the court work, that his compensation be fixed on a per diem basis for services actually rendered.

For reasons of economy, we believe that all the work of this court, with the exception of juvenile delinquency, should be done by the county and district courts.

The committee is informed that the employees of this court do not give their entire time and attention to its work, but the committee has not had the time to verify this. If this is true, then, our general recommendations in regard to the revision of salaries, and requiring city employees to give all their time to city work, would apply here also.

BUREAU OF DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

We recommend no appropriation for the bureau of domestic relations.

DETENTION HOME.

The average number of inmates of this institution is between seven and eight, in view of which, we do not believe the cost of the institution, to wit, $5,000 a year, is justified, and we recommend that it be abolished and the inmates cared for elsewhere.

DENVER, COLO., December 9, 1914.

To the honorable commissioners of the city and county of Denver.

GENTLEMEN: Certain statements have appeared as having been made to you to the effect that the so-called budget committee of the Denver Chamber of Commerce and the Colorado Taxpayers Protective League does not represent any considerable body of taxpayers. To refute these statements and to prove to you that this committee does represent a very large proportion of the taxpayers of the city of Denver, we inclose herewith a list of the membership constituting the Colorado Taxpayers Protective League and the Denver Chamber of Commerce.

We would say that the committee's report was accepted and indorsed by large committees representing both of these organizations. It is, of course, impossible that every recommendation contained in the budget committee's report would meet the approbation of every member out of these 1,600 or 1,700 men and the various interests which they represent. But we can say, truthfully, that the report of the budget committee does represent the large majority of both of these organizations.

Respectfully,

DENVER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By THOS. B. STEARNS, President.

LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 9.

BOULDER, COLO., June 7, 1914.

Judge B. B. LINDSEY,
Denver, Colo.

DEAR JUDGE: Inclosed find editorial cut from the Boulder Herald of yesterday,¹ which shows how low some editors have sunk since the strike begun. What really happened in the Herald office was that Prof. Mark, who is a man of pure character, protested to one of the office men against the abuse being heaped upon you by the paper. The editor, Mr. Wanglin, turned on him and said that you ought to be killed; and that if he, Wanglin, had his way you would be killed or driven out of the State. Prof. Mark remarked that if that was the attitude of his paper he preferred that it be not sent to him any more.

Sincerely, yours,

R. O. STEARNS.

JUNE 10, 1914.

Mr. R. O. STEARNS,
Hotel Boulderado, Boulder, Colo.

MY DEAR MR. STEARNS: I thank you so much for your good letter. I have written an answer to Prof. Mark branding the editor of the Boulder Herald as an infamous liar and pointing out wherein he has lied. He is one of those cowardly creatures who set up straw men to knock down, a task by no means either difficult or courageous; that is to say, he accepts certain statements as true without any investigation and proceeds to denounce people for saying something they never said, doing something they never did. It is very evident that he is either ignorant or one of the willingly "kept" creatures of privilege who, with them, like Louis, the King of France, assume that they are the state—"The State, it is I." And when one shows up their crookedness and lawlessness they have the gall and impudence to say that you are maligning the State instead of those who are trying to rob and corrupt the State.

With kindest regards, I am,
Sincerely, yours,

BEN B. LINDSEY.

LINDSEY EXHIBIT NO. 10.

MAY 16, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. FOSDICK: I have been asked by a number of citizens to be one of a committee to go to Washington City to see President Wilson in connection with the unfortunate strike troubles in this State. I have taken no part in the controversies going on, but if I could be of any possible service in bringing peace out of what is certainly the most dangerous and chaotic situation we ever faced in this State I would, of course, count it a public service. If I should come, my idea would be that the only possible way to avoid further bloodshed, expense, distraction, and difficulty in this State would be for the President to appoint an arbitration committee fairly representative of both sides, or at least so fair that neither side could afford to refuse to submit the situation to them.

I am one of those who have grave doubts as to whether Mr. Rockefeller, jr., really appreciates the situation. While I can understand how he may be misled and how his education and training may make him very sincere in what others as sincerely regard as a mistaken attitude, it does seem to me that if some one in whom he would place some trust and confidence could present a somewhat different aspect of the present situation than that which seems to possess him—from some of the public statements that have come from him and his advisers—I think it would do much to bring about a settlement of the present difficulties. The matter has ceased to be a mere question of the strike, and its success or failure is of small consequence compared to some bigger issues that have arisen and for which Mr. Rockefeller should have some consideration. Whether rightly or not the feeling of the people in this State is quite general that Mr. Rockefeller has it in his power to bring about peace for us or to continue the present chaos.

I am one of those who have appreciated his work against the white-slave traffic and his interest in some of our social problems. Now, I was wondering if I accept the request that has been made by a great many to go to see the President if I could come over to New York and have a personal conference with Mr. Rockefeller, jr. I think I can say that it would be of such a character as in no way to embarrass him, and I would be glad, of course, to have you or anyone else whom he would wish present, although it would be a pleasure to have an intimate sort of talk with him regarding some of our problems, especially as bearing on the situation out here.

With kindest regards, I am,
Sincerely, yours,

—
Mr. RAYMOND FOSDICK,
Whitehall Building, New York, N. Y.

MAY 23, 1914.

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.,
26 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 23 received. You say that my telegram of May 20 was received at your office on May 21 and was directed to Mr. Rockefeller, sr., and answered by his secretary. At this I am very much astounded, since my wire was intended for you and not your father. My letter, to which your letter is a reply, was on the supposition that in the telegram, saying that Mr. Rockefeller refused the interview requested, you were the Mr. Rockefeller meant, since it does not state "Mr. Rockefeller, sr." I concluded from the exchange of telegrams, therefore, that it was you who refused me an interview under any circumstances, unless possibly the date was inconvenient; and while the issue was so important, I rather clung to this, as a remote possibility. I concluded to write you at length frankly as to my feelings and views in the matter, that you might know them in case my request to see you was to be denied.

It is apparent now, however, that I may have misunderstood you, and I am sure you misunderstand me, or you would not say that my letter is of such a character as to make any conference with you impossible. If, however, I am now to understand that it was Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr., who refused the interview requested, I have a right to assume that, if I could have had any interview with either of you, the telegram from your office would have so stated. It is generally known that you represent your father in these matters, and the error in transmission is so apparent it might have been inferred, and if not I would have expected him to refer me to you. If I am in error as to this, however, now that the matter is cleared up, I feel sure you will be glad to reconsider your refusal to grant my request. The issue is too big and the matters I wish to discuss with you are too important to permit this mishap in the transmission of a telegram to interfere with our getting together.

I haven't the slightest bitterness or feeling in this matter, at least with regard to you—or indeed, for that matter, with regard to any person. We have a serious situation in our State, growing out of interesting conditions under our modern, social, industrial, and economic system, and I do feel that much good would be accomplished (and certainly no harm could come to anyone) if we could have a calm, dispassionate, and kindly discussion together over the entire situation.

I have greatly admired your interest in some of the problems concerning our youth, that concern me greatly and are in line with much of the work of a mere palliative character that we have undertaken to do and in which your assistance has been so helpful. I am sure we should have some things in common, notwithstanding the vital differences (that I thought I should be frank enough to state to you) between us on great industrial and economic problems. It is this fact, I believe, that leads you to misunderstand my purpose in some parts of my letter. I am sure that a conference, when we might know and understand each other better, would add to that sort of Christian charity and consideration (for people who are more or less the result of conditions under which they live) that you and I ought to promote.

That part of my letter relating to the desire of some of the women survivors of the Ludlow horror to see you and tell you their story, you did not answer at all. Perhaps your failure to refer to it was an oversight, for your refusal to see me surely would not include a refusal to see them. I do not believe that you are one of those, either representing yourself or others, who are willing to accept dividends or profits from your great business enterprises and seek to shirk any sort of personal responsibility for others because of those enterprises. You would be greatly enlightened by hearing the stories of these good women. Two of them were born and reared in Colorado. One of them has been a good church member since she was 12 years of age. She came from Wales about a year ago with fifteen hundred dollars in money, considerable personal property, a good name, and a good reputation. The father of one of these women was killed in the coal mines. Another lost her children and another all of her personal property, after being subjected to cruel indignities in a dirty jail, because of controversies concerning your property or the property of those whom you have undertaken to represent. They are intelligent, competent, and capable of giving you a most comprehensive and sane view of the situation. I think you ought to hear their story, and I am sure that after you heard it you would be glad of your action and it would entitle you to much sympathy and support in the rather trying situation under which you are laboring, and in which I assure you for you personally I have the utmost sympathy and consideration, just as I have sympathy and consideration for those who are victims with you of the rather distressing conditions that we are seeking to remedy. They can only be remedied through a better appreciation and understanding of the good in each other and the necessity that we should all get together to fight evil more and men, women, and children less.

These good women have come all the way from Colorado to see the President of the United States, and they would like to see you, under any condition you may name. I assure you they would be cheerfully, honorably, and honestly complied with. Won't you please grant the same courtesy shown them by the President of the United States? I myself would prefer that they see you, as I would prefer that you see me, in the most kindly, courteous, and neighborly manner, under circumstances free from publicity and without any spectacular accompaniments, for whatever purpose they may be desired.

I suppose that I may reasonably hope to receive a reply to this request by some time next Monday, the 25th instant, either by letter or phone message, at the Imperial Hotel. I expect to start for Denver some time Tuesday afternoon, unless I should be granted the interview requested either with myself or the women of Ludlow, in which case I shall accommodate myself to your convenience.

Let me say in conclusion, my dear Mr. Rockefeller, that I do hope you will reconsider your determination not to see me or the women from Ludlow; and permit me to say further that in the event of an interview I shall be very glad to regard the communications between us as strictly personal and confidential.

I want you to know that I have nothing but the kindest feelings and consideration for you. I would not willingly or intentionally do anything to wound you personally or add to what I think I am in a position to know must have been the discomforts and suffering to which you have already been subjected. But there is a big issue involved and I feel it my duty to do all I can to help bring about a settlement of that issue in the interests of justice and humanity, and if it wounds or hurts others, I shall always share, as I have always shared, in the wounds and the hurts.

Very respectfully,

BEN B. LINDSEY.

New York, May 23, 1914.

Hon. BEN B. LINDSEY,
Hotel Imperial, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 22 to Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., is received. The telegram received at this office from you on May 21 was directed to Mr. Rockefeller, sr., and answered by his secretary. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., has received no telegram from you.

Mr. Rockefeller, jr., desires me to say that your letter of May 22 is of such a character as to make any conference with you impossible.

Very truly,

CHARLES O. HEYDT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20, 1914.

Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.,
26 Broadway, New York City, N. Y.:

I am having a conference with the President to-day over Colorado strike situation. Could I see you for a personal interview and chat over situation Sunday or Monday at time and place to suit your convenience? I earnestly hope you can grant this request. Answer Shoreham Hotel soon as possible.

BEN B. LINDSEY.

MAY 21, 1914.

Judge BEN B. LINDSEY,
Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Mr. John D. Rockefeller desires me to say, in reply to your telegram to him of May 20, that he regrets it will be impossible for him to arrange the interview which you request.

BRAKE EXHIBIT NO. 1.

DENVER, COLO., October 10, 1913.

Complaint being made to Edwin V. Brake, deputy State labor commissioner, that a number of men had been imported into Colorado contrary to and in violation of State law, the same being chapter 160 of the Session Laws of 1911, he, Edwin V. Brake, accompanied by Deputy R. E. Croskey, proceeded to Louisville, Colo., on the afternoon of October 10, 1913, and there found the following men:

Edward Ryan, age 34, boilermaker's helper, 329 South Center Street, Chicago.
 James Harrison, electrician, age 34, 444 South State Street, Chicago.
 E. Summers, machinist, age 24, 444 South State Street, Chicago.
 Barney Garrigan, motorman, age 29, Reliance Hotel, Chicago.
 C. S. Maddox, electrician, age 25, 1716 Warren Avenue, Chicago.
 J. J. Ryan, clerk, age 28, 47 West Van Buren Street, Chicago.
 Frank Kane, boilermaker, age 25, 1822 North Lincoln Street, Chicago.
 L. O'Bryan (signed as J. Reeves), boilermaker, age 26, 525 South State Street, Chicago.

F. H. Perry, machinist, age 26, Warren Hotel, Chicago.

Walter Emmons, laborer, age 43, 2745 West Polk Street, Chicago.

George Connors, age 31, laborer, 1842 West Monroe Street, Chicago.

These men state that men named West, Miller, Andrews, Cole, and Ellis, were also in a party of 16 men altogether, who were hired in Chicago by a Mr. McFarland, a passenger agent of the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad, and brought by him in a special steel coach as far as Limon, Colo., where the men were locked in the coach and brought to Denver, then turned over to the Colorado & Southern Railroad and transported to Louisville, Colo. On the journey from Limon to Louisville, Colo., the coach was kept locked. The coach was sidetracked and the party left the car at the Monarch Mine No. 2 near Louisville; that these men were hired in Chicago to do shoveling and labor work at the rate of 39½ cents per hour; that the men were to further receive $3 per day and board during transit from Chicago to Louisville.

They left the La Salle Street depot at Chicago on No. 5 train, at 10.30 p. m., Tuesday, October 7, and arrived at Monarch mine Thursday, October 9.

The men were told they were going to work in an open shop, and that no strike had been on for three and one-half years, and were not told that they were to work in a coal mine. Upon arrival at the mine they were told that they were wanted to shovel coal in the mine, and they learned that it was a strike job. They refused to work as they knew nothing about mining and did not care to take a chance in a mine, and further, they would not act as strike-breakers.

Their baggage which had been taken from them at Chicago and no baggage checks allowed them, was here given them in a much damaged condition, their suit cases were broken and E. Ryan's was so much damaged that he left it at the mine. The men were also locked in the car during transit and people were not allowed to see or talk to them. They were fed two meals in the diner and sandwiches and coffee at Limon, Colo.

Upon the men refusing to work at the mine they were told they could "hoof it to Denver"; they told that they were without funds and asked for pay as agreed upon during transit. This they were refused and the men then asked who had brought them out here, the name of the party paying the transportation; this the manager of the mine said he did not know and professed to not know how they came or who brought them. They then left the mine and were taken in charge by the union coal miners at Louisville who have fed and housed them since. The matter was then reported to the State labor commissioner.

DENVER COLO., December 30, 1914.

MR. FRANK P. WALSH,

Chairman, United States Commission on Industrial Relations,

Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: In response to your request at the time I appeared before your commission, I herewith mail you supplementary evidence embracing some of the features of the coal strike in Colorado.

I desire to give your commission an example of the system employed by the coal companies in recruiting gunmen at the beginning and during the strike in southern Colorado. Sometime during the early part of the year Judge Northcutt, who was an attorney for the coal companies, sent a communication to the chief justice of the Supreme Court in New Mexico, requesting that the chief justice secure for him some gun fighters for use in the Colorado coal strike. This communication was accompanied by a check or draft to pay for the transportation of these men. The chief justice of the supreme court sent for Fred Farnoff, who was at that time the captain of the constabulary or State rangers of New Mexico, and acquainted him with the contents of the letter and asked Farnoff to secure these men. Farnoff sent for Lopez Gomez, who at one time was city marshal of Santa Fe, N. Mex., a notorious character, and asked him to enlist these men. He enlisted 15 besides himself and was furnished transportation to Trinidad, Colo.

They arrived over the Santa Fe Railroad in the morning and was met at the depot of Trinidad by a representative of Judge Northcutt and were taken to the office of the Chronicle-News, a daily newspaper owned and controlled by Judge Northcutt. There, they were met by Judge Northcutt and Sheriff Gresham, who enrolled the 16 men as deputy sheriffs and gave them commissions, a 30-30 rifle, and revolver each. They then started for the depot to be shipped to some camp, the exact destination unknown to me, but in the strike district, where they were met by the picket of the union and taken up to the union headquarters. When Gresham found that they were in the union headquarters he went up to demand the return of their revolvers and commissions as well as the deputies, all of which were surrendered to him, but the men refused to further participate in the strike as deputy sheriffs and went to the depot and returned to Santa Fe, N. Mex. This information I obtained through my deputies and from Fred Farnoff personally. My reason for telling this story was to inform the commission of the methods employed by the coal companies in recruiting their gun fighters. Now, in the first place, Judge Northcutt technically is an officer of the court as an attorney; he conspired with the chief justice of a neighboring State to import into Colorado a lot of undesirable citizens in strict violation of the laws of Colorado. We have a statutory provision in this State that requires the qualifications of a deputy sheriff to be the same as that of his principal, and a sheriff is not eligible to the office until he has been a year's resident in the county from which he is elected. We have another statutory provision that requires that every deputy sheriff shall be a citizen of the State, and one can not become a citizen under a year's residence, and a further provision that a citizen of the State must have resided 60 days in the State immediately preceding his being sworn in as deputy sheriff. The above narrative shows that all of the laws were violated by men sworn to support the laws of the State of Colorado. This is but one illustration of many, showing the methods employed in recruiting the deputy sheriffs who were commissioned by Gresham in Las Animas and Fred Farr in Huerfano County.

From newspaper reports I learned that you sought to ascertain from various witnesses what, if any, political actions were taken by the coal companies in those two counties. Here is one of the best illustrations that I could give you: At the beginning of the strike in September, 1913, every county official in both Las Animas and Huerfano Counties were subservient tools of the coal companies, so that when a number of independent mines in Huerfano County signed up with the union mine workers and continued operating their mines the political forces which are controlled by the coal operators became alarmed, fearing that the men working in these independent mines and being out from under the influence of the county officials and coal companies might vote as they pleased. Several hundred of these union miners who were employed by the independent companies and showing quite an interest in politics, feeling that if they could elect some fair men as county officials it would be largely to their interest, became naturalized and all registered. To offset this, in July, 1915, the county officials in Huerfano County, by resolution, changed the precinct and polling places. At the Tioga and Big Four mines, which had become unionized, and where there had always been a voting place, by the July resolution they were removed 9 miles from the mines out to a farmhouse, so that the men who were registered and citizens would have to make a trip of 18 miles in order to exercise the right of franchise, making it as hard as possible for these people to vote. On the other hand, in the closed camps, such as at the Walsen mine, they made the boundaries of the precinct within the barb-wire inclosures, making it as easy as possible for the nonunion miners to vote and giving the political gang controlled by the coal companies absolute control of the precincts. I will hereto attach a letter signed by E. L. Neeley, with a copy of the resolution passed by the board of county commissioners.

To further illustrate the absolute control by the companies of the officials of these counties, I wish to state that had the county commissioners desired to be fair they would have established a voting precinct at Ludlow, Las Animas County, but they required the voters at Ludlow, where the tent colony is located, to go to Hastings to cast their vote. There is hardly a chance for a fair election at Hastings, and a great many of the striking miners would not go to Hastings for fear of bodily injury. It might be well for me to inform you that Hastings is an incorporated town, the superintendent of the mine is the mayor of the town, and the streets and alleys were never dedicated to public use, so that whenever anyone not desired by the coal companies appeared on the streets of that town they are subject to arrest as trespassers, so that every known political scheme is employed by these people to perpetuate themselves in office under the control of the coal companies.

In my evidence before the commission, I touched briefly on the fact that employees of this department had been denied the right to make investigations in the closed camps in Las Animas County. I herewith submit copy of an affidavit signed by Robert Brocket and Mildred Brocket, on the 10th day of January, 1914. The original affidavit I turned over to Gov. Ammons, upon his assurance that he would make an investigation through his office but I never received any report as to what he did in the matter. In fact, that was the reception I received at his hands with any information I gave him touching upon the coal strike. I attach hereto a report of Eli M. Gross, one of the employees of this department, whom I sent to make an investigation as to the peonage in those two counties.

As an illustration of the relations existing between the coal companies and Gen. Chase I will say that in the first week in January, 1914, I was in Trinidad during the entire week; there was absolutely no evidence of disorder, the streets of Trinidad were as quiet as any law-abiding streets in the country, but I noticed that the militia seemed to be bent on fomenting trouble rather than assuming an attitude of peace. On several occasions I have seen Wm. Murray, vice president and general manager of the Victor-American Fuel Co., and Gen. Chase in conversation on the sidewalk before the Columbia Hotel and within 10 or 15 minutes after they separated a troupe of cavalry would come charging up the streets on the dead run and, in several instances, ride their horses on the sidewalks, driving the people into the stores or off the sidewalks into the streets, without any justification or excuse. After the cavalry would leave then a patrol would be put on the sidewalks, infantry with fixed bayonets, walking four abreast up the walks pushing people into the streets or into the stores. This occurred so often and with no other object, in my judgment, than to force the striking miners to resent their actions. Several times during the week that I was in Trinidad, troops were taken to the depot, surrounding it and keeping every person back, waiting for the train to come in with strike breakers. No one was allowed to talk to these men; they were locked in their cars and switched on to trains and dropped off at different camps. And this was all done in strict violation of the statute in this State.

As a further evidence to prove that the militia were wholly imbued with the idea that it was their duty to assist the coal companies in the strike, without reference to any law of man or God, was on the 20th of April, 1914, and that took place at Ludlow; the tent colony was shot up first and then burned. At 12.15 on the 21st, I left Denver for Trinidad. It was my intention to stop off at Ludlow and on the way down I found a militiaman in full uniform on the train, who knew me but I did not know him; but I found that he was an employee of the Burlew Detective Agency and a member of the State militia. He informed me that Gen. Chase had sent him to Ludlow with 7,500 rounds of ammunition for the coal companies—not for the militia. The ammunition was unloaded at Ludlow, and when I attempted to get off the train I was ordered back and not permitted to get off at all. I opened a window as many other passengers had done. The train was patrolled by 25 militiamen in full uniform and their entire conversation was boasting of having killed so many people; boasted of killing Louis Tikas, and regretted their inability to kill the Winberg boys and John Lawson. They stated in my hearing, parties unknown to me but in uniform, that they had killed the "Damn red necks and had 16 of them in one pile." Their whole conversation and attitude was one of hatred toward the striking miners, boastful of the number they had killed and desiring to kill more. Not being permitted to get off the train I went to Trinidad and I found the city in great excitement; there were no militia there, but no effort was made by the thousands of men who had come to Trinidad after the burning of Ludlow to commit any violation of the law. Occasionally you would find some radical who wanted to do something to avenge the colony, but through the efforts of John Lawson, assisted by the other officials of the United Mine Workers, everything was peaceful and quiet.

At this time, it being the 22d of the month, a great many of the women and children had not been located, having been scattered over the country, running away from the burning colony and taking refuge with the farmers. But a great deal of the country being under the fire of the machine guns the work of collecting these people was very hard. On the morning of the 23d information was brought to Trinidad that there was a pit full of women and children and asking that the undertaker wagons be sent out to get the bodies. When the undertakers attempted to go to Ludlow they were fired upon and driven back by the militia, notwithstanding they were driving undertaker wagons. Several railroad employees passing through Ludlow had filed a protest against dead bodies being laid in plain view of the trains, so that permission was granted by Maj. Hamrock for the undertakers' wagons to come and get the bodies and the Red Cross people were permitted to accompany them.

John McLennan, president of district 15, United Mine Workers, also secured permission of Maj. Hamrock to accompany the party; so two automobile loads of people, McLennan, the Red Cross, two ministers from Trinidad went ahead. I accompanied the two drivers who took the two undertaker wagons starting for Ludlow at the same time. Our conveyances being drawn by horses, we did not arrive until about an hour after the autos did. An incident occurred just before I reached Ludlow that would give you some idea of the vicious manner in which the militia conducted conditions. While east of Ludlow, a man who lived alongside of the road told me that if I attempted to go any farther he was satisfied that I would be shot; that the machine guns were shooting at everything along the road, and while we were talking to this man, an auto appeared along the top of the hill and started toward Trinidad. Immediately the machine guns were turned on this machine and I presume there were many hundred shots fired on it. When the machine came up to where I was the wind shield was shot off and many holes were in the top and body of the machine. The machine was owned by a man by the name of Seevers, a merchant who resides in Roswell, N. Mex. He was accompanied by his son and daughter and his daughter-in-law. After I assured him there was no further danger he started on his way to Trinidad and stopped over night at the Toltec Hotel.

I then started to go to Ludlow and no attempt was made to shoot at us. We were carrying a Red Cross flag, and the only conveyance we had were the two undertaker wagons. When I got to the tent colony, or where it had been located, I went over to the pit or cellar that had been found and assisted in taking out of that hole 11 children and 2 women. It is my firm opinion that these women and children, at least not all of them, were suffocated in this place. Being under ground there was no chance for them to be burned, and some of them were burned so badly that you could not distinguish whether they were black or white unless you looked under their clothing. I feel satisfied that some of them were burned in other tents and afterwards put in this hole by the militia.

Another instance that I would like to relate; this is only my opinion, but the circumstances surrounding the case justified me in saying that I feel there was a conspiracy to murder John McLennan, president of district 15, he having received permission to go to Ludlow from Maj. Hamrock, and upon his arrival he was promptly arrested and taken before Maj. Hamrock by a corporal or a sergeant, but Hamrock ordered his release. McLennan then went down in sight of the colony waiting for the arrival of the undertaker wagons, but they were removing the bodies, and he was arrested the second time and was told to stand in the middle of the road in front of the colony site, and when I arrived on the scene was standing there by himself without even a guard. It was some five minutes after I got up to the hole where the bodies were before I learned of McLennan's arrest, and the whole situation was so suspicious to me that I asked one of the nurses and a couple of women to go down and stand by McLennan in the road. It is my opinion that he was placed there for no other purpose than to have him shot from the cars on the tracks a short distance away, and the report would be made that he attempted to escape after being arrested. That was what they did to Tikas and Fyler on the 20th.

The whole attitude and conversation of the militia on this occasion was one of hatred and full of malice and profanity and everyone who in any way at all sympathized with the striking miners were characterized immediately as "red necks" and undesirable and should be driven from the country. When I protested to some soldiers about firing on the autos, I was informed that it was none of my business; that had they known who was on the undertaker wagon they would have shot it up. I give these illustrations out of many, many hundreds that I might enumerate had I the time and space. I trust that this commission will be able to give to the United States the widest possible publicity of the information gained in this State and evolve some plan by which it shall not occur again. Constitutional government does not exist in certain portions of Colorado, and this situation has been brought about by the greed of the few nonresident mine officials.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWIN V. BRAKE,
Deputy State Labor Commissioner.

WALSENBURG, COLO., September 27, 1914.

Mr. E. V. BRAKE,
Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. BRAKE: Yours of 24th instant to hand, and take pleasure in giving you the desired information as far as I have been able to get it. Am inclosing you the copies of the commissioners' orders; the changes were made (most of them) at the July board meeting. As the inclosed copies state, there was one change made the 16th of the present month, as you will notice.

I also give you the name of three precincts that are inclosed by barbed-wire fences where we have no show to see that a semblance of a square deal may be had, to wit:

Walsen mine (No. 18): Inclosed, with nothing in the precinct but scab votes.

Rouse (No. 22): Inclosed, with nothing in the precinct but scab votes.

Oakview (No. 20): Inclosed, with nothing in the precinct but scab votes.

There are also five other precincts that are not inclosed, but had just about as well be, as they are just coal camps and nothing in them but mine guards and their laborers. I know that there are a great many that will vote in these camps that are not legal voters, if they are not looked after. The question now is, How are we to get a square deal in these corporation camps?

Tioga and Big Four, which formerly voted in their mines, were changed at their July board meeting so the miners are compelled to go 18 miles to vote. These are all solid Democratic votes as the mines have been working under union scale. When the mines signed up with the union the commissioners changed the voting place, thinking perhaps it would knock the Democrats out of some of their votes. This is now known as Tioga precinct No. 30.

We certainly hope there can be something done to relieve us of this dominating way that our county commissioners have of changing precincts at their pleasure to accommodate them and do so much injustice and inconvenience to the fair-minded people of this county. All that we are asking for is a square deal, we want nothing more. This, I imagine, if taken up in the proper way will be remedied. If we can get a square deal in these closed camps we certainly can wipe this rotten political clique out of existence (after 18 years), and I think no stone should be left unturned to clean up on this bunch. The honorables Charles Thomas and Edward Keating know just what this political situation in Huerfano County is; they know what these people in power will do to remain in power; there is nothing so low down that the present gang would not do to accomplish their ends.

If there is any other information that you desire, as it, and if it is possible for me to get it you shall have it at once.

Yours, very truly,

E. L. NEELY.

WALSENBURG, COLO., September 16, 1914.

Whereas at the July meeting of this board, owing to the small number of voters at that time residing in Niggerhead precinct No. 14, said precinct was ordered discontinued as an election precinct, and the territory contained therein was ordered annexed to North Veta election precinct No. 10; and

Whereas it now appears to this board that the coal mines located in said Niggerhead precinct No. 14, as heretofore existing, have resumed operation and are now employing a large number of mine workers to whom much unnecessary travel and inconvenience will be occasioned if compelled to vote in North Veta precinct No. 10: Therefore it is

Ordered, That the action of this board at its July meeting, in relation to said Niggerhead precinct, be rescinded and that the said Niggerhead precinct, No. 14 be, and it is hereby, reestablished as a voting precinct, and shall consist of the following territory, to wit: The south half of section 7, sections 18 and 19, in township 28, range 66, and sections 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, and 26 in township 28, range 67; and it is further Ordered, That the voting place of said precinct be at the Niggerhead boarding house, and that Ruben Romero, Dale Jellison, and Antonio Pacheco be appointed the judges of election in said precinct.

[Exact copy of the board of commissioners' orders.]

Ordered, That sections 21, 28, and 33, heretofore forming part of Crestones precinct No. 12, be taken from said precinct and added to Gardner precinct No. 1.

Ordered, That Oak Creek precinct No. 34, be disestablished and that the territory heretofore comprising said precinct, as established by order of the board on October 7, 1910, be added to and form part of Badito precinct No. 2.

Ordered, That all that part of Badito precinct No. 2, as heretofore established, lying east of a line running from Querna Verda Peak and following the mountain ridge to the Badito bridge, and east of the road from Badito bridge to La Veta, be taken from said Badito precinct and added to Tioga precinct No. 30; that said consolidated precinct be known as Tioga precinct No. 30, and that the voting place of said precinct be at the schoolhouse of school district No. 3, in NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ NE. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 3, T. 27, R. 68.

That the territory comprised in Turkey Creek precinct No. 11, and Birmingham precinct No. 13, as heretofore established and created be consolidated into one precinct to be known as Birmingham precinct No. 13, and that the voting place of said precinct be at the Birmingham schoolhouse.

Ordered, That the territory in Rocky Mountain precinct No. 29, and Gordon precinct No. 45, as heretofore established and created, be consolidated into one precinct to be known as Rocky Mountain precinct No. 29, and that the voting place of said precinct be at the schoolhouse at Rocky Mountain.

Ordered, That the territory comprised in Pictou precinct No. 17, Maitland precinct No. 23, and Toltec precinct No. 28, as heretofore established and created, be consolidated into one precinct to be known as Pictou precinct No. 17, and that the voting place of said precinct be at the Pictou schoolhouse.

Ordered, That Niggerhead precinct No. 14 be discontinued and the territory heretofore contained in said precinct be added to and form part of North Veta precinct No. 10.

Ordered, That sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, part of section 19, sections 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and part of sections 30, 29, 23, 27, and 26 in T. 29, R. 65, heretofore forming part of Rouse and Pryor precincts, be taken from said precincts and added to Valdez precinct No. 31, and that the boundaries of said Valdez precinct No. 31 be, and they are hereby, established as follows, to wit:

Commencing at the northwest corner of section 3, T. 28, R. 65, and running thence south on section line 3 miles, thence west on section line $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles to the east boundary of precinct 24; thence south along said boundary parallel to the range line between ranges 65 and 66, and distance $\frac{1}{4}$ mile east thereof to the north boundary of section 18, T. 29, R. 65; thence south on section line $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles; thence west to center of section 19, T. 29, R. 65; thence $\frac{3}{4}$ mile to SW. corner of NW. of NE. quarter of section 30, T. 29, R. 65; thence east on subdivision line to the eastern boundary of the county; thence northeasterly along said boundary to its intersection with the north boundary of township 28, R. 64, and thence west along said boundary 8 miles more or less to the place of beginning; and be it further Ordered, That the boundaries of Pryor precinct No. 21, and Rouse precinct No. 22 remain as heretofore established, less those portions thereof hereby added to Valdez precinct No. 31.

Ordered, That precincts Nos. 16 and 39, as last heretofore existing and established, be consolidated into one precinct to be hereafter known as Walsenburg precinct No. 16, and that the voting place of said precinct No. 16 be at Farr's garage.

Ordered, That Walsenburg precincts Nos. 26 and 41, as last heretofore existing and established, be consolidated into one precinct to be known as Walsenburg precinct No. 26, and that the voting place of said precinct No. 26 be at the Coor's storage, near the D. & R. G. depot.

Ordered, That Walsenburg precincts Nos. 36 and 40, as last heretofore existing and established, be consolidated into one precinct and to be hereafter known as Walsenburg precinct No. 36, and that the voting place of said precinct be at the colored church.

Ordered, That the territory comprised within the boundary of Walsenburg precincts Nos. 6, 38, 37, and 42, as last heretofore existing, be henceforth divided into three precincts to be known as Walsenburg precinct No. 6, Walsenburg precinct No. 37, and Walsenburg precinct No. 38, with boundaries as follows, to wit:

Commencing at the intersection of the center line of Russell Street, town of Walsenburg, with the track of the D. & R. G. R. R. and running thence west along the center of said track to its intersection with the track of the Colorado & Southern R. R.; thence along the center of said track to the south boundary of the town of Walsenburg; thence east along said south boundary to its intersection with the center line of Hendren Street in Walsenburg; thence north along said line to an intersection with the center line of Seventh Street, town of Walsenburg; thence east along said line to an intersection with the center line of Albert Street, town of Walsenburg; thence north along said line to an intersection with the center line of Sixth Street, town of Walsenburg; thence east along said line to an intersection with the center of Russell Street, Walsenburg, and thence north along said line to an intersection with the track of the D. & R. G. R. R. to the place of beginning; that said described precinct be henceforth known as Walsenburg precinct No. 6, and that the voting place of said precinct be at the county courthouse.

Commencing at the intersection of the center line of Russell Street, town of Walsenburg, with the center line of Sixth Street, town of Walsenburg, and running west along said line to its intersection with the center line of Hendren Street, Walsenburg; thence south along said line to the south boundary of the town of Walsenburg; thence east along said boundary to the southeast corner of said town; thence north along the center of the traveled road to Main Street, Walsenburg, and along the center of said street to its intersection with the center line of Seventh Street, Walsenburg; thence east along said line to its intersection with the center line of Russell Street, Walsenburg, and thence north along said line to its intersection with Sixth Street, Walsenburg, the place of beginning. Said above-described territory to be henceforth known as Walsenburg precinct No. 37, and that the voting place of said precinct be at the Klien Hotel.

Commencing at the point where the east boundary line of the town of Walsenburg intersects the center line of the track of the D. & R. G. R. AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF COLORADO,

County of Las Animas, ss.:

We, Robert Brockett and Mildred Brockett, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, upon oath depose and say: On the 19th day of December we shipped through Mr. Coffee, an agent for the employment firm of O'Neill & Price, whose office is situated at 413½ Virginia Avenue, Joplin, Mo., for Colorado. We were told that there had been a strike at this place, but that it was settled, most of the strikers having returned to work, the others going to other parts of the country.

We were given a contract and two blanks to sign, and were told that this contract was for 20 acres of land one-half mile from the mine, this land to be paid for $10 each pay day until $1,200 had been paid; we were also told that the house would be furnished complete, and that we could have one, two, three, or more rooms; we were taken to the depot by a Mr. West, who seemed to take a great interest in all the people who were shipping, and who had informed us that all of the women of the party would be furnished with sleeping accommodations in the Pullman; also the entire party would be furnished with meals at regular intervals.

We had supper at Burton, Kans., and about 9.30 we asked to be shown to the berth; we were told that there was no berth for anyone, and that we would have to stay in this car, an ordinary day coach; we were forced to sit up all night regardless of the fact that I offered to pay for a berth for Mrs. Brockett. I was not permitted to get out to buy anything to eat for breakfast, but was told that we would have lunch at La Junta; arriving there, was not allowed to get off, but was told that we would have lunch in Trinidad; but upon our arrival there we were not allowed to get off, and were told to close the windows; that we were but a short way from our destination and would have lunch there in 30 minutes. It was 11.30 before we had anything to eat that day.

Although we had been told that we could have one, two, or more rooms that were furnished, we were forced when we arrived at Delagua to take a four-room cottage and to pay $9.40 for the same. It being unfurnished, we were told that we would have to buy the furniture, which we did, the bill amounting to $252, all of it being secondhand. We bought this much furniture, as we intended to keep four boarders, which we did for three days, when they were fortunate enough to get out of the camp and away. We then returned $61 worth of the furniture, as we had made up our minds to get along with as little expense as possible, thinking in that way we could get out of debt and leave this place. We concluded that in order to reduce expenses we would ask for just $5 per week at the store. My wife went to the superintendent and explained to him this matter and asked him for an order for $5 for groceries, which he gave her. This amount lasted a trifle over a week, and when we went to the store for another $5 credit she was told by the clerk in a very insolent manner that she couldn't get anything there, that she would have to go to the superintendent and get an order, they having made other arrangements since this agreement with him. When she went to the superintendent, she was told that he would not give her an order, as her orders were coming too fast. When told this, Mrs. Brockett replied that a man to work must have something to eat and that if she could not get it they would leave. She was told by the superintendent that she would not be allowed to leave, that they owed the company, and he was there to protect the company and see that they were paid. Mrs. Brockett then told him that she had a father and that she would send for him. The superintendent informed her that she could send for her whole damn family for all the good it would do her, as they would not get in when they came. Mr. Brockett says that while in the store one evening a Mr. Davis, who came from Pittsburgh, started to tell some soldiers about a man whom he found dead in the mine and whom he says was shot. Mr. Davis was told by the soldiers it would be a damn good thing for him to keep his head shut and that no one was killed in the mine, although Mr. Davis says that the body of Mr. Hayes, the man who was shot, was still warm when he found it.

There are five families at Delagua who are badly in want and who have been refused the privilege of leaving. One of these families, Vaughn by name, has three children, one a boy about 4 and two girls, 6 and 8 years, respectively. The children are without shoes, and Mrs. Brockett heard the superintendent refuse to give Mrs. Vaughn an order for shoes for the children, who are absolutely barefooted. The marshal and the superintendent tell these people they can not get out until they have worked at least 30 days, it taking that much time to pay for their transportation. These families are all afraid to leave or try to, believing that if they are caught they will be placed in the guardhouse and compelled to work.

On December 29 John and Fred Martin, Jesse Draine, and Robert Brockett went for a walk up the side of one of the mountains. They had not gone very far when they were met by a soldier, who ordered them back. Mr. Brockett told him that they were just out for a walk and did not intend leaving the camp. The soldier replied, "Well, by God, you can't go out this way unless you got a pass; God damn you, I am guarding this place and you can't get by," so they returned to the camp. We made up our minds January 8 to leave, but said nothing until we had secured a pass from Lieut. Edwards. When the superintendent and the marshal were told by us that we were going, we were told that we were so damn fresh that they would not issue a pass, but as we already had one we didn't need their pass. The marshal came to the house at 6 o'clock the morning of the 9th, stayed there, and checked up everything to see that we didn't steal the stove or dresser—in fact made himself so much at home about the house that Mrs. Brockett had great difficulty in dressing. Mr. Brockett was injured while at work in the mine one day and was unable to work or did not go to work; the next day the marshal called to find out the reason of his absence, and when told that Mr. Brockett was sick said to him, "You don't look sick, and besides you owe the company quite a bill, and you had better go to the mines, even if you don't do anything but ride the rope," which he did for that day.

There is quite a good deal of shooting done around the mine and in that locality, but am unable to say who the shooting is done by.

When asking for a settlement, I had worked 10 days, making a total of $30.80, and $12 for board, which had been taken out of the pay of the four men, making a total of $42.80. The bill at the store was $28.80, leaving a balance of $14 which was due; this $14, we were told, was deducted for railroad fare.

When we asked the superintendent where the 20 acres of land were that we were told about when we left home, he just laughed at us and said all the land we got we would dig out of the mine. And immediately upon our arrival some of the soldiers came up to the hotel and told all of those who were from Missouri to stand up and be searched, and they even went through some of the suit cases.

We have just been married six months and came out here on the land deal, thinking that we would get a start in life.

Further affiants saith not.

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y., Monday, January 18, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners O'Connell, Lennon, Harriman, Ballard, and Garretson.

Chairman WALSH. I desire to announce that the hours for the hearing will be from 10 o'clock until 12.30, and from 2 until 4.30.

Will you proceed now, Mr. Untermeyer?

TESTIMONY OF MR. SAMUEL UNTERMYER.

Chairman WALSH. Your name, please?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Samuel Untermeyer.

Chairman WALSH. And your profession?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Lawyer.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived in New York?

Mr. UNTERMYER. About 45 years.

Chairman WALSH. You have been a practicing lawyer in New York for how long?

Mr. UNTERMYER. About 35 years.

Chairman WALSH. You have given attention to civic and social matters, I believe, also, and have done work along those lines?

Mr. UNTERMYER. To some extent.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you to state in your own way, please, Mr. Untermeyer, the extent, if any, to which potential control over labor conditions is in the hands of financial directors of large corporations in New York and elsewhere.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Mr. Chairman, before undertaking to answer questions of which a summary has been sent me, I would like to make my position upon these economic questions a little plain.

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Mr. UNTERMYER. So that my answers to these specific questions may not be misunderstood. If you have no objection I will read a statement that I have dictated.

Chairman WALSH. Very good; please do so.

Mr. UNTERMYER (reading): Notwithstanding its injustice and many other shortcomings, I believe in the capitalistic system as our only present solution. Socialism is a beautiful, iridescent dream. It is useful mainly as a protest against the cruel inequalities of existing social conditions. Civilization owes to socialism a great debt of gratitude for its idealism and self-sacrifice and for its restraint upon the grosser excesses of capitalism. But it does not work out as a practical, constructive policy of government.

Socialism, communism, syndicalism, and like theories of government are thriving mainly upon the abuses of capitalism—its stupid lack of imagination and of enlightened selfishness. Capitalism is more powerful, more rampant, more despotic, and less controlled by law or public sentiment with us than in any other country. It lacks the most elemental sense of justice and fights every inch of the way regardless of the merits of the controversy. Of all its blunders its blindness to and disregard of the welfare of the industrial workers who are its chief asset is the most flagrant, short-sighted, and unpardonable.

Socialism seizes upon those abuses and defects and fills its ranks by championing policies that are not legitimately a part of its tenets and that are logically a part of the capitalistic system, properly administered. If capital were less obsessed with its own righteousness and sense of security the growth of socialism would soon come to an end. Its only real friends are its critics. Those who sit idly by in smug contentment are its worst enemies.

Although a believer in the abstract principles of States' rights, I feel driven by the logic of events to being a nationalist in politics. Our doctrine of States' rights was evolved at a time when Buffalo was farther from New York City than San Francisco is now. State lines mean little nowadays except the opportunity to obstruct reform and to foster abuses.

We need comprehensive corporate, social, and industrial reform in order to mitigate the most cruel of the wrongs that lie at the bottom of the unrest evidenced by socialism and by the more violently lawless forms of protest.

There is every reason for impatience with existing conditions. We are at least a generation behind European nations in everything that pertains to these subjects. We do less for the masses than any of the other civilized countries. Our form of Government is largely at fault. The limitations of our Constitution stand in the way. There is the constant conflict between Federal and States' rights in the regulation of corporations and in carrying out legislation for the betterment of the industrial workers. Uniformity is impossible under separate State laws. Each State jealously watches the others to see to it that capital is not attracted elsewhere by necessary restrictive regulation. Without uniformity to take care of the elements of competition we can make no progress with industrial reform. The world has never known or dreamed of anything to compare with our stupendous corporate entities. They are fabulous in their size and concentration of money and power. They have grown up almost overnight and they are an ominous threat to our institutions, unless justly and rigidly controlled. There is a lot of loose and irresponsible talk about our having too much law and too much corporate regulation of business. The fact is that we are suffering from the absence of regulative law over these vast aggregations and that such law as we have is too deeply impressed with and too highly colored by the influence of capital upon our legislative bodies.

We rarely get effective laws to deal with corporations. They are usually the result of unsatisfactory compromises that reflect struggle between the people and the power of a handful of selfish men. This is especially true in State legislation, where the power of those men, trading upon the competition between the States in laxity of administration, is one of our chief troubles in dealing with corporations. The result has been that the conservative States that wanted to preserve corporate responsibility have been compelled to abandon their standards and to follow the policies of their less responsible sisters in order to save themselves from having their corporations taken from them. The tendency of State laws regulating corporations has been steadily away from the lines of adequate responsibility.

The manner of the organization of the Rockefeller, Carnegie, Sage, and other similar foundations is a fair illustration of the vice of the system. These foundations make no pretence of being limited in their activities by State lines. They are not only national but international in their scope of beneficence. The Rockefeller Foundation sought a Federal charter, but was not satisfied with the terms on which it was offered by Congress. It wanted our fundamental laws against perpetuities ignored and repealed so far as concerned its powers and limitations. It promptly secured from the New York State legislature what Congress refused to grant. The Sage and Carnegie Foundations did the same. If New York had not given them what they wanted they would have passed along from State to State until they found a corporate habitation on their own terms, without in the least interfering with their operating wherever they chose. This ought not to be possible.

I do not share the fear and distrust of these foundations. I believe them to be prompted by the highest ideals of patriotism and unselfish public spirit. They are magnificently managed by the best intellect of the country—far better than would be possible with any public institution. The genius and resourcefulness to which their founders owed their material success have been unselfishly expended by these men upon these foundations, which are to be monuments to future generations of their usefulness to society. They are doing incalculable public good and no harm. Happily, their conduct does not to any appreciable extent reflect the devious methods by which those fortunes were accumulated, nor the views or policies of their founders on economic questions.

In every case in which the hope or expectation of future endowments may possibly be influencing the policies of the institution the effect will be at most temporary. It will pass away with the life of the founder if there is any such present restraint. I can see great benefits and no appreciable danger from the existence of these foundations, except from the forms of their organization, which should be altered as I suggest in the following particulars:

First. They should be organized under a uniform Federal law instead of under special State charters.

Second. They should not be given a perpetual charter. One generation has no right to bind another. We may have an entirely different social structure and different conceptions of education in 50 years to which these institutions may be most repugnant.

Third. There should be a limit to their size.

Fourth. They should not be permitted to accumulate income.

Fifth. There should be governmental representation when the time comes for replacing the present trustees.

We can never have effective corporate reform until we get a National corporation law applicable to corporations engaged in interstate commerce for the reasons above stated and because the corporations are too strong for the States and especially here in the East.

New York's new State banking law is a striking illustration of that fact. Instances could be multiplied indefinitely. We can never decentralize the growing concentration of the control of money without such a law. A complete change in our methods of governing corporations is required so that their control can be taken from the handful of men who dominate the corporations in which they have no substantial interest and be given back to those who own them. This can be accomplished through a national corporation law as affecting interstate corporations which will provide certain conditions.

I believe you want to take that question up a little later?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. Now, my question was, before you started to read your statement, Mr. Untermyer, the extent to which the potential control over labor conditions, if any, in the hands of directors of large corporations exists?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, the potential control, of course, is there. To what extent they exercise that control in the government of labor problems is another question. My own opinion is that they exercise it only on broad questions of policy, but the potential control is there in very much greater degree, I think, than generally realized. Take the railroad situation by way of illustration. I see I must have back from the stenographer the notes I gave him.

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir. The sergeant at arms will procure them.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Now, take, for instance, the railroad situation. That is concentrated very largely in the hands of a very few men in New York, and this concentration has been brought about mainly by defective laws for the reorganization of railroad corporations. I have a list here of the railroads that have come under the hands of one or two banking interests as the result of reorganization of insolvent roads, and it includes over 100,000 miles of the railroad system of the country, and we have now under reorganization another possible 60,000 miles of road that is likely to—not likely to, but more than likely to—come under the same control. Now let me illustrate.

Chairman WALSH. I wish that you would and kindly read that into the record, please.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. I think I will have to ask you to get that memorandum back to me that I gave you [addressing the reporter].

Chairman WALSH. Just a moment. The sergeant at arms will get it for you.

Mr. UNTERMYER. The system of railroad reorganization is responsible for a great deal of this concentration of the control of the railroads in the hands of the financiers. If we had laws such as they have in England and Germany regulating the reorganization of railroads and had minority representation in corporations, the proper method of voting, by which the real owners would participate in the management of that corporation, there would not be this concentration. You take, for instance, the present system—a railroad gets into difficulties; is about to become insolvent. Of course, the insiders know it when nobody else does. According to our present procedure they begin the judicial proceedings, and they get their own receivers, generally a man under whom the road has gotten into its difficulties. Immediately on the appointment of that receiver some banking house, by prearrangement, brings out a committee of reorganization—very respectable gentlemen—always respectable gentlemen—and that committee calls for the deposit of securities. Well, the shareholders must either subscribe to the kind of plan of reorganization laid down by the bankers or they have no hope whatever. They can not reorganize; they are scattered; it always requires a large amount of money; and the result is that when the road is reorganized it is reorganized by one or two banking houses, as a rule, and they put in their directors, frequently put in voting trustees, and from that time on the potential control of that road is in this reorganized board of directors named by them. They are not named by the shareholders at all. The shareholders can not get together. They—the reorganizers—assume the responsibility for the property; they supply it with its money needs; they buy its securities; and they designate, as a rule, its executive officers, and in a way hold themselves out as responsible for the management of the property, and they control the property—for all practical purposes they control it. These great corporations are not controlled by the vote of their shareholders. A very small proportion of the stock in the hands of a powerful banking house controls any corporation. The stock is largely scattered; that is the essential difficulty.

I want to get that list so as to give you an idea of the roads in the great systems in this country that have come under that sort of control as the result of this form of reorganizing insolvent properties.

Chairman WALSH. Well, the sergeant at arms will return in a moment.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, there are certainly a hundred thousand or more miles of road and about 60,000 miles of road now in receiverships or impending receiverships.

Chairman WALSH. What is the gross mileage, Mr. Ballard asks?

Mr. UNTERMYER. In the United States?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I don't know. I think it is something like 250,000 miles; I am not sure. I may be wrong about that.

Chairman WALSH. I am told that the sergeant at arms had to go over to the Tribune Building, where the stenographers had their office, and so we will be delayed a moment.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Perhaps we can get along without it.

Chairman WALSH. Perhaps we had better wait a few moments until we get that.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I find I have a list of those roads here. Here are some of the roads of the great systems that have gone through reorganization: The Baltimore & Ohio was reorganized through J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and Mr. Castro, of Morgan & Co., became a voting trustee upon the board. That is, generally there are three trustees, who hold stock for a given number of years, and they vote it, but after the voting trust expires control of the road continues pretty much the same. I do not think of any instance in this country in which the stockholders have ever really changed the management of any great corporation unless there has been a fight between two great interests; but as between the body of the stockholders on the one side and some great interests on the other, I do not recall any instance in the country in which a change of management has been effected by the action of the stockholders.

The Chesapeake & Ohio was reorganized by Morgan & Co. as reorganization managers. The Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton was reorganized by Morgan & Co. as reorganization managers, the late Mr. Morgan becoming a voting trustee. That is again in process of reorganization now—under reorganization. You may remember it was sold to the Erie, and then had to be taken back, and then it has been since dumped on the Baltimore & Ohio, where it now rests, and is in receivership.

The Chicago Great Western, which was reorganized by Morgan & Co. as reorganization managers, Mr. Morgan and his associate, Mr. George F. Baker, being two of the three trustees. I think that is still in the voting trust.

The Erie, which was reorganized by J. P. Morgan & Co. as reorganization managers; Mr. Morgan became a voting trustee.

The Northern Pacific was reorganized by J. P. Morgan as reorganization manager, Mr. Morgan becoming a voting trustee.

The Pere Marquette, reorganized by Morgan & Co., and, I think, now again undergoing reorganization, if I am not mistaken.

The Southern Railway, reorganized by J. P. Morgan & Co. as reorganization managers, and Mr. Morgan and Mr. Baker becoming voting trustees.

The Reading, reorganized by Morgan & Co. as reorganization managers. Mr. Morgan became one of the voting trustees.

The Union Pacific, reorganized by Kuhn, Loeb & Co., together with the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific, then under the same organization.

And among other systems now undergoing reorganization or financial readjustment may be mentioned the Wabash, the Rock Island, the Missouri Pacific, the Wheeling & Lake Erie, the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton, the Pere Marquette, and perhaps half a dozen other roads, probably aggregating fifty or sixty thousand miles, which are practically certain to come under the same general control.

So you will see as a result—I think largely as the result of this archaic system of ours, as soon as a railroad gets into trouble it is liable to add to the concentration of the control of railroad properties of the country by all coming into the hands of one or two interests, and these people, having the responsibility for the property, they designate the presidents and designate largely the board of directors, and those boards do not change materially, except through death, and then their substitutes are designated. So we have a most stupendous concentration of control, for instance, in the railway properties of the country.

Now, to my mind, when a great question of policy in dealing with labor arises it is a very easy matter to decide it, so far as one side of the controversy is concerned, because it can be decided almost from one office. That is the potential control that the great financial interests possess over railroad property.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you know of any instances, Mr. Untermeyer, that have either come under your own observation or which you heard from any quarter, of the exercise of this control?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I think it would be rather loose to discuss what one hears in the way of rumor. Personally I know of no instance of the exercise of the control that has come under my personal observation. Of course I have heard of a great many instances; but I would rather not discuss those, because hearsay is very unreliable.

Chairman WALSH. Unless you have some personal objection to it, we would like it because, you understand, this is an investigating body, and sometimes a suggestion is made through hearsay testimony out of which may be developed the actual facts.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think one of those instances was very fully exploited before the Stanley committee, was it not, in the steel investigation, in which there was the question that the labor and orders came from abroad. I believe the documents were put in the record in the Stanley investigation. I would rather not indulge in the loose method of trying to recapitulate what was in the record.

Chairman WALSH. I see. That was gone into before the Stanley committee?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; that is my recollection of it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that these financial directors, selected as you have indicated, have a sufficient knowledge of industrial conditions and what we might call social philosophy to qualify them to direct policies involving such a large number of people?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I would not like to pass on the knowledge of social philosophy that these gentlemen possess. Everybody has his own conception of social philosophy. I may say generally that I think that the financial people in New York who serve on these boards have less knowledge of the real sentiment of the country than the man from Oshkosh. I do not think they know very much about the real sentiment of this country. I believe we are the most provincial part of the country right here.

Chairman WALSH. I think you stated that you had not observed any of the devious methods, I believe you call it, which were used in acquiring these large functions being exercised in the conduct of the foundations.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I said that from the little I had been able to observe I did not think that the foundations—I did think that the foundations were well managed in an enlightened way.

Chairman WALSH. Would you care to give your opinion as to the effect on the general social conditions in America of the development of enormous fortunes as the result of methods such as you have mentioned, which have been practiced during the last 30 or 40 years?

Mr. UNTERMYER. The result of what, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH. The result of general social conditions in America.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I suppose everybody will agree that it has been demoralizing.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider—pardon me, were you going to say something?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I was going to say I do not think there would be much of these things going on—that the methods that were adopted in acquiring these vast fortunes could never be repeated in this country or in any other. I believe everybody concedes that there has been great improvement of late years in the methods.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that the creation of very large fortunes as a result of such methods in American industries is in any considerable degree a cause of poverty?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, that is a very profound sociological problem.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; that is one reason why we are asking the question.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is a very profound sociological and economic problem, and would probably take a long while to develop in a discussion, would it not, Mr. Chairman? Undoubtedly the diversion of moneys from their legitimate channels and the accumulation of those moneys in illicit ways does affect the question of poverty and does increase poverty. If, by way of illustration, you can take a property that is worth a million dollars and by manipulation and inflation of capital put it upon the market for $10,000,000, and through artificial means scatter those securities out among the people on the basis of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000, the natural temptation is to try to pay dividends on those $20,000,000 or $10,000,000. Well, the efforts to pay dividends on an inflated capital always lead, in the first instance, to an attempt to secure a monopoly of the industry so as to get the profit by artificial means; if you can not get it by securing a monopoly of the industry, then the next effort is to get it by reducing the expenses, and the laborer is the first man whom you come across when you consider the question of reducing operating expenses, so that the attempt to make returns on inflated capital always reacts upon the industry.

Chairman WALSH. You have stated that there has been a marked improvement in the method of the operators of these concerns within the past few years. I will ask you what your observation has been as to how that came about—by the voluntary acts of the individuals concerned in those operations, by growing governmental supervision, or by public criticism.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it has been due partly to public exposure of the so-called muckrakers, in public investigations, and partly to the tendency to further Government control. Of course the Government control over the railroads has done away with a great deal of the dishonesty in railroad management. It has not done away with all of it, because Government control is not yet effective; there is a great deal to be done to complete the effectiveness of railroad control. But wherever there has been Government control, such as the growing Government control over banks and financial institutions, a more frequent and thorough examination of financial institutions like life insurance companies has certainly created a revolution in the standard of official management; and I think we have a code of ethics to-day in financial institutions that is vastly better than we had a few years ago, but I think it is still capable of great improvement, and I am hoping that with that increasing control we shall have better standards of corporate management. I think the time will come when it will be considered dishonest, and punished as dishonesty, for the men who are in control of these great corporations to exploit them for their own purposes, and to gamble on inside information—to rig the stock market—but we have not reached that stage of it.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed whether or not this general improvement would extend to the betterment of the condition of the employees in the industry involved?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think the indications are very apparent; that there are efforts being made in the industries to assist the general condition of the workers; in some instances to give them something that looks like participation. Of course I do not think that they are effective at all. I think we have got to have a system of social reform in the way of unemployment insurance—insurance against sickness and invalidity.

Chairman WALSH. Before we get to that I am trying to attract your attention to the specific matter, if possible, of the improvement of the condition of the workers, so far as their wages and hours, we will say, are concerned; have you observed that detail?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I am not sufficiently familiar with that situation to discuss it.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed the effect upon the workers in industries, as an example, of the concentration of manufacturing industries into large corporations?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it is distinctively harmful. I have had some occasion to observe that. The concentration of the control of an industry in a few hands destroys the liberty of the worker and destroys the power of his union and puts it in the hands of the managers of that industry to say whether it shall be a union concern or not, whether it shall be organized or unorganized labor, and I am a great believer in organized labor and the extension of that principle.

Chairman WALSH. Why?

Mr. UNTERMYER. For the purpose of giving them a chance against organized capital. The struggle is hard enough when they are both organized. Capital can wait and still live, but labor has got to make a living or starve. The conditions, under the most advantageous conditions, are grossly unequal, but when you get a great aggregation of capital in any industry, with all of the power behind it on the one side and the labor organization on the other, the labor organization is helpless. Nothing more short-sighted was ever done or suggested than that done by labor when it encouraged the organization of the trusts. I remember the time when they rather encouraged it, and thought it would be easy to control the situation; but anybody who looked a little ahead could see that was the most suicidal thing labor ever did, when it allowed all of the manufacturers or industries in a given field to come together in one vast aggregation and give them that power to fight labor.

Chairman WALSH. It was stated by a very large employer of labor before this commission that the employment of a man or nonemployment of him was a great deal like the purchase of a commodity in a store. You call at the store, and if you do not like the price or the conditions under which the sale is made you can retire and not deal with that concern. Likewise a man looking for employment can call on an employer, and if he is not satisfied with the conditions and the hours of labor, and so forth, he can likewise retire; and this gentleman made that parallel as the basis of his very decided opposition to dealing with organized labor as such. What do you say about that?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have always looked upon the refusal to deal with organized labor as a very despotic attitude, especially on the part of corporations, because a corporation is an aggregation of organized capital. I can not see why organized capital should refuse to deal with organized labor. It has got the best of it by far anyway. That illustration is very familiar, Mr. Chairman, and it does not deceive anybody in these days. It sounds likely enough, but it does not work out. The laborer who does not like his employer's terms, if the employer happens to have a monopoly of that particular industry, and that is the only industry the laborer knows, may have a hard time getting a job anywhere else, because there is no work elsewhere to do. He has no option whatever and that is not a fair argument.

Chairman WALSH. Does or does not a large corporation possess inherent possibilities for maintaining more proper labor conditions than smaller corporations?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That depends upon the corporation management that dominates. I imagine that if it looked far enough into the future it would see reasons for better treatment of its labor, for looking after the physical needs of its employees, and getting the best labor by treating all labor best.

Chairman WALSH. Can you cite any instances in which large corporations have voluntarily assumed a progressive attitude with regard to labor conditions in advance of public criticism or demands from their employees?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I should say that in some of these insurance schemes and in some of the plans that have been put out for cooperation and interesting the employees in the business, and giving them an opportunity to buy securities from time to time there are evidences of a disposition of that kind. I think they are scattering, but there are such evidences. I believe some of these plans were formulated with the very best of intentions and some of them are very good.

Chairman WALSH. From your experience and knowledge have the corporations generally been favorable to the representatives of employees in the determination of labor questions either through trade unions or otherwise?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I think they have shortsightedly fought the movement all the way, and they have had so much power that our labor unions have not anywhere near the strength of the unions on the other side. They have neither the political power nor power of dealing with their employees that they have over there. The Government is constantly helping them over there and coming to the aid of the labor unions.

Take in Germany. The whole trend of the German Government has been to recognize and favor the labor unions. I have in mind by way of illustration the bill passed at the time of the organization of the Potash Trust; you may remember the Potash Cartel, as they call it. That is an operation of the mine owners who own the potash mines, of which Germany has the monopoly of the world, there being two or three of these mines owned by the Government. They wanted to get together in a pool so as to restrict production and keep up the price. Those pools are allowed in Germany under Government supervision, but when it came to the form of the act that the Reichstag should pass the Socialist Party had a great deal to say about it so far as it concerned labor. Now, in the determination of the output of these mines that constituted the pool each mine had its proportion of the output; it had to turn out a certain percentage of the output. When the bill came to be passed provisions were put in it to the effect, first, that any party to the pool that reduced the number of laborers should have its proportion of the pool reduced. Any party that increased the hours of labor or decreased the wages of labor should have its proportion of the pool reduced; and there were a number of provisions scattered all through that bill showing that labor had been considered at every stage of the preparation of the bill, and that the proportions that these men in the pool were to get would depend upon the liberality with which labor was treated. That was all the result of the Socialist Party representing the labor unions.

Chairman WALSH. And the Government, you say, worked that out?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; the Government worked that out with the aid of the Socialist Party.

Chairman WALSH. What plan would you consider desirable and possible, so far as the Government was concerned, in this country, in taking action of that sort?

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean in the way of assisting the labor unions?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNTERMYER. We have not the same freedom of action they have in other countries, because we have a Constitution, and our written Constitution stands in the way of a great many of these reforms.

Chairman WALSH. Have you given any thought as to any agency that might be created under our existing law that would further protect workers in their rights along the line perhaps suggested by you in this law relating to the potash industries?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Only when the corporations come to a legislative body for aid; then, of course, the legislature or Congress can impose such conditions as it sees fit; but we are not under corporate regulations to the same extent.

Chairman WALSH. Could it be done by a tariff law under existing constitutional provisions?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should say not.

Chairman WALSH. Why not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I don't think you could make a protective-tariff condition in regard to labor; I do not think you could discriminate in that way.

Chairman WALSH. With what provision of the Constitution do you think such a law would be in conflict?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have not considered it very fully; in fact, the thought is a new one suggested by your question, but you must be very careful that the laws are not unequal in their operation.

Chairman WALSH. Does not the imposition of tariff duties on the product of a certain industry in that general way discriminate as to all industries?

Mr. UNTERMYER. We have a special provision of the Constitution allowing Congress to levy customs.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think it is too contracted in its terms, if you recall its provisions after this time, to admit of any efforts on the part of the Government to see that any increase in the price of any product made possible by the imposition of the duty should go to the employee engaged in the industry?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I would not like to answer that question at this time, as it would require a good deal more consideration than I have been able to give it. I have never thought it possible, but it may be possible, to construct a tariff bill through a tariff commission that will take into account the conditions of labor.

Chairman WALSH. You have observed the growth and development in this country of administrative boards dealing with what are called strictly public utilities, of course?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And that it seems to be a modern development of the old legal right of control of such corporation in its nature a monopoly?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; and it is necessarily incident to our growing complexity of economic relations.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever thought of the proposition that inasmuch as the basis for rates controlled by these public bodies are, of course—that perhaps they could, under the present Constitution, enforce a minimum wage for the laborers in particular industries, in making rates?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I believe a minimum wage is constitutionally possible in interstate corporations as a condition to the rate-making power.

Chairman WALSH. That would apply to all public utilities of an interstate character from a Federal standpoint and to intrastate industries or at least where they exist—where they have such boards?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I do not see why a minimum wage can not be enforced as an incident of the rate-making power.

Chairman WALSH. For instance, a public utility board could declare a minimum wage in a State for, we will say, girls employed as telephone operators, in making up the rates

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should say that would not offend against any provision of the Constitution where they come under public regulation; as exercising a public franchise, they could impose the condition in prescribing the rate.

Chairman WALSH. And likewise something could be done in fixing the minimum wage for unskilled and unorganized laborers in the railroad lines?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; the same principle, I should say, would apply there. A very different question arises when you come to consider interstate corporations that do not enjoy a public franchise.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of corporations, for instance?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Any manufacturing corporation.

Chairman WALSH. Any corporation—you would draw a distinction between a corporation that has a charter under a general statute applying to mercantile and manufacturing organizations and those that have to do with furnishing commodities for public use?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I drew a very marked distinction between private corporations and public utility corporations.

Chairman WALSH. Or quasi public?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Those that exercise public franchises come under different regulations than those that do not. It is not the policy of the Government to interfere too much with private business.

Chairman WALSH. Outside of the question of policy, I was, of course, asking, for the time being, your offhand opinion as to the power of the Government.

Mr. UNTERMYER. These offhand curbstone opinions are not of much value.

Chairman WALSH. No; but sometimes they are instructive.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You get committed sometimes to a point of view and find you are wrong.

Chairman WALSH. I am going to ask you if you will please, Mr. Untermyer, construct certain constructive measures for the improvement of industrial conditions and for dealing with the evils of industrial wealth, inefficiency, poverty, and the like, that you have thought of perhaps in a general way in connection with the request made of you by Mr. Manly?

Mr. UNTERMYER. As I look upon the government of corporations, the manner in which they are controlled has a very vital effect upon labor conditions, especially with respect to the great corporations of the country. I look upon the concentration of the control of these corporations in a center like New York as a thing to be avoided if possible and a thing to be done away with for the good of every industry concerned. Take up, first, the question of corporate control. The fact is that the great corporations with widely scattered holdings are controlled by a very small proportion of the stockholders.

Chairman WALSH. We have testimony in the case of one corporation, for instance, that I think has a capital stock of $90,000,000 or $100,000,000 and a bonded indebtedness of practically $40,000,000, engaged in very large operations of production, that has 2,000 stockholders. Now, I would like you to state to the commission, from your experience and observation, what amount of stock would constitute an absolute control of such a corporation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. May I ask a few questions in that connection?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Is it a stock listed on the stock exchange?

Chairman WALSH. It is the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is listed on the stock exchange, and it is controlled by a great financial interest. Those are two very important factors in answering the question as to how much it takes to control.

Chairman WALSH. It has been stated that this large financial interest does not control because it owns only 40 per cent of the stock of that corporation.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That seems to me preposterous; in fact, I know it is. Here is the situation with respect to corporations of that character: In the first place I should say that 10 per cent would control that corporation, or less. Ten per cent of the stock, with the rest of it scattered among 2,000 stockholders, and the securities listed on the stock exchange, and the control held in strong financial hands, and for this reason. As to the stock that is on the exchange, that stock is being dealt in and speculated in, that is in the hands of brokers. The stock that is in the hands of brokers is always at the beck and call of any financial interest that is in control of the property. All they do is to send around and get the proxies from the brokers. So, when the stock is in the street, the big financial interest that is in control has a tremendous nucleus to start with. That nucleus comes from the blocks of stock held in the names of brokers who are carrying it for their customers. That always goes to that interest, because their interests are identical.

Now, the next point is stock that is in the hands of banks and bankers owned by them as large holders, that goes to them by proxies. In either case the stockholders are absolutely helpless in those corporations. This method of proxy voting is the greatest farce ever devised; it leaves the control in the hands of whoever has it, as a rule, and I should say in the case of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. that the stock scattered in that way, unless it appeared to the stockholders that somebody had made away with all of the assets, that you would not get a change of control under any circumstances if the people in control held but 5 or 10 per cent. Nearly every railroad corporation in this country is controlled with less than 10 per cent of the stock in the hands of all of the officers and the board of directors put together, and without knowing the exact figures in a case like that of the steel company I would undertake to say that the whole board of directors and all of the officers together do not own 5 per cent of the stock, and yet they control it as absolutely as if they owned the whole thing and maintained the control, and it has never been possible to take it away. This is due to our defective corporate system. Stockholders do not get a "look in"—the scattered stockholders—as a result of the system. What is the system? The management send out proxies every year, and the proxy is a power of attorney to some one they name. If you are a stockholder, you do not know to whom you are giving your proxy. It does not usually run to the man in control, but to some one nominated by him. You do not know for whom he is going to vote as a director. You send a power of attorney for him to vote for whoever he pleases.

These stockholders are scattered all over the country; they can not come to the meetings and vote in person, and the only plan devised by the law is to vote by proxy. I have suggested the following change in the method of voting stock: In the first place, the stockholder should be allowed to vote in person or by mail. We brought that about to some extent in the case of the insurance companies as a result of the investigation in 1906. The management should be required at least 90 days before a meeting to send out the names of its candidates for whom the stockholders should have the right to designate the candidate, which the management should also send out and then the stockholder gets a chance to vote for someone. That is the first change that ought to be made in the system of voting.

The second change, and still more important, should be one that would allow minority representation in corporations. We all know now that the majority of corporations, that the majority of the stock elects all the directors. The minority has no representation whatever. That discourages stockholders, so that they do not take any part in elections. They know that they can not get together to such an extent as to control the corporation as against any big financial interest that has it. As long as they can not control it they do not attempt to do anything.

Now, if you would encourage stockholders so that they could get a minority representation, they would take part in the management of their company. Now, for instance, suppose there are nine directors to be elected. Under this system of cumulative voting the minority representation—one-ninth of the stock—would elect one director, each one-ninth of that stock would elect one of the nine directors, so that the stockholders could get together and get representation in their corporation. If they had such a representation you might get local interest represented on the board of a corporation instead of absentee landlordism, which exists in all these great corporations, they being owned from the center down here. So, to my mind, one of the important features, one of the important reforms necessary in order to get a proper administration of these corporations that would redound to the interest of labor as well as of capital, would be to do away with proxy voting, have voting by mail, and give minority representation.

Chairman WALSH. Before we get too far away from the subject—you stated a while ago one banking company could practically decide labor—had the potential power to decide labor conditions for the railroads; which banking company?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I think that is quite apparent. I would rather not mention any names.

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Commissioner Lennon asks me to inquire—

Mr. UNTERMYER (interrupting). I have your list showing the method by which these corporations have been reorganized and the banking house that has had most to do with that reorganization.

Chairman WALSH. And that would be the one?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That one would have potential control. Now, I do not mean to say it is always exercising it.

Chairman WALSH. Certainly not.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not mean to infer that the presidents of these roads who are named largely by the banking houses, have not a great deal to say about it.

Here is an illustration, a very familiar illustration. Take the case of the New Haven road. Well, the house that dominated it just as they have all the property, had less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the stock when it got into trouble. That house had named the president under whom this vast amount of money was squandered and who had tried to create a monopoly in New England transportation, and when the president, who was acting under direction in gathering all this property together, when a row came along "they put him out"—the people who were responsible for his policies—and they put the other man in, the stockholders did not squeak. You have not heard any word from those 25,000 stockholders. The power of these people is just as great as it ever was in the management of that property.

Chairman WALSH. You mentioned absentee landlordism in industry as an undesirable situation. I wish you could briefly state what you deem to be the evils of absentee landlordism in industry.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Absentee landlordism, of course, we understand is the concentration of these great industries. Take a familiar instance of the steel company. Before those different plants were consolidated every locality had its plant, had its local management. After the consolidation with a view of economy the managements were consolidated, taken away from their localities, and the finances were conducted from New York, or some other great center. And you do not have, of course—the owners of the property were no longer in touch with their employees except through subordinates. But it is very difficult with our growing size of the corporation to avoid a certain amount of absentee landlordism. I think it has been carried to the verge of extremity.

Chairman WALSH. You think we have carried it, you say, to the verge of extremity?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Well, assuming, then, or admitting that, would the present concentration of our industries—admitting that absentee landlordism must exist, what would you say as to the duty of the director who was absent from the place, as to seeing that these policies which affect the men and women in the industry, or perhaps the passage or the administration of laws affecting those industries in the State, or violation of the law, if you will, would there be any new duty put upon a nonresident director in this newer development of great concentration?

Mr. UNTERMYER. This concentration of industries certainly emphasizes the need of comprehensive general laws to protect the welfare of the worker.

Chairman WALSH. Suppose, after a law was passed designed to protect the welfare of the workers, and a director, although a nonresident director, had his attention called to the alleged fact that the law was being violated by his company, what would his duty be under the circumstances?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, of course, that would depend upon the law. I should think the law would make it his duty when the knowledge came to him to enter his protest against the violation of the law and see to its enforcement. Of course, that is all a question of—the question of the director's responsibility is a question of law under which the corporation is organized, but our States have been, as I have said, competing with one another in tax administration, that directors would be held to in their well-defined responsibility.

Chairman WALSH. You mean by the law?

Mr. UNTERMYER. By the law.

Chairman WALSH. What would be the moral responsibility in this new development of a director toward the situation of that kind?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I don't feel capable to pass on questions of moral responsibility.

Chairman WALSH. What is the practice of the directors under those circumstances in these industries that are controlled by absent ownership?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, in the great industries where the boards are in New York I do not think they know much about the details of the business. It is very rare that they know anything about them. The directors are largely figureheads. The management controls the corporation, and the management in turn is, as a rule, dominated by some great financial interest. I am speaking of these concentrated combined industries only.

Chairman WALSH. What you might call the basic industries? Take the large coal companies.

Mr. UNTERMYER. They are not confined to the basic industries. There are a great many others that are under like control. There is quite—of course, you will find all that data in the report of the House Committee on Banking and Currency in the investigation of the so-called Money Trust.

Chairman WALSH. In your opinion, does the existing organization of industries and the existing Federal and State machinery seem adequate to accomplish the results which we ought to have?

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean for the protection of labor?

Chairman WALSH. For the protection of labor and of course with justice toward the employer.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; it seems to me we are doing very little for labor. We are doing very little for the industrial worker, nothing as compared to what the European countries are doing.

Chairman WALSH. Do you consider that the workmen employed by these large corporations are in a position to secure just and equitable treatment by trade-union organization alone?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I think it would go pretty far if it could be extended. But the trades-union combination alone will not do it in these days. You have got to have governmental aid, and you have got to have compulsory aid from the employer.

Chairman WALSH. Compulsory aid from the employer?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would state what you mean by that, Mr. Untermeyer.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I mean that I believe in insurance against sickness, insurance against invalidity, against unemployment, maternity benefits, all contributed to under State law by the employer, by the State, by the community, such as they have in other countries.

Chairman WALSH. Before we get into the detail of that, I want to ask you another question on the topic that we were dealing in.

Do you know of any corporation in the basic industries in which the trades-union organization is stronger than it was 10 years ago—any of these large concentrated companies?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have not any great detailed knowledge on those subjects, but so far as my observation has gone I think they are weaker rather than stronger. They certainly have not gained much financially.

Chairman WALSH. In other words, when the industry was highly concentrated the trade organizations seemed to grow weaker?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. In your observation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. It has naturally. The odds are more unequal. When the industry is concentrated and all capital is arrayed against the labor organization, it does not look like a fair deal.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you, Mr. Untermeyer, what your attitude would be toward a proposition, say, like this:

The institution of a Federal industrial council composed of employers, employees, and representatives of the public for the purposes of mediation and conciliation, such council to have jurisdiction over all disputes involved in interstate commerce and being primarily required to make rigorous and thorough investigation of the points at issue which should be given the widest publicity; to offer their services as mediators at the beginning of a dispute and act as conciliators through the progress of the dispute and to supply a court of arbitration in case the contending parties desire arbitration.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I think it is very desirable. Of course, you must leave out the question of compulsory arbitration.

Chairman WALSH. Why would you leave out the question of compulsory arbitration, please?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I do not think compulsory arbitration is a fair thing.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon asks me to ask you this question, please:

What power does the concentration in industry of which you have spoken give to expanding or contracting general industry?

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean in that particular line of industry?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes; generally in that particular line of general industry?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, the concentration of an industry, of course, gives the men unlimited power, the extent of it in that particular industry. Now, if you have concentrated any number of industries you get general power to expand or contract. I do not understand that concentration in a particular industry would give a general power of expansion or contraction in other industries.

Commissioner LENNON. What effect does that have upon the general welfare of labor?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I should say that it is very remote except as to that particular industry. Of course, its other effect would not be appreciable to my mind. It certainly would have a marked effect in that industry. Practically controlled labor has power to contract and expand in an industry, controls the labor in that industry.

Chairman WALSH. What has your observation been—now, I do not know but what I got off your line of thought when you started out on your proposed plan of the national social insurance. I wish you would begin where you left off and give us your thoughts upon that subject.

Mr. UNTERMYER. There is nothing very novel about my thoughts on that subject. They are gathered from a study of laws in European countries where they are, as I have said, at least a generation ahead of us in everything that pertains to the welfare of the worker—

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would give the commission the first development in this country under private control of what you might call industrial insurance.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Industrial life insurance?

Chairman WALSH. Industrial life insurance first.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. Well, I think an illustration of it is found in the greatest of the life insurance companies. That company has fourteen millions of policies outstanding in the hands of ten millions or about ten millions of industrial workers. That is, insurance against death.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is that straight life?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is largely straight life; yes. It has in its hands by way of reserve liability about $550,000,000 of assets. At the present rate of increase of its business within five years it will have a thousand million of dollars, and within 10 years it will have two thousand million of dollars of money in securities in its hands at the present rate of increase.

Now, that is a private institution. Until very recently it was a stock company. It has been converted from a stock company now into what is called a mutual life insurance company, which means nothing.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you give the name of that company?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not give the name of it; no.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Can you name the rate per thousand?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Sir?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Can you name the rate per thousand?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, it is a varying rate. Now that is in effect, that is a self-perpetuating institution. I mean the policyholders, if you wanted 10,000,000 policyholders to vote, in the first place it would cost the company probably a couple of hundred thousand dollars to get the lists ready. It would take a hundred volumes to contain those names.

In the next place, if you wanted to send out notices, just one notice to those policyholders to vote, it would cost $300,000 for just the printing of a letter and the stamps, without anything else. In other words, a real election in that company would cost a half a million dollars, and that is prohibitive. You can not have an election. It seems to me there ought to be State representation in an institution of that kind, some sort of State representation to protect and represent the interests of those 10,000,000 of industrial policyholders.

Now, the company is well managed, I believe. It has a tremendous power, force, and the officers, of course, appoint the agents. They have the agency force of about 10,000 men. They control the company, absolutely control it. We have very rigid supervision of insurance companies in this State since the upheaval incident to the insurance exposures, and our superintendent of insurance is very alert, I think, in looking after the character of investments. But still power lodged in the hands of these officers is tremendous, and there is not any check upon it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Explain what you mean by mutual—the change of the form of organization to mutual. What is implied by it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. You see it was a stock company. It had been started as a stock company, and it was deemed advisable to retire the stock, to have the company buy it, so that the company bought this stock. It has been canceled. Under our statute it thereupon becomes a mutual company, which means that every policyholder participates in the profits, and every policyholder presumably has a right to vote. Now, of course, you could not give them a right to vote. The company has not got any list of these 10,000,000 policyholders anywhere, and they only have lists of those with over a thousand dollars of insurance.

Chairman WALSH. How many of those are there?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Six hundred thousand.

Chairman WALSH. Six hundred thousand out of the fourteen million?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Out of about 10,000,000 of holders; 14,000,000 of policies in the hands of about 10,000,000 of holders.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They are simply supposed to have a mutual opportunity in the proposition?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is all it amounts to, and it does not amount to that. They are not even supposed to, by anybody who knows.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is a deception, then, in the transfer of the title, or in the name of the form, to lead the policyholder to believe that he is mutually sharing in the concern?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think there is any deception really intended. If a policyholder wants to come there, he can and vote, and I think the law will have to be changed so as to have some sort of a representation to speak for those stockholders.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson, would you like to ask a question?

Commissioner GARRETSON. You spoke of the fact that there are 14,000,000 of insurance certificates.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Fourteen million policies.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Fourteen million policies in the hands of 10,000,000 holders?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is there a system of policies of a given amount by which one policyholder holds one, two, or three certificates?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. It frequently happens that he has more than one policy. Commissioner GARRETSON. What are the policies—a thousand dollars?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. They are large—there are many very much smaller—$100 and $200 each.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you stated there were six hundred thousand of a thousand dollars or over.

Mr. UNTERMYER. A thousand dollars and over; yes sir. That is one of the questions that will have to be taken up in connection with this subject of industrial reform.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you about that now. I believe you suggested a plan for national social insurance covering all the corporations and any of those engaged in interstate commerce and open to voluntary use by other corporations and employees, such insurance to be paid from funds contributed by the corporation, employees, and in the State.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I wish you would please elaborate upon that, if you will, Mr. Untermyer, and state the proposition?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It would be a method of insurance that could be best carried out through the local society—unions connected with the various trades.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, begin at the national part of it. I believe you referred to it as a national social insurance?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Covering or embracing the employees engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Interstate commerce; yes.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would.

Mr. UNTERMYER. A national board would be tributary to the local feature.

Chairman WALSH. And the organization, its head, or what would be the head of the national organization?

Mr. UNTERMYER. He would be an officer of the Government.

Chairman WALSH. He would be an officer of the Government?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And the proposition would contemplate the creation of a bureau of national social insurance?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; just as you have it in England to-day, and as you have it in Germany and Austria and other countries.

Chairman WALSH. Just state, taking the plan in England to-day, how that plan would be here, following what you think we could do here under the plan in England and Germany.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, you have now accident insurance in many of the States. That could be extended so as to cover sickness, unemployment, and the other heads of insurance, recognized heads, in other countries; maternity benefits and the like. It would be compulsory, because voluntary insurance fails to reach the people who most need it. That is the experience of other countries—that the insurance must be compulsory and compulsory upon the worker and compulsory upon the employer, with the State and community contributing to it. I do not think it would be profitable to go into any detailed explanation of these various plans, because there are so many in the different countries that are in operation that it would only be confusing. I believe the statistics gathered by your commission, Mr. Chairman, show that every man, woman, and child in the United States now pays $5 a year for medicine alone, which is used in a haphazard way. I think their investigation further shows—I know it did in the other investigation—that in the poorer districts there were no physicians, practically none, until this insurance law against sickness made its appearance, and that brought the physicians by reason of the gratuities that were held out by the law to physicians. It gives to the poor medical attention that they had never before received, and it is such a vast subject that you do not know where to begin.

Chairman WALSH. Well, could such insurance be made so as to cover accidents?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; it should cover accidents and sickness and unemployment. There is no reason why it should not cover accidents.

Chairman WALSH. Accident, sickness, invalidity, and unemployment?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; and maternity benefits.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I wish you would state a little more in detail, if you will, your idea as to, first, why, and then how, it could be worked out through existing labor organizations.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It has been found that that is the most effective and satisfactory way of working it out, where the industry is organized, where there are labor unions in the industry, because as each employee contributes to that fund, each employee is going to watch and see that the money is not improperly taken from the fund. They are the best policemen to guard the fund. Now, they had a great deal of trouble in other countries—when they inaugurated sickness insurance—with malingering; that is, the pretense of sickness by people who were too lazy to work and wanted to take advantage of the sick benefit. But that is gradually disappearing, the worker beginning to understand that when another employee who is not ill draws sick benefits it takes them from him. So they keep pretty close guard on one another.

And in the same way when you come to unemployment, that is a still more difficult subject. You could not handle it in a bureaucratic way. I think you will have to handle it through governmental cooperation, because it is almost an impossible thing to determine when a worker who is thrown out of employment in one direction can or can not get employment in another. Yet those problems are all being solved in other countries. There is no reason why they should not be solved with us. But the complexity of them in discussing them orally is so great I think it would only lead to confusion to attempt to go into detail in laying out these different plans that are now being operated in other countries.

Chairman WALSH. Broadly speaking, then, you think under the existing laws and constitution of our country that such a thing could be worked out here covering all those things?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it could be worked out with respect to the interstate industries, and I think the others would have to follow. I think every State would follow it with respect to its intrastate industries. It has worked very well, you know, where it has just gone into effect in England so far as unemployment; so far as concerns sickness it has been in effect now for two or three years and it has worked out very much better than anybody had anticipated. Of course, in Germany, as you know, the sickness insurance is an old institution there. The Government does not contribute anything except the administration. The employer and employees make the whole contribution.

You have got a fair illustration of how unjust these private benefactions have proven to be. You have got the instance of the Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, where the men have been the sole contributors to that great fund, and the company contributed nothing except to the expenses of administering the fund, which is less than 10 per cent of the fund. They pay all the accidents on the Pennsylvania Railroad out of that fund.

Commissioner GARRETSON. About the profit; is it a bar to recovery?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. The whole thing shows the abuse to which private administration of this system may be put. They say it is compulsory, and of course it is compulsory. Ninety-seven per cent or more of the men have it and other railroads admit it is compulsory. Yet they use that fund which the men have created as a basis, and as a means from which they pay the accidents on the road. Now it would cost, I say, less than half under Government insurance to give that security to the employees.

Chairman WALSH. Pardon me. Were you going to add something?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; nothing.

Chairman WALSH. Have you given any thought to the proposition of a national system of labor exchanges for the distribution of labor, on a national basis, cooperating with the public agencies operated by the different States and cities in the Nation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have read a good deal about it and I have seen it in operation in the European countries, and very successful in operation, especially in Germany. They have a local labor exchange and then they have a general system of labor exchange; that is, Government labor exchanges. There is no reason to my mind why such a system should not greatly relieve or destroy unemployment and that unemployment insurance would revolutionize the condition of the American laborer.

Chairman WALSH. You think then encouragement should be given by Federal agencies to the organization of employees of corporations engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Decidedly. Through constitutional assurance that it is possible to bring them under union control, for they would have the benefit of concentrated power and responsibility and concentrated protection.

Chairman WALSH. How would you suggest that encouragement might be given to the union by the organization of the workers in interstate corporations other than, for instance, the instance you have cited, of social insurance?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I am not prepared. I have not been asked, so far as I know, and have not prepared to suggest any.

Chairman WALSH. I thought maybe you might have some on hand.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I am opposed to offhand remedies.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Garretson, would you like to ask Mr. Untermeyer some questions?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes; I would.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I ask, Mr. Chairman, you go on and develop these questions of unemployment insurance and sickness insurance.

Chairman WALSH. We have tried to develop them as scientifically as we can through our investigators.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You are doing that, I think, and making great progress.

Chairman WALSH. We are doing it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr. Untermyer, I was unfortunate in the fact that I did not hear the earlier part of your testimony, and consequently a question or two I may ask possibly you passed upon prior to my coming. But when you were referring to the existence of certain groups, have your investigations brought to your attention and knowledge as to about how many groups of railways there are on this continent out of the—well, we will say, thousand companies apparently independent, into how many groups they are arranged?

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean the potential central control?

Commissioner GARRETSON. The power of central control.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think they have—they have not been scheduled exactly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Not apparently controlled, but actual.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Actual control. I think you will find that that is all fully developed in this report which I referred to in great detail. You can not divide them exactly into groups, because there are here and there independent roads.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Oh, a few.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is, independent in a sense, and yet not independent, because even they are dependent upon traffic over some controlled roads.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They are subject to influence of control, although it may not come through ownership?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, they are subject to patronage influence.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Has your experience given you an opinion strong enough to express as to how many banking groups there are control the entire party of roads?

Mr. UNTERMYER. The entire what?

Commissioner GARRETSON. The entire number of roads, blotting out for the moment these so-called independent properties.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, blotting out the independent properties, I should say that they are dominated by two groups of banking houses, and it is a very effectual control, too, although you can not define the lines of it; it is elusive, for when you want to get at it and it is effective, and it is effective when they want to get at you. [Laughter.]

Commissioner GARRETSON. You can see the results of it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. You can see the results and you can often see the workings of it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Does the system—I assume that you have a very considerable degree of familiarity with the system of interlocking directors and interlocking ownership?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; we went into that very fully in the Pujo investigation, made a very comprehensive report of it; yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Does it furnish a perfect vehicle, if it is desired so to use it, in your opinion, for well—I want to use a word that really conveys my meaning—

Mr. UNTERMYER (interrupting). That is not always easy.

Commissioner GARRETSON (continuing). For the manipulation of the body of citizenship, both laborers and the patrons who are not parties to that control, laboring in the way of hours and wages and consumers in the matter of price and quality?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well—

Commissioner GARRETSON. I am not putting it on the basis that it is so used.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I understand it is potential power.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, its potential power I do not think you have understated.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You referred to the number of stockholders. We will take the railway proposition as a concrete example, because it is the one that is the most thorough interstate interest?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In existence. Have you ever made any investigation as to the actual number of stockholders, aside from duplications, that own the railway stock?

Mr. UNTERMYER. There have been statistics prepared on that subject. I do not remember exactly what they are. They have often been stated as 5,000,000.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Oh, yes; a round statement. But round statements are like offhand statements that you referred to.

Mr. UNTERMYER. There are sometimes square statements, too.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Has your experience led you to believe there are 5,000,000 holders of railway stock?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think experience would help in that.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The proxy system that you referred to?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it not a fact that the proxy system has become so universal that every country bank, or every country corporation almost, large and small, when giving a notice of stockholders' meeting sends attached, and usually a part of the sheet as a notice of that meeting, a proxy?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is the custom now with notices of meeting, the proxy generally goes out.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And as a rule the blank in that proxy for the name of the person to whom the proxy will be granted is, as a general practice, a virtually unknown man in the corporate sense?

Mr. UNTERMYER. As a general practice it is. Of course, there are exceptions in it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There are?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Known men are put in, but even when they are put in you are not voting for them. They are only agents.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They are under control and direction?

Mr. UNTERMYER. They are named as agents to vote for somebody else, somebody you do not know.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They are under the control and direction of somebody else?

Mr. UNTERMYER. The very form of the power of attorney notifies you that you are not voting for them, but you are voting for somebody else, giving them authority to vote for directors whose names are not disclosed.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In your own opinion, can there be any true prosperity in a country where the majority of the inhabitants are poverty stricken?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should say—

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). In the national sense.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should say that was a truism.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is the congestion of money in a few hands comparable with any theory of reasonably equitable distribution, Mr. Untermeyer?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Of course that attacks the whole social theory.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It does.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have not gone over all that for some time, you know, but it is all in writing, Mr. Commissioner. I think that the report of the committee fully answers that question. Of course, the greater the concentration of money the less the prosperity of the country generally.

Chairman WALSH. The wider the distribution of wealth, of course, the better for the prosperity of the country; but you do not want to check individual enterprise, either—legitimate individual enterprise.

Commissioner GARRETSON. By no means. You have had a very considerable connection with the investigation of certain phases of—well, life in this country?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Economic life.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It can't be narrowed, either to industrial, financial, or any other one phase, but it is really the problem of life in general.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is the problem of economic social life.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It is. If the problem of the private fortune was dealt with—that is, the large private fortune in a successful manner—would there be any trust problem?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you believe under the present system of combination trusts would be possible in the absence of the large private fortunes?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. I do not think—what you mean by the large private trust, of course, there would not be any trusts possible under the condition of socialism unless we were a trust estate.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I am not referring to socialism, Mr. Untermeyer; only to what might be termed the modest fortune.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean the restriction of fortune?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Not the restriction, the growth either by any legitimate means—well, now, I will strike out the word "legitimate"—any legal means?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Because the question of legitimate law depends upon the man's viewpoint.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not believe in the restriction of fortunes, but I believe in rigidly restricting the way in which they are made.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, what, strictly speaking, would be the difference, a man who held that view and the restriction of fortunes?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can conceive the possibility of a man legitimately making a vast fortune. I think he ought to be permitted to enjoy it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You referred to the fact that there was a quickened and different sentiment existing in regard to the conduct of many matters—that is, matters within comparatively a few, a period of a few years past; that is usually referred to as a quickened moral sense. Do you believe, from your experience and your investigation that it is altogether due to a quickened moral sense or to a quickened business perception?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think it is a quickened business perception. I think it is a change, due to a change of moral standards and to the imminence of legal restraints.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Therefore a quickened business perception would guard against the legal restraint by putting in part-way measures?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I think that the disposition of the people whose license is being assailed is to meet these reforms with palliatives.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The man who has his ear to the ground hedges?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; and I think there is a great danger of our progress being interrupted by these forced palliatives, that do not amount to anything anywhere and do not get us anywhere.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They do not cure the evil at all; they only deal with a certain amount of the result of it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. For instance, take the Clayton bill. Instead of striking out the interlocking control of corporations it strikes at the interlocking directory, which is only one of many forms of control, and still leaves the interlocking control unrestrained.

Commissioner GARRETSON. He is placed between the upper millstone of what you might call unrestricted organization of owners; and between what is referred to ordinarily as the public interest—that is, that the public must not be inconvenienced nor suffer loss through cessation of work—has the average laborer any show for his money?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, it depends on what industry he is engaged in. How skilled the labor is, how much it is needed. I confess, on the whole, I do not think he has very much.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I will come again to the typical industry, in that it bears probably the closest relation to the greatest number of people, the railway industry.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think the industry most highly concentrated in this country is the anthracite-coal industry.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But there is no one that could work greater hardship on the public in transportation, because you can stop the trains moving temporarily for three days, and we stand still.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And it would bring it into every home?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; there is no doubt about that.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is the reason I take that as a typical one. If those employees in tracing what they believe and were able to demonstrate was a fair and just demand should merely make the cessation from work they would invade the public interest, and that is always made apparent to them when they move.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. While their men with whom they were dealing are unrestricted in the methods which they would pursue?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think they invade public interests by exercising that right quite as much as the employer invades the public interest by interrupting and neglecting of his worker.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Doesn't absentee landlordism virtually create absolutism in the person of the figurehead who is set up as the representative of the owner?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of the internal management of these corporations to be able to answer that question.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, could you take as an example, for instance, the late Colorado strike where the president of those corporations, as the representative of the owners, where it was openly stated there was no appeal from his conclusions. Is that an ideal system for the public good?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Of course, it is barbarous, but it exists.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It is barbarous, but it exists?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In the change of the form of the insurance company that you referred to from a stock to a mutual?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That has been done in the two great companies within the last year, two great ones in the United States.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you know whether or not the stock of that company which was purchased, I assume from the stockholders by the company itself, whether it was sold at book value, or at what might be called a speculative value?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think I am competent to discuss that, inasmuch as I was professionally concerned in the transaction.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you know what the minimum rate at which the insurance is sold in that company is? I assume it is graded on age; that is, that has something to do with it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What is the minimum cost per thousand, do you know?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall the figures.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you made any investigation, Mr. Untermeyer, as to the form of insurance and the cost thereof where a plan has been developed by workers themselves for doing their writing, writing their own insurance, underwriting?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Such as you have in some—

Commissioner GARRETSON. Labor unions.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Labor unions?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I know it is a great smaller and more economical.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, I wondered if you had followed that up. What is the comparative cost, do you know?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I can not give you that.

Commissioner GARRETSON. For administration, between the German Government plan and the plan in this country.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can not give you the figures, but it is enormously less. There is one item alone that would make a tremendous addition to the thing; that is, in the Government plan you do not have to keep any reserve against liability, for instance, like this company to which I referred; they have to keep $500,000,000 as a reserve against liability, and when in five years it reaches a larger amount they will have to have a thousand million of dollars. That gives a few men the investment of thousands and thousands of dollars that even with the best management there are losses involved.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Makes the domination over those funds an element of financial liability that was considered undesirable according to the Lexow investigation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not the Lexow investigation, you mean the Pujo?

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is right. I am going probably back a little further, in the State of New York alone.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That was not that kind of an investigation. Don't you mean the Hughes-Armstrong investigation?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes; that is the one that I intended. You know of no Government system, Mr. Untermeyer, that pays and commission for procuring the business under the Government system?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is one of the great savings of the Government system, and the absence of reserve is another; equalization of the risks over a vast field of insurance is another; they are all of manifest advantage. The thing is crude with us. We are so far behind one should be ashamed of one's self in everything that pertains to industrial insurance.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Is there anything else? Commissioner Weinstock wants to ask some questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The question was put to you, Mr. Untermeyer, by the chairman, I think—it was about the last question—how you would encourage the organization of labor through the efforts of the State, and I think you answered you were not prepared to answer that?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I think it is one of those subjects that requires a good deal of study.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, let me explain to you the Australasian method of doing that, and then let me ask you whether you think it could be transplanted to this country.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have read about it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In Australasia, more especially in the State of Victoria, they have what is known as the wages boards for the fixing of minimum wages. The representatives on those boards are chosen by organized labor on the one hand and by the employers' association on the other in the various crafts. Now, labor, under the benefit of these wages boards, must organize, and the State deliberately makes the commission such that it is in the interest of labor to organize. It is not compulsory; it is voluntary. But the advantages to be gained are sufficient to encourage organization. As a consequence in Australasia 75 per cent of labor is organized as against about 20 per cent in all other industrial countries.

Now, assuming that is your idea, that you expressed earlier in the hearing, that a minimum wage system should be established, and assuming that it is constitutional, could not the State follow the Australian plan of creating wages boards in the various crafts and fixing a minimum wage, and in that way encouraging labor to organize?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, if it is possible to do it within the limits of our Constitution, it is certainly an advisable thing for labor to do. I have never quite understood the objections that have been urged against the minimum wage from the direction of labor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, touching, then, upon the constitutionality of establishing the minimum wage, you expressed the opinion that it would not be unconstitutional?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think I expressed that opinion. I expressed the opinion that I had not formed any opinion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then I misunderstood you. I got the impression that you believed there was nothing in the Constitution that would prohibit the establishing of a minimum wage.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, what I intended to say was that we were discussing this Federal system as applied to interstate commerce.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. And I said that I had not—or I intended to say that I had not—but a mere superficial opinion that Congress has the right to examine all the conditions under which any business, any industry, can engage in interstate commerce—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. And I suppose as one of those conditions it would be no industry shall engage in interstate commerce unless there is an organization labor attached. But that, of course, is a very serious question and one that I would not like to commit myself upon in this way.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. You are not prepared, then, at this time, Mr. Untermeyer, to say whether that would or would not be unconstitutional?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I should not like to venture any definite opinion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. It has been held, of course, as you doubtless know, that the fourteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution making a minimum wage for men unconstitutional on the ground that it would interfere with the right of private contracts.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Of course; under that amendment to the Constitution and not under the interstate clause.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I mean this, that presents itself under the broad commerce provision of the Constitution; that is, that Congress has the power to regulate commerce between the States or foreign countries. Now, the question arises whether Congress can not say that no corporation shall engage in interstate commerce until it has a license to start with or until it takes out a Federal charter. Then why can not Congress say it shall not be given a license or a charter to engage in interstate commerce unless it conforms to certain industrial conditions?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. Well, could that be made introactive?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, yes; retroactive, rather.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Retroactive.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No corporation has the right to engage in interstate commerce for a single moment longer than Congress says so. It can say tomorrow that it will not allow any corporation to engage in interstate commerce except upon certain terms that were prescribed, and that they must be terms that have a proper relation to the subject of commerce.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You made the statement, Mr. Untermyer, that the railways of this country, as a great body of railways of this country, are practically under the control of two financial groups?

Mr. UNTERMYER. A large part of them are. I large part of that mileage is under domination, or under the potential domination, of those groups.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How has the reserve banking act affected, if at all, the banking control of railroad systems?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not materially as yet. It is hoped that it will. It is expected that it will in this way: That until the banking law was passed the reserves of the banks all through the country were deposited in New York largely, and those reserves were deposited in banks that were controlled by these same groups, and those vast funds were then under the domination of these men.

Now, the Federal reserve act, when it gets into full operation, which will take a few years, will distribute those reserves, and the vast sums that came to New York will not come here, and in that way there will be to some extent decentralization of the control—concentration of the control—of this money that was in the banks. I look for very substantial results from the Federal reserve act. I think it is one of the greatest pieces of constructive work this country has ever done.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You also pointed out how under the system of railroad reorganization a small minority is made to control. In other words, the tail wags the dog.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, not exactly that. That was not what I intended to convey. I intended to convey the idea that the financial interests that dominated the road when it gets into trouble retain that control through our method of reorganization after it gets out of trouble and continues to dominate.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see.

Mr. UNTERMYER. And in the case in which it does not dominate the road before it got into trouble, our system lends itself readily to getting domination over it when it gets into trouble and when it is out of trouble.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, now, so far as you have been able to observe, has that system proven helpful or hurtful to the railroad stockholders?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think very hurtful.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think very hurtful; that is, it has robbed the majority of the minority stockholders of a voice?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not only of a voice, but it has robbed the roads of the protection that would come from the protection of a minority voice.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And I suppose you would point to the New Haven road is a horrible example?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I should point to others as much more horrible examples, because in the New Haven road I do not think there was much corruption, if any. There was very bad judgment and recklessness in attempting to dominate nearly a whole section of country, but in other roads it has been much worse.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You also pointed out that the large industries or important industries getting into a few hands was inimical to labor?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; puts it at a great disadvantage.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, minimizes the possibility of labor organization?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, not only labor organizing, but, when organized, in getting its rights, because labor has nowhere else to go. If the labor in an industry has only that industry that it can deal with and has to deal with the whole industry and their terms are unsatisfactory, then it has nowhere else to go.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, will that situation apply, Mr. Untermyer, to the railroad system of the country? As you pointed out, the railroad systems are going into comparatively a few hands, and yet is it not a fact that labor is more thoroughly organized in the railroad systems than in any other industries, and that railways, so far as labor is concerned, are more thoroughly democratized than any other industry?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I think that is so, so far as they have had to deal with the public, and it has paid the railroads, or some of them, or businesses that are tributary to them, to treat labor fairly decently. You take, for instance, the anthracite-coal system, which is really part of the railroad situation, where every time they lifted the price of labor 10 cents, they lifted the price of coal about 25 cents; so it is an advantage to the owners of the anthracite mines and roads to accede to the demands of labor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, would not the same law or same policy hold with all public utilities—with all like corporations—corporations furnishing light, or furnishing power, or furnishing water? Are those corporations not dependent upon the good will of the public as much as the railways are?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, sir; but they are not so much in the limelight, you know. I mean they are not so responsive to public sentiment.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. You would then regard the labor conditions in transportation as exceptional to the general rule that you have laid down.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think they are exceptional. I think labor is exceptionally well organized there and gets—comes much nearer getting—something approaching its rights than it does in any of the other industries.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is cumulative voting in corporations established in this State, for example?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is permissible in this State. It is not a part of our constitution. It ought to be compulsory. It is compulsory in Missouri, Pennsylvania—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. California?

Mr. UNTERMYER (continuing). I think in California, too; yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But not here?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not here; no.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you think that would be along the lines of remedial legislation, if it were made compulsory?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I believe it should be made compulsory, and should be coupled with a right of voting by mail, such as I have outlined.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You spoke about sickness insurance and about organized labor handling sickness insurance?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes—subject to State supervision.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How would you deal with unorganized labor—remembering only about 25 per cent of labor in this country is organized.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should deal with it in the same way as they do in England. They deal with it there through the post office by means of card and stamps. They have no difficulty—for instance, domestic servants in English families are all under the sickness insurance law, and the employer and employee have to contribute.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You also said that in dealing with sickness insurance, especially in Europe, that in the beginning there had been a good deal of malingering.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But that that was diminishing now.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then I judge from that, Mr. Untermyer, that you have not read the more recent literature on the subject. The more recent literature on the subject touching conditions in Germany would indicate that it is working the other way and a new industry has developed, especially in Germany—a new medical industry—that is, that of physicians who teach men how to malingering.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I have reference more to the working of the English system. I think complaints are less pronounced than they were in England, but it has got to be met. There is more reason for sickness insurance than there is for accident insurance.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; I think so too, because the records show that the first cause for poverty is sickness.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, sir; and, of course, it would raise the standard of health so greatly—the system of medical attendance for people so as to reduce the amount of illness, and that it would reduce the percentage of insurance to the employer. The employer whose workmen have the least sickness, who were kept in the best of health, would be able to compete on unequal terms with the employer who did not look after the health of his workers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, now, advocating, as you seem to advocate, a system of State sickness insurance and a system of State unemployment insurance, would you make that contributory on the part of the worker?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, sir; absolutely; and compulsory, too.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would; and how would you meet the objections to making it contributory that was raised to me by Mr. John Burns, the ex-cabinet minister of Great Britain?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is contributory there, isn't it?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think not; unless the law has been changed—

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean the sickness and unemployment insurance?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, perhaps—

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That has been established recently.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes; that is compulsory.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In discussing the old-age pension acts, it is not contributory—

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The question was put to Mr. John Burns, "Why haven't you followed the German system of contributory old-age pensions?" And his answer was, "The cabinet considered that very gravely and very seriously, but decided it was not practicable, at least in England, because of the cost of collection alone would be prohibitory and extremely difficult to enforce it; and so the old-age pension act," he went on to say, "was made noncontributory." Now, if, as you say, the sickness—the State compensation for sickness and unemployment—has been made contributory, the policy must have been changed.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes; it is contributory. There is no doubt about that, is there, Mrs. Harriman?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Oh, I am sure it is.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have read the act a number of times, and it is contributory, and you do not participate until a certain number of payments have been made, and then I think it is 26 weeks at a given rate, and then it is at a reduced rate.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. Untermeyer, I would like to know what, in your opinion, would be the most successful remedy for casual labor.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, that has been a plague, you know, of all systems. I don't know, other than the Federal labor exchange, such as they have in Germany. That is, they have local labor exchanges and a general Federal labor exchange.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Do you know which system is best, say, the German system of Federal labor exchanges, or the system in England?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, I think the German system is far better developed.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner O'Connell says he has some questions.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Untermeyer, you said recent legislation known as the Clayton bill had prevented interlocking directorates, but not interlocking control.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Just what do you mean by that?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, of course, I don't want to criticize the bill, because we can not get everything at once. We have done very well as it is, it seems to me, to get as much remedial legislation as has been secured. But what I meant is this: The thing that is primarily to be prevented in the concentration of industries is the interlocking control of competing industries; that is, that a man in one town should not be permitted to own all the banks. Now, under this bill he can not have the same directors in all the banks, but he could still own them all. In other words, he could destroy competition so long as he had the outward indicia of competition, in the way of separate directors. The bill, in other words, prohibits competing businesses from having the same directors—interlocking directors, but does not prohibit them from having the same control—same stockholders and ownership.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The same stock ownership constituting, in effect, the same corporation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Speaking of some things that some corporations are doing for the welfare of their employees, you cite the opportunity of ownership of stock in the concern?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I understand you to say that that would be favorable—or a preventive of industrial unrest, the mere fact of owning stock—

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should think the fact that they were cooperating and that they had a participation in the business would tend to alleviate the spirit of unrest and give them an interest.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Would it not have the opposite tendency to make the employee more self-subservient because of the feeling of ownership in the concern?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Make the employee more subservient?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should think not. I think it would make him more independent, especially if he owns something which he can sell at any time on the market.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I have in mind a corporation that recently is doing just that thing, one of our very large corporations.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It sold its stock to its employees, I think, around $85 a share, and the stock now on the market can be bought for about $50 a share.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, of course, that is not the kind I had reference to.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I was just wondering whether—

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I should think that would make a good deal of unrest.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You think that would cause unrest?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; but, of course, I had in mind the instances we knew of, you know, in which employees had been offered participation, such as the United States Steel Co. and others.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am referring to the United States Steel Co. now.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, now, the employees in the United States Steel Co. were never offered common stock. They all had preferred stock.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They were sold common stock on two occasions—the last around $85.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think not. I think you will find it was all preferred stock. I think you will find that no common stock was ever sold to the steel company's employees. Let us be just to them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think on two occasions.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think you will find you are mistaken, Mr. O'Connell.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you ever look it up?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; but then I had in mind such instances as the Kodak Co., where they had established very large funds for their laborers—sick-benefit funds. I think they have established two and a half million dollars each.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You think that would be an incentive against men or to prevent or keep them from organizing or acting in a cooperative way for their industrial welfare?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Why, no; I don't see why it should. I don't know whether the Kodak people are organized or not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I can answer for them and say they are not.

Mr. UNTERMYER. They are not?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should hate to see any devices that prevented their organizing.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you given any thought to the question as to where that sort of thing is in operation—as to whether the men are organized or not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; but I find that they are organized in some of the industries where they have these sick benefits and others they are not. In the railroads they are organized, where they have those benefits.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Not as far as stock ownership—

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, no; not as to stock ownership. Oh, I did not know you were referring to that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes; exclusively to the question of stock ownership.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I don't see why that should interfere with their organization.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, Mr. Untermyer, a great question has been referred to this commission, and I am sure the commission will be glad to have your opinion, because you have great experience and knowledge of public affairs. That is this: This commission has been instructed to ascertain and report to Congress what are the underlying causes of industrial unrest. Can you enlighten the committee as to what, in your mind, is the real big cause of industrial unrest in our country?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should say injustice of existing conditions and American ambition.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I did not quite get that.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I say injustice of existing conditions and American ambition.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Would you just elucidate, just a little bit?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have tried to avoid that. I think I would rather generalize in answer to a question of that kind. I think the unrest in the country has been very largely brought about by the knowledge on the part of the industrial workers of the country of the unjust way in which great fortunes have been amassed and a feeling that they are not getting their share of the prosperity when prosperity comes, but they are carrying all their burdens of adversity; that taxes are unjustly distributed; all the burden of taxation falls upon the poor. The first glimmer we have had of anything like just taxation has been in the inauguration of the income tax. And our capitalists—our captains of industry—they do not seem to have a very active recognition of the rights of labor; that is, they only surrender when they are forced to surrender. They do not seem to make very many voluntary efforts in the way of meeting the just demands of labor. That seems to be the feeling. How far that is justified I would not care to say.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I understand your position to be—rather your opinion—that the individual worker has not got a fair opportunity or fair chance against the combine of men on the other side—capital.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, where he is unorganized; yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is quite right. I am a great believer in organized labor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you are a believer in compulsory arbitration?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I think it would put the men at a disadvantage.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And be impossible to carry into effect the awards.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Almost impossible. I don't know of any place in which it has worked successfully. I may not be well informed on the question.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Ballard would like to ask a few questions.

Commissioner BALLARD. I understand you to say that the Government should encourage union control of labor?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I say yes, if it is possible.

Commissioner BALLARD. Should the Government then try to limit labor in some of its endeavors, such as boycott, sympathetic strikes, and so forth? Should the Government take control of any of those topics?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, no; I haven't in mind the Government going any further than doing what it legitimately and constitutionally could do to encourage the organization of labor. Of course, the criminal laws would pass upon violations of law.

Commissioner BALLARD. If you should have practically universal control by labor unions of all labor, would it not put an awful lot of power in their hands if they chose to single out any particular industry to penalize it and—

Mr. UNTERMYER. We have the same laws to deal with the improper exercise of the power of labor as we have with the power of capital. I am not as afraid of the concentrated power of labor as I am afraid of the concentrated power of capital.

Commissioner BALLARD. Speaking again of unemployment or the insurance against unemployment, would you attempt to regulate the bringing into this country by foreign ships of millions of laborers a year who have no employment and can not have any when they come here?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, the extent to which immigration should be restricted is a very big question. Of course, we owe everything to immigration. Now, whether the time has come when we should turn our backs upon it—that is another question which I do not feel competent to answer.

Commissioner BALLARD. That is all; thank you.

(See Untermeyer Exhibits Nos. 1 and 2.)

Chairman WALSH. Thank you very much, Mr. Untermeyer.

We will now adjourn until 2.30 this afternoon instead of 2 o'clock on account of the lateness of the arrival of our next witness.

(Thereupon, at 12.30 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS—2.30 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. The commission will please be in order.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ROGER W. BABSON.

Chairman WALSH. Before interrogating you, Mr. Babson, Mr. O'Connell wants to put something in the record in regard to that steel proposition.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The question of the United States Steel Corporation selling common stock to its employees; Mr. Untermeyer made a statement that he believed I was wrong in saying that they had. I am quoting from the report, "Conditions of Employment in the Iron and Steel Industry Investigation, made by the Board of Labor," issued by Charles P. Neill, Commissioner of Labor, in 1913, page 468. In 1909, 15,387 shares of common stock was sold to employees. In 1911 there were 29,081 shares of common stock sold to employees, and in 1912, 30,735 shares of common stock was sold to employees, making a total number of common shares of the United States Steel Corporation sold to its employees of 75,203 shares.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. BABSON. Roger W. Babson.

Chairman WALSH. What is your occupation, please?

Mr. BABSON. Publisher of reports on business conditions.

Chairman WALSH. Where is your place of business—your office?

Mr. BABSON. My head office is in Willsley Hills, a suburb of Boston, Mass.

Chairman WALSH. For what—how are these reports published; for general distribution and sale, or for what?

Mr. BABSON. They are of a confidential nature, for manufacturers, merchants, and bankers.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you whether or not you have made a study of the question as to the extent to which potential control over labor conditions is concentrated in the hands of financial directors of large corporations?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would please give us the result of that study.

Mr. BABSON. Well, briefly, I feel that the greatest handicap, both labor and legitimate capital have to-day is in what is known as absentee ownership. I feel that the fact that a very few stockholders control the large industries of the country is very largely the reason of the present industrial unrest and the unsatisfactory returns which capital is securing. My study of industry teaches me that very seldom a strike occurs against the manufacturer who has built up his own business and lives in the town where his mills are operated. Also, comparatively, few receiverships take place under such conditions. The great majority of strikes and the great majority of receiverships take place after the man who has built up the business has died, or after the business has been incorporated and distributed to the public through bankers and promoters.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any figures bearing on the amount of the control of industry, the amount of the concentration and control of particular industries?

Mr. BABSON. I have not, but such figures as I have show clearly that it is increasing every day.

Chairman WALSH. From your knowledge and experience, to what extent is this potential control exercised in connection with labor matters.

Mr. BABSON. Why, principally through the line of indifference, I think. My experience with the bankers is that they have nothing against labor. They think just as much of the laborer as you or I, but they are busy with other matters and they don't bother about it. I think it is a question of indifference rather than a question of active dislike or antipathy.

Chairman WALSH. Is the logic of that that the real owners do not really exercise the control and leave it to some one else?

Mr. BABSON. Yes. In the question I notice you have here, "In determining the labor policies of corporations, what part is played, first, by stockholders; second, by directors, and third, by salaried officials, (d) by employers, individual, etc., and (e) by representatives of the public on mediation boards?" Now, I should say there was another group there which I should label the "Bankers or promoters."

Chairman WALSH. Will you please take those up seriatim? Take your own suggestion first, the bankers and the promoters and answer the question with reference to them, and just go on down the line with all of the others.

Mr. BABSON. I should say that about 80 per cent of the control is in the hands of bankers and promoters in 20-story office buildings—about 80 per cent of the control.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Control of what?

Mr. BABSON. Control of the large industries of the country.

Chairman WALSH. What lines, for instance, of production would you say?

Mr. BABSON. To finish my sentence, I should say that about 8 per cent was in the hands of directors, as such—about 8 per cent in the hands of salaried officials, and about 2 per cent in the hands of employees, and about 2 per cent in the hands of minority stockholders.

Chairman WALSH. Just take up those other groups that were mentioned that were submitted to you in the question?

Mr. BABSON. I have taken them all up now. I have just mentioned them.

Chairman WALSH. That includes all of them?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Are the executive officers to whom is intrusted the direction of these labor policies qualified to exercise their powers without restraint from the Government or representatives of the workers in the determination of those policies? In other words, are those people intrusted with that power ordinarily capable of exercising it without restraint on the part of the Government or without the cooperation of employees?

Mr. BABSON. I should say yes, if they were let alone by Wall Street.

Chairman WALSH. Is it your idea that they are not let alone by Wall Street?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; that is my idea.

Chairman WALSH. In what way is the control of Wall Street exercised? How does the interference of Wall Street appear?

Mr. BABSON. My experience with Wall Street leads me to the conclusion that it is only interested with the one thing and that thing is dividends as quickly as possible. As long as dividends are coming along Wall Street is satisfied with the management. I say Wall Street, I should say that also applies just as well to State Street or La Salle Street, but I refer to the boards of directors in the office buildings away from the plants. They are interested in dividends. If certain dividends are being produced, they are satisfied. As a rule it makes little difference whether they are being produced by fair means or foul, by antiquated machinery or by modern machinery, or by good or poor management. If they are not being produced—if dividends are not being produced, then the office building management will get busy, the office building directorate will get busy and change the management or put in new machinery or do something to develop the industry, but so long as those dividends are coming along they let well enough alone. They never think of taking out the old machines and putting in new for the sake of paying labor more money; they never think of changing the management and taking out a young college man and putting in a man who knows the business to increase the business, but they do that to increase dividends.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have in mind any specific industry, or any particular institution in which you could point out the control of the promoter or of the banker? The man in the office building, over the labor policy of that institution?

Mr. BABSON. I think up in New England, the American Woolen Co. is a good illustration of that.

Chairman WALSH. Please describe the control they actually exercise.

Mr. BABSON. I think in the automobile business—perhaps that is a good illustration. The Ford plant is run by the men that created the industry. The General Motors and some of the other concerns are run from New York and Boston. I think that every industry has its good propositions and its bad propositions.

Chairman WALSH. The point at which I am trying to arrive is this: Is there any specific instance or instances that you can give us where the control was actually exercised by the men in the office buildings over the labor policy of the industry, other than the fact that they were interested perhaps, or anxious about the dividends?

Mr. BABSON. No; I think it is a matter of indifference, as I stated in the first place. They have nothing against labor.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson wants to ask a question.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it really a matter of dividends or a result that will aid speculative manipulation that the absentee landlord or Wall Street, or whatever name you call it by, desires?

Mr. BABSON. I think that in the early stages it is a desire for manipulation, but in the established industry I think it is simply dividends.

Commissioner GARRETSON. When it passes the investment stage it is only dividends, but in the early stages it has a speculative feature?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is your opinion of the general effect upon the social condition of the control exercised by the enormous fortunes that have been acquired the last half century?

Mr. BABSON. It is very bad. I always get into trouble when I say so, but I do not see why the control of ten or twenty thousand men should descend by inheritance through the death of some manufacturer, any more than the control of a city or of a State should pass on to the son of the mayor or the governor. Now, everybody says I am crazy when I suggest there is any inconsistency there, but I have never been able to get that in my head, and I think as I look over the field and I see that the industries are built up by certain groups of men, by men who started in a small way and they developed their industry. They understood their men and they knew their business and they grew successfully and built up an industry which was satisfactory in the great majority of cases to their employees and to the investors. Then the old man dies, so to speak, or else he incorporates and puts out a big issue of preferred stock and retires from business. Then it seems to me that the trouble begins, either as the business descends to the children or else as it descends to the unknown, distant body of stockholders.

Chairman WALSH. Now, without in any way seeming to give color to the statements made about you heretofore, I want to ask you the question—probably the difference between the descent of the control of the city from the mayor to his son and the descent of the control of an industry from a father to his son—would that not lie in the right of a man to dispose of his property at the time of his death?

Mr. BABSON. Well, I do not see why the laws could not be such that a man could dispose of his property without disposing of his vote. I have no objection to the boy having the money. The thing that bothers me is for him to have the vote.

Chairman WALSH. The vote goes with the stock.

Mr. BABSON. Why should it?

Chairman WALSH. Why shouldn't it? Tell us. I would be glad to have you tell us.

Mr. BABSON. If you live in New York and pay taxes in New York you have a vote. If you live in Boston you do not have a vote in New York. As long as a man connected with the American Woolen Co. lives in Lawrence, and works in the mills, in whatever employment it may be, he is entitled to his vote on his stock, and that is all right; but if he is in Europe or in San Francisco, then I do not see why he is entitled to a vote on that stock.

Chairman WALSH. Why, in the one case should the vote go with the possession of the stock and why in the other case should it not go with the property represented by the stock?

Mr. BABSON. Well, that is the question Emperor William asks.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I am in good company, in distinguished company, in asking the question.

Mr. BABSON. It seems to me that is the same problem that is the basis of all monarchical government. It seems to me our industries to-day are in the same position as the American colonies were 100 years ago. They wanted certain representation. England could easily have made a trade with us 140 years ago, and she would have had us to-day as she has Canada, but she was too shortsighted and she would not do it. She said she would have all or none, and the result was that she lost us. I think that capital is very much in the same condition to-day. Capital can trade with labor if she meets it on even ground, and they can work together, but if each take the position that they are going to have all, there is going to be a bust-up and we will be in the same position that England was 140 years ago. Now, England learned better, and when Canada wanted representation she granted it to Canada, and consequently she and Canada are pulling together to-day. I believe that industry must go through the same evolution as political government has gone through.

Chairman WALSH. That is, it must be democratized, you think.

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. But still the question remains—perhaps I may be a little dense—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). We talk about political freedom, but we do not hear much said about industrial freedom.

Chairman WALSH. The specific point I was trying to get at was, for instance, how would you handle shares of stock with reference to its exercise or control of industry except by vote, by the person who owned it regardless of where he happened to live?

Mr. BABSON. One very seldom—how can you vote if you are not here and you can't send a proxy; you can't vote, can you?

Chairman WALSH. I see. Your point is then that the person who votes the stock should do it personally?

Mr. BABSON. That is the first step. Then I would have the annual meeting at the mill. I would not have the annual meeting in a 20-story office building.

Chairman WALSH. Well, Mrs. Harriman, it seems to me, properly suggests that that still does not explain the proposition of the difference between the mayor handing down the control of the city to his son, or the owner of that stock handing down the control to his son; wouldn't his son have the right under the present laws of property and usually under the corporate laws of the different States, if he held enough stock or controlled enough, by virtue of that stock alone, to elect himself, is that not the way it has worked out; that is, descent from father to son in the industry?

Mr. BABSON. Let me ask you a question. Suppose that there was no such a thing as corporation at all in existence; the commission was called together in this country to devise corporation laws. Do you think there is one chance in a hundred of corporation laws being framed up that would allow no representation of labor on the board? Or so as to allow an annual meeting to be held at a 20-story office building instead of at the mills? Why, the corporation laws would never go through in the world in that way, in my humble opinion. I think that we simply have taken the old custom, these corporations have grown on us gradually. When the corporations were first originally founded it was never deemed that we should have the absentees control as exists to-day.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson says he would like to ask a question right at this point.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr. Babson, let us get back to this absent control and descent control for a moment. Is it not a fact that the descent control has applied, for instance, to the mayor or to the governor or to a king would be the divine right of blood as a justification in one case and in the other instance nothing but the divine right of property that justified it?

Mr. BABSON. In that case blood should be stronger than property, I think.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But they are equal as it goes, are they not?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, could Emperor William assert his divine right of blood and remain an absentee from Germany?

Mr. BABSON. No, he could not; I guess.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Then, is there any more justification for absenteeism without divesting himself of the duties of control; has he any right to exercise the right of control?

Mr. BABSON. I don't believe he has.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. I wish at this point you would take as an example the American Woolen Co. and analyze the directorate of that company, and point out the details of its control of that industry from a distance.

Mr. BABSON. Well, to start with, not one of the directors lives in Lawrence or Lowell, or so far as I know any other city where there is a mill.

Chairman WALSH. First, what is the size of that industry so far as employing capacity or power is concerned?

Mr. BABSON. It does not state in my report here, but presumably it is, as I remember, about 14,000.

Chairman WALSH. Fourteen thousand employees?

Mr. BABSON. It varies according to the demand and supply, of course. It varies a great deal. It will vary from, oh, 5,000 from one season to another season.

Chairman WALSH. Men and women?

Mr. BABSON. Men and women and children.

Chairman WALSH. And children?

Mr. BABSON. Boys and girls.

Chairman WALSH. Children also?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, how many manufacturing establishments have they? Does that appear in your report? Also give the places of location if you have them.

Mr. BABSON. It says the plant covers 700 acres of land; the mill and buildings, principally brick, contain more than 10,000,000 feet of floor space. Did you mean in the cities? There are quite a number of them.

Chairman WALSH. State the points.

Mr. BABSON. Harrisville, R. I.; Skowhegan, Me.; Pittsfield, Mass.; Lowell, Mass.; Lawrence, Mass.; Webster, and Lebanon. I have mentioned them rapidly, but there are about 12 different places.

Chairman WALSH. Was that industry one of the ones involved in the labor dispute of 1912—the late labor dispute in Lawrence?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir. That industry represents or witnessed the most severe strike that we have seen in New England for a dozen years.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I was speaking to Mr. Manly when you gave the locations of the factory. I wish you would give them again.

Mr. BABSON. Principally it is Lowell and Lawrence.

Chairman WALSH. And Lawrence?

Mr. BABSON. And some others.

Chairman WALSH. How many directors has the American Woolen Co.?

Mr. BABSON. The American Woolen Co. has nine.

Chairman WALSH. And where are they located?

Mr. BABSON. The president lives in Andover. One lives in Tenafly, N. J. I don't know where that is. In Bedford, Providence, Brookline, and Boston.

Chairman WALSH. Now, is there any financial control as practiced in the organization of the American Woolen Co.?

Mr. BABSON. No. Apparently the people first—well, now, I can't—not that I recognize. Bankers who control the American Woolen Co., I don't recognize any of the partners on the board of directors. There may be some bookkeepers in that banking house in this board of directors.

Chairman WALSH. What banking house controls the American Woolen Co.?

Mr. BABSON. Well, the banking house which has always financed industries has been—securities has been Brown Bros. & Co., of New York; but they doubtless have—F. H. Prince & Co. financed it and put it together.

Chairman WALSH. And do you have any information, so far as that company is concerned, of the exercise of financial control over its labor policies?

Mr. BABSON. No. But I want to be just to the financial interests. The financial interests have nothing against labor. Labor makes a great mistake in that. They have nothing against labor. They would like to have—it is simply indifference with them. They feel when the company pays a certain dividend that the job is done. I do not think that there is anything, there is nothing that they have against labor, Mr. Walsh, and probably if the financial interests back of any one of these companies was approached this afternoon to help out the workman in their employ that they would do it in a minute. Their hearts are just as big and just as good as yours and mine. But it is indifference with them. Their job is to get dividends and they do not consider it—when they have earned dividends they consider their work is done. They think labor is pretty well taken care of, and they leave it to the walking delegates to attend to the question of wages.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed definitely the operation of these large corporations, such as the American Woolen Co., with their employees with the organizations?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; I have. But not the direct relation of the directors.

Chairman WALSH. No, but the corporation. Does a large corporation inherently possess any reason for maintaining better labor conditions than the smaller business, and if so what is it?

Mr. BABSON. Just repeat that, please.

Chairman WALSH. Does the large corporation inherently possess any reason for maintaining better labor conditions than the smaller company, and if so what is it?

Mr. BABSON. Well, I think that the larger the corporation is the more the target it is, and the more it is in the limelight; and consequently it is better business for them to treat their labor well than it is for a smaller concern. But, as far as inherently goes, I do not—I should say—I should say yes or no to that.

Chairman WALSH. What is the policy of large corporations toward dealing with their employees collectively, if you know?

Mr. BABSON. Well, just the same as they deal with a man that they buy their copper or their iron or their leather of. It is a question of supply and demand.

Chairman WALSH. What I mean was, do they oppose, or are they in favor of collective action on the part of their employees dealing with them collectively in the organization?

Mr. BABSON. Why, I think that corporations differ in that regard. As a rule I should say that they were opposed to collective bargaining. But, on the other hand, there are corporations which I think a good many of them are coming to see that it is a good business.

Chairman WALSH. What would you say the condition of the country is, say, for the past 10 years, referring now to these large corporations which you have dealt with in your reports from time to time, has the idea of dealing with organizations of employees grown or diminished in the last 10 years as the higher point of concentration was reached?

Mr. BABSON. I think it has grown.

Chairman WALSH. You think it has grown?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; I think the collective bargaining, no doubt whatever that labor is winning out on the collective-bargaining proposition.

Chairman WALSH. Is that true throughout New England?

Mr. BABSON. I think so on the collective bargaining. Now, I do not think that labor is winning out on the closed-shop proposition, but I think that it is gaining more than the collective bargaining.

Chairman WALSH. In what large industries would you say that has been the case in the last 10 years in New England?

Mr. BABSON. Why, I should say most of them. Of course, the American Woolen Co. accepts collective bargaining.

Chairman WALSH. What form of it, please, if you have it in mind?

Mr. BABSON. The representatives of the employees and the representatives of the management get together and decide on certain scales of wages.

Chairman WALSH. What form of organization have the employees in the American Woolen Co.?

Mr. BABSON. Why, they have two forms; the Federation of Labor and the I. W. W.

Chairman WALSH. Do they deal with both of those organizations at the present time?

Mr. BABSON. Well, in one way I should say yes. They deal with the Federation of Labor, but not with the I. W. W.'s.

Chairman WALSH. Now, has that changed attitude of the past 10 years come on account of the assumption of the spirit of it voluntarily by these corporations, or has it come from a public demand or from organization of the employees?

Mr. BABSON. Why, I think it has come from all three, Mr. Walsh. I think it has come from all three. The organization of the employees has helped to a certain amount. On the other hand I do not think that the labor union does for the men what they think it does for them. I think that it is public sentiment that has been a factor. I think corporations are getting to have more sense about those matters and see that their interests are bound up with the interests of labor, and that for capital to be secure labor must be contented.

Chairman WALSH. In your opinion does the development of these very large corporations increase or decrease the desirability of the organization of the employees and of their representation in the determining of labor policies?

Mr. BABSON. Increase.

Chairman WALSH. And it has increased the desirability?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir; increased the desirability. That is, you are talking from the labor man's standpoint?

Chairman WALSH. From the laboring man's standpoint.

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Why does it?

Mr. BABSON. Well, Mr. Walsh, because—if everything was left to act in accordance with supply and demand there would be no need of any kind of a combination, and we would all be a good deal better off without labor unions, trusts, or anything of that kind. But so long as one side organizes, it seems to me—or concentrates itself—absolutely necessary for the salvation of the other side to do the same thing.

Chairman WALSH. Then that leads to the question, Is it equally desirable or it it not, to the employer, as the corporation goes and becomes more highly concentrated, to deal with labor organizations rather than individuals?

Mr. BABSON. Why, I think so; yes; I think it is a much more efficient way to do.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you why?

Mr. BABSON. I would like to say that labor at present stage is simply warfare, and it is manifest to say this is not a business thing for labor to do, and the labor leader will come to me and say, "Here, this is not a business thing for capital to do." Well, now, in my mind I feel that neither are working from a business point of view to-day in relation to the other any more than England and Germany are working from a business point of view. It is warfare. That is what it is. And consequently the questions of efficiency and what is best are secondary matters.

Chairman WALSH. In the compilation of the facts for your reports have you made a study of profit sharing as it is developed in the United States?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. In the majority of cases of profit sharing which have come under your observation and study, do you consider that they represent genuine attempts to give the employees a greater share in the earnings of the company, or otherwise?

Mr. BABSON. I think that a few of them do; some of them are given to the employees in the place of quieting powders, if I may use the expression.

Chairman WALSH. Can you indicate to the commission or offer a significant industry that now indulges in profit sharing with their employees where you believe that it is a genuine attempt to give the employees a greater share of the product of its labor?

Mr. BABSON. I think the plant in my town—the next town to me, Framingham, the Dennison Manufacturing Co., presents an exceedingly good plan of profit sharing.

Chairman WALSH. Can you present to us here now the general details of that plan and organization, beginning with the products of the company, what it manufactures, and go down through the number of employees, and then the methods of profit sharing, and how long it has been in vogue, and how it has worked out.

Mr. BABSON. Well, very briefly, the situation is this: I am referring to the Dennison Manufacturing Co. that manufactures these tags and fancy paper.

Chairman WALSH. Paper boxes?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; paper boxes. For about 25 years that corporation was controlled from an office building here in New York.

Chairman WALSH. How large a corporation is it, approximately?

Mr. BABSON. They have about 1,500 men, men and women.

Chairman WALSH. Have they a plant or plants elsewhere than in Framingham?

Mr. BABSON. No. They have about 1,500 men and women. And it was a very close corporation up to a few years ago when the president died. The president was a very able—he was a very able standpatter. He had one daughter.

Chairman WALSH. Was he the founder of the concern?

Mr. BABSON. No; the founder was Dennison.

Chairman WALSH. Was he a descendent of Dennison, a relative?

Mr. BABSON. No; he was a man that went in as a salesman in the office, as a salesman. Dennison was the manufacturer, and this man was the salesman. That is another thing. It is the salesman, it is the man who can handle the selling end of these industries that control them, and not the men who manufacture the goods. It is easy enough to get a man to manufacture goods, but it is another thing to sell goods. I have been very much interested in my study of this corporation to see that it is the selling end that really controls and not the manufacturing end.

Chairman WALSH. I believe I interrupted you. Just go ahead with the organization.

Mr. BABSON. This man had an only daughter. She always took a great deal of interest in working conditions. The first time I heard of her she was being arrested by you people in New York here for speaking to working people on the street corner. Of course, she and her father did not get on very well. He was a standpatter of the most standpat type, and she was contributing, she was contributing from her allowance to help the I. W. W. cause, and was helping the working people and speaking on street corners here in New York City. And unfortunately, or fortunately for Framingham, the old man died. She woke up one morning and she had control of that industry.

Chairman WALSH. What was the capitalization?

Mr. BABSON. I don't remember.

Chairman WALSH. Approximately?

Mr. BABSON. Oh, around two or three millions. Hold on. I can find out exactly for you.

Chairman WALSH. Good.

Mr. BABSON. Four million five hundred thousand dollars, sir. And of course, she was between the devil and the deep blue sea. She had been preaching—

Chairman WALSH. Do you understand that the lady was the sole owner?

Mr. BABSON. She had the controlling interest. There were a number of minority stockholders. She was the controlling interest. And she also was an absentee owner, and her husband is a famous surgeon here in Brooklyn. And she wanted to do something for those employees. So she called in certain experts and they went over the situation, and this is what she did. She had the property appraised, the actual physical property. And then she took the preferred stock for the appraised valuation, for the actual tangible valuation of that property. Then she took 200 of the oldest employees, really the heads of each family that drew over $100 a month—there were about 200 of them—and presented them with the common stock of the company in proportion to their salaries. And just told them to go to it; that she could not run it down in Brooklyn; that they had been there all their lives and that they knew more about it than she knew about it. And each year when the trial balance is taken, after the bills are all paid, a certain amount is set aside for depreciation, she takes a percentage, which is her dividend on her preferred stock, and the other preferred stockholders have their dividend, and then the balance is divided up among these employees in the form of industrial partnership stock. She does not give them cash, because she wants the business to grow.

Chairman WALSH. This same 200?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; although each year it is being added to, of course. She started with about 200, and these men actually control this industry so long as they pay dividends in the preferred stock, and they actually have all the excess earnings, only instead of having it in cash they have it in this industrial partnership stock. Of course, the second year they receive dividends from this industrial partnership stock, which gradually increases. That is a real profit sharing.

Chairman WALSH. They have a right to sell industrial partnership stock, have they?

Mr. BABSON. They have—no, sir. She worked that out in a very interesting way. When a man leaves the employ of the company the company has the option of buying that stock back at appraised value, or giving the employee a second preferred stock which comes in between her stock and the stock of the active employees, which carries the market rate of dividend but no vote.

Chairman WALSH. How long has that been in operation?

Mr. BABSON. About four years, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How do the other employees get into the sharing of the profits—the other 1,300?

Mr. BABSON. By increasing their efficiency so that they will go in; so they will have—every family will earn $100 a year, and by increasing their salary, by increasing their efficiency by supply and demand.

Chairman WALSH. Who determines that?

Mr. BABSON. Well, who determines yours? I mean, by supply and demand determining the salaries.

Chairman WALSH. No; I mean who determines the rate, or is there an organization; first let me ask is there any organization in the factory?

Mr. BABSON. Why, very mild, practically none.

Chairman WALSH. What is the organization; what sort of workers are they?

Mr. BABSON. Why, there are printers, I think, for instance; the printing department is organized as I remember. Other departments—most of the departments are not organized. Certain departments, perhaps the steam-engineering department, will be organized, but as a rule the plant is not organized.

Chairman WALSH. Is this lady still the principal stockholder?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I have been asked to get her name. What is her name?

Mr. BABSON. Her name is Wabash.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of any other instances of profit sharing in the country—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Before you get away from that, I did not quite catch that. Did I understand the employee must first work and earn $100 per month before he or she enjoys the profit?

Mr. BABSON. That is the rule. There are exceptions to that, where, for instance, a man has a boy, and the man and the boy together may earn $100 a month—a miner boy. But nobody can demand a part unless they earn $100 a month.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any idea—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). Her idea is to gradually decrease that, and she did not want to do anything rash. It was quite a move, to turn the control of that big corporation over from 1 man over to 200, but that was her first move. Now her idea is to gradually decrease or limit and take more and more in every year.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you any idea what the month's earnings of the employees are?

Mr. BABSON. Of all the employees?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I do not mean the total, I mean the average employee, individually?

Mr. BABSON. Well, the 1,400 employees—200 of them get more than $25 a week. I should say that the average earnings were from $14 to $18.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They would require 30 to 40 per cent increase in wages then before they would come to this—

Mr. BABSON. Yes; but why should they? I say there is the point in this profit sharing. I say that is profit sharing against these schemes which are not profit sharing. There are one or two concerns—a concern like the Alpaca Co. up in the western part of Massachusetts which simply arbitrarily divides one-half of its profits among its men and its employees and one-half to its stockholders. I do not call that profit sharing; I call that giving the employees a certain amount of money. It does not depend at all upon their ability. It does not depend at all upon their efficiency. There is no incentive there to speak of. Now, I don't believe that the man who, as a rule—the man in a mill who works at a machine, or who works at a bench, I do not believe that he is a factor in the profits, as a rule. Now, if he is not a factor in the profits, then I fail to see where he is entitled to any share of the profits; he is entitled to a wage; he is entitled to a good wage; but when he gets that wage I think that that is about all he should get—I think that is about all he really deserves.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You think, then, the man or woman working—

Mr. BABSON. Profits are made by brains, not brawn.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You think a man or a woman who is earning $14 or $16 or $18 a week does not contribute to the profits?

Mr. BABSON. As a rule, I say. Of course, there are exceptions; but, of course, that man who is the exception can very quickly get out of that manual-labor class into the profit-sharing class.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, then, do I understand that the manual-labor class is not sharing in the profits, but some other class?

Mr. BABSON. No; she had to have some method of drawing the line. She could not turn that control over to 1,400 people and tell them to go to it. She had to get at this thing gradually. Now, I know her idea was to take these 200, for illustration, all that earned $25 a week and over, and let them operate the business. Now, those men get their wages and the other men get their wages. They get the same wages—all the people in that mill get the same wages as they do in every other mill in Framingham or in the State of Massachusetts in that class of business. They get their wages according to the law of supply and demand. And this 200, which amount is always increasing, they, in addition to their regular wage, also get the profits. Now, I think that where the profit-sharing plan has got in wrong is by mixing it up with wages. I think that wages are one thing and profits another, and that profit-sharing will never come to its own until we fearlessly and frankly recognize the difference.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I take it, then, that those who share in the profits now are largely the superintendents of the plant?

Mr. BABSON. Foremen, designers—a designer—for instance, engraver—the man who thinks of these little things that you buy for Christmas—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). But profit sharing in that plant has not reached the real producer in the plant that is doing the work?

Mr. BABSON. Well, the real producers—how much would he produce if you eliminated that 200?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am not asking that—

Mr. BABSON. I object to the words "real producers." "Real producers"—I will answer that, if you ask for the question, but profit sharing has not reached the 1,200—the submerged 1,200. I say yes to that, but I do not believe that the submerged 1,200—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Let me ask you this, please? If those in that plant where this has been put into effect—those who are earning below the required $25 a week or whatever makes up the $100 a month—if they had, through this efficiency and this superintendence, increased their output and efficiency very materially, but not sufficient to be yet within the $100 a month class, wouldn't they be entitled to something for the extra efficiency?

Mr. BABSON. They get it through increased salaries. Oh, that is another thing I want to say about that plan and business.

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). What arrangement have they for increased salary? Have the employees anything to say? Do they meet their employers?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; the two work together, committees from both parties.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, how could they have committees if the people are not organized?

Mr. BABSON. And they have another thing—a great many are on piecework.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But you say the plant is not organized. How do they have committees?

Mr. BABSON. Well, this is a case of identity of interests, where the people are living in the same town—all know each other; the workman and foreman go to the same church and sit in the same pew and live next door to one another, and their children go to school together. I tell you that makes a great deal of difference. That is the nut of the whole thing.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Probably they might settle those things in a pew in church, but I would rather settle them in the factory.

Mr. BABSON. Well, you might better if you had them settled in church.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Probably, and I might say probably it might be so in this case. Does this common stock you spoke of pay any dividends?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How much?

Mr. BABSON. Pays 6 per cent dividends.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, as I understand you—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). It is called industrial partnership stock.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As I understand you, when they organized they put under the preferred stock all the physical value of the property.

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And then issued common stock?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What does that common stock represent, then?

Mr. BABSON. It represents the increased value of the plant from the day she turned it over to those men. In other words, the day she turned it over there was simply one share apiece—I think when they incorporated the common stock it amounted to a thousand dollars.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How much common stock was issued?

Mr. BABSON. Why, only just about a thousand dollars—just enough to give each of these 200 persons a certificate.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But the certificate really represented nothing of physical value?

Mr. BABSON. Well, there is only a thousand dollars' worth of it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But suppose that goes on over a month, and more and more is issued?

Mr. BABSON. Well, there are earnings coming out of the plant. They are making earnings in excess of the dividends on the preferred stock. See? Now, that goes back into the plant to buy more machinery with, to build an addition; and industrial partnership stock is issued to the amount of that each year—to the amount of the capital stock put back into the plant. If you don't get that clear I would like to make it clear.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think I get it.

Mr. BABSON. Because I think that is one of the finest instances of profit sharing in the country to-day.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But you say there are only there a small percentage of the employees of that concern—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). Yes; but it has only been going on four years.

Chairman WALSH. What has been the increase in the number of participants in the profit sharing in the four years?

Mr. BABSON. Well, I think about 20 per cent. I think that you will find, before long, that she—that they will reduce that limit; but as a good many manufacturers are praying and hoping that the Dennison Manufacturing Co. will bust up, why, she is going to be very careful not to have it do so; and consequently she is working slowly and conservatively. But I think the principle there is absolutely sound.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made a study of the profit-sharing scheme in any other plants in New England?

Mr. BABSON. Well, yes; we have made a study of several. I feel that—I divide them all into groups, Mr. Walsh. One group is mechanical profit sharing, whereby a certain portion of the earnings is divided up among the men irrespective of their efforts. Most profit-sharing plans partake of that system. I do not believe that those are profit-sharing plans in the proper sense. I do not believe they will succeed. They are unsatisfactory to labor, and they are unsatisfactory to capital. They are of use to quiet labor; they are of use for advertising purposes; they are of use for temporarily—for carrying the situation over a temporary peak. But it seems to me that profit sharing, to be successful, must be real profit sharing, and that after capital has received its market rate of dividends, and the wage earner has received his market rate of wage, and the market rate has been paid for the rent and copper and iron, then that the excess of profits should be divided according to who earned them. That is profit sharing.

Now, if they are earned by the man at the bench, as my friend here suggests, he should have it; but if they are earned by the selling department, the selling department should have it. If they are earned by the stockholders through putting out more money and developing and putting in new machines, the stockholders should have it. They should go to where they belong. Now, that is profit sharing; and that will command the respect of capital and labor. That is real profit sharing. Some day that is coming. But the ordinary, so-called profit-sharing plan just simply says, "We will give labor a certain percentage and capital a certain percentage, and we will divide this thing up," in a mechanical way, and there is nothing to it. I believe it will be a boomerang to capital and labor both.

Commissioner LENNON. Let me ask this, and see if I understand. Do you contend that brains, and not labor, are the cause of profit in industry?

Mr. BABSON. Profit—not income; profit—not income.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, in other words, aristocracy, and not democracy, is the cause of profit in industry, and not the common man and common woman?

Mr. BABSON. Well, it is according to what you call common. If a man was limited to work at the bench, if that was the only thing he could do, then I would agree to your proposition; but the man at the bench is entitled at any time to become foreman, and to come up into the brainy class; but so long as he stays at the bench and has not brains enough to come up into the other class, why, he should be satisfied with wages.

Commissioner LENNON. Are there positions of that character commanding $100 a month for the entire 1,400 in that industry?

Mr. BABSON. No, sir; but there is no reason why that $100 a month—I don't see why that bothers you so—that $100 a month can be reduced. It was a very bold experiment—

Commissioner LENNON (interrupting). Well, if you had said $10 a month, I would have asked the question that way.

Mr. BABSON. It was a bold experiment for her to perform, and she wanted to go slowly and surely.

Commissioner LENNON. What opportunity for profit would there be for these 200 or 100 or whatever the number may be that come under this scheme if the rest of the 1,400 would quit the factory and there was no one to take their place?

Mr. BABSON. Why, they would go out and get 1,200 more.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, suppose they could not get them?

Mr. BABSON. Why, they could. It is simply a question of wages. They would get them just the same as they get copper or paper or ink or anything else they buy, and pay the market wage.

Commissioner LENNON. Does this firm—this manufacturing company—in selling their goods—are they governed by what is known as the law of supply and demand?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. In all cases?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. They have no monopoly of the business?

Mr. BABSON. No, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. How about the American Woolen Co.?

Mr. BABSON. The same; they have no monopoly of the business.

Commissioner LENNON. I have been in that business a lifetime—not in the manufacturing, but in the handling of woolen goods.

Mr. BABSON. Well, what would you say?

Commissioner LENNON. Well, I would say they have a monopoly, or almost a monopoly; but we are not here to argue that. Have you any idea as to whether the classification of labor as being governed by the law of supply and demand like coal and iron and other commodities without life is a cause of social unrest?

Mr. BABSON. No, sir; I think that is inevitable. I think that wages must be a matter of supply and demand just the same as coal and iron, and that is where nine social workers out of ten make a mistake.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, thank God, there are some making mistakes.

Mr. BABSON. Yes. But I shall be very glad to go into that more fully, because I think that is a very important factor.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, do you believe what is termed the law of supply and demand should apply to labor?

Mr. BABSON. Absolutely; absolutely. I do not see why—

Commissioner LENNON (interrupting). Why?

Mr. BABSON. Do you believe that the law of gravitation should apply to labor? That is the question. What would you say to that?

Commissioner LENNON. Why should the law of supply and demand apply to labor where it has to do with so many elements that do not enter into the question of the sale or the purchase of commodities? It has to do with the human life, with the religious life; it has to do with everything that goes to make men and women—the right kind of men and women. Now, should they be governed by the same laws as coal or iron or other commodities?

Mr. BABSON. Well, I am willing to say, if you wish me to, that they should not be; but I say they must be. There is no chance for argument on the matter. It is inevitable. The law of supply and demand absolutely fixes it. Now temporarily the thing can be got over, but the reaction, it seems to me, is inevitable. It is too bad that when you stick your hand in the fire it burns. I am willing to say it should not burn, but it does.

Commissioner LENNON. Are you aware of the fact that the Congress of the United States recently passed a law which declares that the labor of a human being is not a commodity?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; but Congress might pass a law that water should run up hill, but that would not make it.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, it might. But I want to ask you a few other questions. You spoke—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). I might—excuse me.

Commissioner LENNON. Oh, go ahead; go ahead.

Mr. BABSON. I might say that the English Government—English Parliament—passed those same laws 100 years ago.

Commissioner LENNON. They did?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir; and found they did not work. They tried to fix prices and tried to fix labor prices. That was all gone through.

Commissioner LENNON. Did that have anything to do with the question of the law of supply and demand applying to labor?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; they tried to suspend the law of supply and demand.

Commissioner LENNON. Didn't they try to fix it?

Mr. BABSON. Tried to fix it by those laws, and the British workingman rebelled against it until they mitigated it to a very great extent.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Ask him if they have passed one within 100 years, or three times that.

Commissioner LENNON. Yes—well, you spoke in reply to some of the questions as to the treatment of labor being a matter of indifference to the directors—that it was not because of enmity or anything of that kind; it was simply indifference. What right has a board of directors to be indifferent to the greatest element that has had to do with productive industry, any more than any other element of the industry?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think he said financial interest.

Commissioner LENNON. I think he said directors.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you say directors or financial interests?

Mr. BABSON. Financial interests.

Commissioner LENNON. Oh, financial interests. That is all I care to ask.

Chairman WALSH. I have a few questions handed up that I would like to ask. Have you made any detailed examination of the Henry Ford plan at Detroit?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; I was out there last week.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe that plan, what it is and how it works out.

Mr. BABSON. Well, it is not a profit-sharing plan in any sense of the word; and Mr. Ford always objects when that phrase is used. As he told me the story, briefly it is this: That for the last 10 years he has been playing the game for capital—up to a year ago he played the game for capital. He felt that it was a question that the development of his business depended on securing capital, and that he saw that the way to secure capital was to make earnings, and so he played the game for capital up until a year ago this January. Then he said the question came to him, whether he should stop and be contented because he had more than he could use, or whether he should start in to play the game for labor; and he decided that he would continue to play the game, but would play it for labor for awhile, and instead of stopping when he was making these certain earnings, as the average corporation does, and letting the management stay as it was and using the same old machines and so forth, why he simply kept on putting in new machinery, kept on developing efficiency, kept on developing his management with the laboring man in view. Now, he said, "I am going to play the game for labor 10 years, and then I will install a system of profit sharing. But when I install profit sharing, after every man gets $5 a day so he can be happy and comfortable and well—when I install that system of profit sharing the profits are going to the man who earns them; and if some man in my advertising department gets a design or makes a design or writes an ad. that makes for me a big sum of money he is going to have a big share of those profits. If some fellow down on the bench invents a machine which creates a big saving, he is going to have a big share in the profits. In other words, I am going to put a statistical organization on this business when I get through with the present plan and find out who makes the profits and then we will have a profit-sharing plan."

Now, I think we will be going at it differently than my neighbors in Framingham, but the fundamental principle would be the same.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I just want to follow that up, Mr. Chairman. You say when they get $5 a day. Would that imply they are not now getting $5 a day—his employees?

Mr. BABSON. Not all of them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is the general impression and general rumor that Ford simply raised everybody's wages to $5 a day.

Mr. BABSON. Not all of them; about half of them, I guess, or two-thirds.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you compare with any of the workmen while you were there?

Mr. BABSON. Not directly; but I have a man who represents me in Detroit, and he has.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You did not get the impression of the workmen there—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). Not personally, but I have a man in Detroit who represents me there all right.

Chairman WALSH. I have two other questions that have been asked me—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). But the point I want to make is that it should not go down as a profit-sharing plan. That is a name that my friends in the orchestra have given it, but that is not the name at all. He always objects to the name.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We are going to have Mr. Ford here before us.

Mr. BABSON. You are going to have one of the best men in the United States before you.

Chairman WALSH. If there were more jobs than men, would not labor be in a better position to get a fair share of the products produced under the law of supply and demand?

Mr. BABSON. Just read that again, please.

Chairman WALSH. If there were more jobs than men, would not labor then be in a position to get a fair share of the products produced under the law of supply and demand; that is, if there were more jobs than men?

Mr. BABSON. They would get higher wages.

Chairman WALSH. Then they would get closer to what they produced?

Mr. BABSON. Why, no; because prices would be higher. I don't think they would have any more left at the end of the week. That is where your supply and demand comes in again.

Chairman WALSH. Does land kept idle in this country for speculative purposes affect the demand for labor in your opinion?

Mr. BABSON. I suppose a single taxer asked that question, and to make him happy I will say yes.

Chairman WALSH. Well, to make him miserable, would you say no, or is that your opinion?

Mr. BABSON. Why, I think it is—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Is that your opinion from your study of economics?

Mr. BABSON. Why, yes; I think it is. Of course it would make more jobs. There is where the trouble is. Your supply and demand comes in again. It would make more jobs, and in that way it would help labor.

Chairman WALSH. Did I understand you to give out as a fact that—just one other question—that a man is comfortable and well when he gets $5 a day?

Mr. BABSON. No.

Chairman WALSH. Depends on the man?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock wants to ask you some questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the case of this enterprise conducted by Mrs. Wabash, did she convert it from sole ownership or from strictly private ownership to a cooperative system as a matter of philanthropy or as a matter of good business?

Mr. BABSON. Good business. She does not believe in philanthropy, nor I do not. Just good business.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, if it was to be purely a question of philanthropy—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). It would fail.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). It would not likely be followed by others.

Mr. BABSON. No; and it would fail.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But if it could be demonstrated to be good business, then there would be the reasonable likelihood of its being followed by others?

Mr. BABSON. That is her hope, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, in making this change, did she make any sacrifice of individual profit to bring about the change?

Mr. BABSON. I don't think so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Or is she getting as much out of that enterprise as she did before?

Mr. BABSON. I should say that so far as her interest—this is just the answer to that question—I should say so far as the income on her investment goes she is getting just as much, only she is not getting the advantage of that unearned increment which has taken place since her father died.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then she has made a sacrifice of that unearned increment to that degree. Then she has been a philanthropist.

Mr. BABSON. Well, that is a good deal the way some of these men talk about profits they have lost which they might have got.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, this is a concrete case.

Mr. BABSON. Well, on the other hand, if she had run it from Brooklyn the thing might have been in bankruptcy now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then she did it in the nature of insurance?

Mr. BABSON. A very good word; a very good word. And I think it would be a very good thing for corporations to insure against labor troubles by giving employees some representation on their boards, as well as to insure against fire and cyclone and everything else.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, do you know, Mr. Babson, whether, since this system has gone into operation, whether the profits of the business as a unit have increased or decreased?

Mr. BABSON. They have kept just about the same; they have increased if anything. Of course, business conditions have been poor since that time, but they have increased.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, the purpose of the system, as I understand it, is to let those who actually produce the results share in them?

Mr. BABSON. Over and above their wages. You understand they all receive wages—the bookkeeper, and the treasurer, all have their regular wage.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; but they get a share in the increased earnings produced by their efforts?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do those shares become their absolute property?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir. When they leave the employment of the company they simply lose their vote on those shares, but they get better security; they get second preferred stock instead of common stock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If this principle is a good principle and the system is a good system, it must be a system that perpetuates itself indefinitely?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How will this system perpetuate itself indefinitely when the 200 stockholders who hold that stock to-day pass away and leave it to their heirs?

Mr. BABSON. There would be no vote.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They would get the earnings just the same, would they not?

Mr. BABSON. The company has the option of calling that in.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Supposing the heirs refuse to sell?

Mr. BABSON. They can not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The heirs can not refuse to sell?

Mr. BABSON. No, sir; they must sell at a price if the company wants them to.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The company reserves the option to purchase it?

Mr. BABSON. Or gives them the second preferred.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And in that way they help perpetuate it?

Mr. BABSON. The practice, I understand, is this: If the heirs live in Framingham they let them keep it; if they live in New York they take it away from them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They give them the stock with a string tied to it?

Mr. BABSON. I do not object to a string being tied to anything I get good gold for. I call it a good string, a golden string.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the early part of your testimony, Mr. Babson, you pointed out that strikes and lockouts, as a rule, occurred where there is absentee ownership?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That where the founder of the business, or the man who actually operates the business, stays with the business, the probability of strikes is minimized?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How do we reconcile that opinion of yours with the fact that in numerous industries, let us say in the cloak industry, in the garment industry, in the building trades, in the shoe industry, where the business as a rule is under the direction of the owner, there have been very, very great strikes and many strikes?

Mr. BABSON. Was that the man who created the business, or his son?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As a rule you will find the cloak industry operated by the founder of the business. It is the exception, so far as I know, for the contrary to be the case, and I know the conditions fairly well.

Mr. BABSON. I said the industries we examined. Take the building industry, they are operated by contractors. Take the cloak industry. Don't you suppose you would find that the strike began in some instances where it was being operated by the children or by a corporation; that it began there and then sprang to the other through a sympathetic strike?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I was told only last evening—this is for your information—by a very intelligent worker in the garment trades, that the difficulty is not with the large employers; that the large employers in the industry as a rule give the maximum wages and have the minimum number of hours and the good working conditions; that their problem is to deal with the small employer, the more or less irresponsible employer who exploits the workers rather than the large employers.

Mr. BABSON. I will tell you how that strikes me. When a man comes to me and says that he works for an automobile company, a great big company, and that he is tied down in his wages, I am apt to sympathize with him, because I know it requires great capital to start an industry like that, and that he has got to work for somebody else; but when a man comes to me who works for one of the small concerns and tells me his tale of woe, I do not take much stock in it, because I know that it does not take much capital to start a little business like that, and that if that man really had the brains he would go out and start up for himself.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, but the fact remains, Mr. Babson, that everybody can not have sufficient brains and sufficient ability and sufficient aggressiveness to start out for himself, because if they did there would be no wage earners; everyone would be an employer.

Mr. BABSON. Some one has to be satisfied with the leavings, that is all; you can not have your pie and eat it too. There is where the law of supply and demand comes in, you can not get over it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, the point I want to make clear—I do not know whether I have made it clear or not—was the discussion of the issue or the statement that you made, Mr. Babson, that it is the large enterprises where the great difficulties are met with—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). I beg your pardon, I did not mean to say the large industries, but the industries operated from office buildings and the industry inherited from father to son.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Owned by absentee owners?

Mr. BABSON. Yes. I do not think it is a question of large or small concerns. Greatness is not a sin and success is not a sin. That is the mistake being made in Congress. We should not consider whether a company is great or small, whether a man is rich or poor; the question is what he does.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, the issue is not with the rich but with the predatory rich?

Mr. BABSON. And the "would be rich."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Our friend to the right says that takes us all in. Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Ballard wants to ask a question.

Commissioner BALLARD. In this industry you speak of where they had 1,400 employees and 200 were selected to put on this so-called profit sharing or stock basis, would it not be the disposition on the part of those 200 to hold the other 1,200 down and not raise their wages, so that they might not become in the two-hundred class and become stockholders? Don't you think that those 200, while they were in the same class as the others, might be unselfish; that after they became owners of the stock they would become selfish and hold the others down as they were held down originally?

Mr. BABSON. I do not think so, for two or three reasons. One is that there are other manufacturing plants all the time bidding for Dennison men, and if they did anything like that they would lose their best employees and the business would go to pieces. These men are mobile, and the question of supply and demand comes in again. Any man that is any good has an ambition to get into control, and, by the way, I do not believe that labor is fighting for wages. I believe it is fighting for a share of the control, and I believe that has got to be recognized. That is the ambition of the people in Framingham, to come in on that industrial partnership stock, and if there was the slightest suspicion that there was any discrimination against them there would be a riot there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just one more question: Following out that line of reasoning, Mr. Babson, that was started by our friend on the left, is it not a fact that in proportion as more employees get into that preferred class of workers, the dividend sharers, that the stock is watered and the dividends per share become diminished? In other words, if the amount of stock issued to-day were doubled to-morrow the dividend per share would be cut in two, would it not?

Mr. BABSON. But if that represents real money—I should say it is not what we call watered stock if it represents real money.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let us assume that it does represent real money, the dividends per share would naturally diminish, would they not?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; but when that money goes back into the plant and addition is made to the plant and the working force is increased and there are no greater earnings per dollar invested, or per brick, or per employee—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). I have not made myself plain, evidently.

Mr. BABSON. Perhaps not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me say it again. Let us say there are $20,000,000 in dividends to be distributed among the common stockholders.

Mr. BABSON. I think there was $160,000 last year.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, let us say there was 160,000 shares, then each holder of a share would get $1 dividend?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But supposing that in the course of years that the earnings increased proportionately and there would be 320,000 shares of stock among which $160,000 was to be distributed, that would cut the dividend down from $1 to 50 cents?

Mr. BABSON. No; because there would be an additional amount of machinery, bags, and tags.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your idea is that the volume of profits would proportionately increase?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir; to the amount of the stock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yet you tell us that the earnings of the business have not increased during the past four years.

Mr. BABSON. They have increased at a greater rate than the proportion of industrial stock has gone out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They have increased?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir. Mr. Harry Dennison, the treasurer of that company, was the largest minority stockholder, and it would have been absolutely impossible for the plan to have been put through without him. He lives in South Framingham. He is the treasurer of the company, vice president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and is a hard-headed business man with convictions, and I strongly recommend that you have him here to tell the story.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What line of business are they engaged in?

Mr. BABSON. The Dennison tags, paper boxes, fancy paper, and it is a very difficult business. There are between seven and eight thousand different items on their catalogue; there is great detail in it.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson wants to ask you a question.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You have gone back to Dennison. There is a question or two I would like to ask you about that. I do not know that I understood two replies you have made in regard to one question. Is the sum that is now paid in dividends by the Dennison Co., no matter who it is paid to, larger than it was under the old arrangement; and if so, it is appreciably larger?

Mr. BABSON. I should say it is the proportion larger that the money invested is larger.

Commissioner GARRETSON. How does the capitalization now compare with the capitalization that existed before?

Mr. BABSON. I said the money invested.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I know you did; but I am asking about the capitalization, without regard to the money invested. What is the capitalization now, as compared with what it was?

Mr. BABSON. I think it is a few thousand dollars less than now.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The only difference is the issue of this industrial stock. Is that the only difference?

Mr. BABSON. Practically, yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And the volume of dividends is proportionate to that increase?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; practically, I guess. The old gentleman was not very generous with his figures, and nobody knows very much what to place.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Was he more generous with his figures than he was with his money?

Mr. BABSON. He was not very generous with either, I guess. My experience is that the two go together very largely. That is another thing that corporations must learn—that publicity will not hurt them.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You objected to the use of the term a little while ago—"real producers."

Mr. BABSON. Real producers of profits. I think there is a producer of the commodity and, then, a producer of the profits. Now, without regard to whether the workman is entitled to credit for producing that commodity, the brains of that company are entitled to the profit made in the production of it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Are you a believer that there is any monopoly of brains? You said something a few minutes ago to the effect that if a certain contingency arose it would probably start a riot on the part of the twelve hundred. The fact that they were fighting for control—is the fact that they were fighting for control an evidence of brains or not?

Mr. BABSON. I do not think there is a monopoly of brains, but there is a monopoly of opportunity. I think most everybody in this world gets about what they deserve, whether $1 or $100 a day. The great injustice is in the unequal distribution of opportunity—the fact that one is given an opportunity to make $100 a day and the other only $1 a day.

Commissioner GARRETSON. We will take the application of the old saw that has been dinned into every schoolboy's ears, that "there is room at the top." If all developed brains, would the crowd be at the top or at the bottom?

Mr. BABSON. I should say that the top would be crowded.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There would be no rooms for rent up there?

Mr. BABSON. I do not see any reason for expecting, under our economic condition, that the time will come when the man at the top will be paid $2 a day and the man that sweeps the street will get $25. It is a question of supply and demand.

Commissioner GARRETSON. If there is only a demand for so much brains—if they all had brains—the supply and demand would stifle the man with brains, except for the few opportunities offered?

Mr. BABSON. It should; because it then shows that the world demands another line of work.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Apply it to the world entirely.

Mr. BABSON. That seems to me the great doubt about socialism—that the thing has got to work out along the line of supply and demand, just the same in regard to people as in regard to commodities. The only way to keep people from making too much iron or copper or raising too much cotton is for the price of those things to go down, and the only thing that keeps everyone in this world from wanting to be a walking delegate or musician or reporter is the fact that the price of those things is going down.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Let me draw your attention to one thing to start with. I do not know that I am misunderstood or not; but, for fear that I am, I wanted to say that I am not a Socialist. I am not approaching it from that point.

Mr. BABSON. No one ever admits they are, but a very few. It has been my experience that when anyone is asked for a definition of a gentleman they give a definition that includes themselves; but whenever anyone is asked the definition of a Socialist he gives one that excludes himself.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In this matter of passing out ownership, you believe that the question of personal equation is a great factor in the matter of industrial control?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I gather also, whether rightly or wrongly, that you are a believer that power and responsibility can not possibly be uncoupled, that responsibility goes with power?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And that duties go with rights?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And it is on that theory that you base your theory against the exercise of power by absentee owners?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir; and I might say that I am not posing as a philanthropist or a friend of labor. My income is derived wholly from the manufacturers. No labor organizations or employees of these factories subscribe for our services or buy our books. My income comes wholly from the manufacturers. Now, the reason for my testimony is that I believe it is good business to eliminate this office building control. I believe that investors—I believe that capital would be very much better off as well as labor.

Commissioner GARRETSON. May I ask you right there if the publications are available to representatives of labor that desire them?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You may receive a subscriber?

Mr. BABSON. It will be appreciated greatly. If you had been a subscriber you would have known of these profit-sharing plans and you would not have had to ask these questions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have I asked a question about profit sharing?

Mr. BABSON. No.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You say the banker has no dislike for labor, that is generic. Is not the attitude of the average financial controller of an enterprise almost wholly based on the fact that he divorces himself from that phase of the question entirely and only deals with the dividend-paying feature?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir; I think so.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And leaves the other to his personal representative on the ground?

Mr. BABSON. Yes. I have always thought that if a director, for instance, of a corporation was obliged to go through the plant once a year, was obliged to visit in the homes of some of the employees, why it would solve a good many of the problems. Of course the average business man rides from his house to his office in a limousine, he goes to the elevator and up to his office and has his lunch brought to him, or goes to his club and he simply associates and talks with the people who represent his class.

Commissioner GARRETSON. He does not have an opportunity to see the other classes and has no real contact with them?

Mr. BABSON. No; instead of reading the American he reads the Evening Post. Now, I think that if we could only get the workmen to read the Evening Post and the employers to read the American, that would go a long way toward solving this problem.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It would narrow the gap, you think?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The difficulty is, too, that he gets his actual information from his representatives and colored by his glasses?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir; but the point I want to make, Mr. Garretson, is that he comes to it unconsciously, that his heart is just as big as yours.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Certainly.

Mr. BABSON. It is due to his environment and his association, and not because he has anything against labor.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And I know people that would not charge him with enlargement of the heart, even in that case. In your opinion, Mr. Babson, do the great combinations of industry—well, do the large combinations give the greatest power, that is, the power of resistance, to the employer or employee?

Mr. BABSON. I do not just understand what you mean, Mr. Garretson?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I mean this: Do combinations enable the employer to combat labor more effectively in the formation of the combination than otherwise, or does it give labor an added power over the employer?

Mr. BABSON. I should think one would about offset the other. Of course theoretically if a corporation controlled an industry, why labor would be in a much weaker position to dicker with that corporation than if the industry was divided up among many corporations.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Because it had no other avenue of employment?

Mr. BABSON. Yes. On the other hand I think public sentiment comes in very strongly, and I think the big corporations, for fear of Government interference, are on their good behavior.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The moral force you think operates in favor of the employee?

Mr. BABSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. While the actual force is in favor of the employer?

Mr. BABSON. The theoretical force, I should not say "actual." I think as to the actual force, one about offsets the other.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Did I—one statement you made I may have misinterpreted. I rather gathered from the statements you made that you believed the present methods of dealing between employer and employee was rather opportunism and an ideal method?

Mr. BABSON. No; I think collective bargaining is the ideal method. I think the closed shop is a temporary warfare method. I think collective bargaining is the ideal method.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Will you define—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). Hold on, let me finish—so far as wages are concerned. Now, it is the division of the profits that I am interested in. I think that labor in the way of wages, in most industries, is getting about what it is entitled to. I think it is a question of the division of the profits. It has happened that these things are always jumbled up together—wages and profits. Now, if I had the case of a labor union, I should distinguish between the two. I should come frankly to my employer and say, "Here, I want my wages fixed in accordance with the question of supply and demand; that is all I ask."

Commissioner GARRETSON. What would you supplement it with?

Mr. BABSON. "Then I want representation on your board of directors, and if we are a factor—to the extent that we are a factor in making the profit after the commodities, the capital, the rent, and so forth, have been paid their market rates—I want a share of those profits, but as profits and only as I am entitled to them."

Commissioner GARRETSON. Would you suggest to the representative of the laboring men, before walking into the company's board room to ask that, that he arm himself or how would he be received?

Mr. BABSON. I think if he put it up right he would get a hearing. The point is that he does not put it upon that basis. He does not say, "I want what I earn," but "I want so much whether I earn it or not," and that is where he makes his mistake.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you ever heard of a profit-sharing demand originating from the employee himself?

Mr. BABSON. Why, I do not know as I have.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I wondered if you had. I have dealt as a representative of laboring men for many years and I wondered if you had any knowledge of such a demand coming from the rank and file. The origin of all the present systems has been in the line of a palliative, as a rule.

Mr. BABSON. I agree with you on that.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock sharp, and you will please return to the stand, Mr. Babson.

Mr. BABSON. I am very sorry, but I have an appointment in Philadelphia at the city hall there to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I have only a couple of question to ask Mr. Babson.

Mr. BABSON. I can stay until 6 o'clock to-night, but to-morrow I have an appointment in Philadelphia, and on Wednesday I sail for South America.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In regard to the Ford proposition, you stated that Mr. Ford rather disliked it to be referred to as profit sharing?

Mr. BABSON. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it not a fact that his plan takes into consideration nothing but the distribution of profits—no capital invasion?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; but I think it is a question of minimum wage in his case; I think "minimum wage" would express it better.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But the question is that the money only comes from the profit from the business?

Mr. BABSON. Where could money come from in any business?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I say no invasion of his capital is to be considered?

Mr. BABSON. All wages come from profits, I think.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Sometimes on a losing game they do not.

Mr. BABSON. On a losing game how are there any profits, will you tell me that?

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is what I say, then, it comes from the capital until the business is wiped out or closed up. Now, in regard to the English enactments, is it not a fact that there has not been an English enactment since Elizabeth covering wages?

Mr. BABSON. I don't think Elizabeth's time.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And from Edward III to Elizabeth is 300 years, and was not their first enactment following the Black Death, when there was a scarcity of labor?

Mr. BABSON. My idea is there were enactments along from 1810 to 1830—that is my recollection.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Not as to wage—certain conditions, but not of wage since Elizabeth. Has not an enactment on wage always followed a scarcity of labor when, owing to the scarcity of labor, the laborer tried to get a high price for his labors? To be governed, in other words, by the question of supply and demand?

Mr. BABSON. I do not know the cause. I was not around in those days, but whatever the reason was, it did not work.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Whenever the question of supply and demand has gone against labor, then they have attempted to cure it by legislation?

Mr. BABSON. But that does not make it right. They did not cure it, did they?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes.

Mr. BABSON. No; the people went into other kinds of business.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In England there is a record of a peer of the realm being exiled for paying more than the wage because he needed the men.

Mr. BABSON. I do not know; I am not sure.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It might be interesting to look up.

Mr. BABSON. Yes; I think so.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, another thing—

Mr. BABSON (interrupting). Do you believe the law of supply and demand in regard to conditions can be suspended?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I do not believe it should be suspended in one direction without being suspended in the other.

Mr. BABSON. Do you believe it can be suspended in any direction?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I believe there have been times when it has been.

Mr. BABSON. How did it work?

Commissioner GARRETSON. How did it work? A hardship on the worker, of course. One thing further. Have you in your investigations discovered the fact that capitalization is always representation of actual value?

Mr. BABSON. I certainly have not discovered that; no.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Then what relation does the fictitious stock bear to the wage rate when you take into account the interest earning on fictitious capitalization?

Mr. BABSON. Why, I do not see how it affects the earnings very much of a corporation, whether they are capitalized for the actual value or whether they are not. It seems to me that—

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). If they have an actual capitalization of a million, and they have to earn dividends on two million, what relation does that second million have to wage when it comes to putting up a plea before the public?

Mr. BABSON. Oh, yes; I see.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Isn't there a connection?

Mr. BABSON. In fooling the public; yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In fooling the public, they will fool their workers as a result, will they not?

Mr. BABSON. Yes; I do not defend overcapitalization, Mr. Garretson.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. I just have one question. I see it is in the same gentleman's handwriting, and as it is rather long I wish you would pay attention to it. Here it is: "If all land forced into use for creating more jobs than men, and wages under supply and demand goes up, don't the price of products have to meet the law of supply and demand, and more products being produced by all land being used, and all unemployed being employed, won't prices of products go down and wages stay up?"

Mr. BABSON. How about rents?

Chairman WALSH. I am asking you the question now and I wish you would please answer that question that is handed to me in that form.

Mr. BABSON. He simply brings out two factors; he brings out the factor of wages and the factor of prices, but he does not say anything about the rents for the land.

Chairman WALSH. Would products go down and wages stay up under those circumstances if all the land was put to beneficial use?

Mr. HARRY WEINBERGER. I would like to add the proposition—

Chairman WALSH. You will have to excuse me, but I am asking the question which is handed to me.

Mr. WEINBERGER. I would like to add the proposition of rents also; in other words, rents would go down, because every piece of land is being used—in other words, rents would go down because every piece of land would be used and products would be more, the price of products would go down and more jobs would be created and there would be more labor than men, and the price of labor goes up. There are three elements in that question of production.

Chairman WALSH. Will you answer the question as it stands, and leave the question of rent out.

Mr. BABSON. I would not want to answer that question offhand.

Chairman WALSH. All right.

At this point we will adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

(The following communication was subsequently received from Mr. Babson:)

THE TECHNOLOGY CLUB OF NEW YORK,
Monday evening.

FRANK P. WALSH, Esq., Chairman.

MY DEAR SIR: In view of an aftertalk with one of the commissioners, I beg to ask that the following conclusions be read into the record: I believe—

(1) "Absentee control" is becoming more and more unsatisfactory for both labor and capital. Many of our present industrial difficulties are due to this and surely something should be done to prevent its spread.

(2) Minimum wage legislation may be of temporary value in special cases; but the most that either labor or capital can do in the long run is to bring about a free market in order that the law of supply and demand can surely and freely work. Labor will be disappointed in the results of legislative "cure alls."

(3) The industrial struggle would be greatly clarified if both sides would agree that labor, capital, management, and commodities shall each be paid their market price in accordance with supply and demand, and then confine their struggle to the division of the excess profits and for a share of control.

(4) Capital is doubtless unjustified in taking all these excess profits as at present is the custom. With a system of scientific profit sharing labor would get a portion of these profits in addition to its wages. But this excess should fluctuate with the business conditions of the country, and should go to those who make the profits.

(5) In other words, I believe that labor is getting in fixed wages about all it is entitled to and that new legislation can not help labor greatly along such lines; but I also believe that labor's total income would double with the installation of cooperative and scientific profit sharing. If so, should not labor look toward cooperation of a form which will bring back to the plant that control which has drifted away? Should not more attention be given to industrial education and to training the workers to become bigger earners?

In closing let me thank you and the commission for the attention which you gave me yesterday. You are all entitled to the greatest credit for the work in which you are engaged. I am sure that it will be the means of increasing labor's income and of insuring capital's legitimate investment. Publicity can only do good to both sides of the conflict.

Respectfully,

ROGER W. BABSON.

(At 4.45 in the afternoon of this Monday, January 18, 1915, an adjournment was taken until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 19, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the same place.)

NEW YORK CITY, January 19, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners O'Connell, Lennon, Harriman, Ballard, Weinstock, and Garretson.

Chairman WALSH. The house will be in as perfect order as possible. The commission will please come to order.

Miss Tarbell, will you take that seat, please?

TESTIMONY OF MISS IDA M. TARBELL.

Chairman WALSH. Your name, please?

Miss TARBELL. Ida M. Tarbell.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live, Miss Tarbell?

Miss TARBELL. 132 East Nineteenth Street, New York City.

Chairman WALSH. You have been engaged in literary work for a number of years, I believe?

Miss TARBELL. Yes, sir; for a great many years.

Chairman WALSH. And you have made, in the course of your life, many investigations into business and industry?

Miss TARBELL. Well, I have been occupied for perhaps 25 years very largely with related subjects; not entirely, but largely.

Chairman WALSH. Lately you have made quite extensive investigations, I believe, into certain industrial plants in different portions of the country?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I have been, for four or five years, looking into conditions as I had opportunity in different industrial plants.

Chairman WALSH. Well, lately, the attention of the commission has been called to your articles running under the generic head of "Golden Rule in business."

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. We would like you, in your own way, please, Miss Tarbell, to explain as clearly as possible what you mean by the Golden Rule in business as you have found it?

Miss TARBELL. I mean by the Golden Rule in business to attempt to work out in a group the policy of doing as you would be done by.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. Now, we have noticed in one of your statements that you state there is a silent revolution going on in American industries. Assuming that that statement flows out from what you have said, I wish that you would give us, for our record, the observations that you have upon that. Of what does the revolution consist? How has it been brought about? What are the activities of it?

Miss TARBELL. I believe that throughout American industry on the side of the management there is a growing feeling that the man—the common man—is worth a great deal more than the employers and the managements of industries have ever dreamed; that there is a growing feeling among many people that the most important thing in the world on the side of business is the development of this common man. That to give him full opportunity and full justice is the most important industrial problem that we have. I think that can be found not fully expressed perhaps in any industry, but in many industries, some large and some small, you can find that idea at work, men not willing longer to underestimate what we call the common man, the workingman, not willing to deny him rights, not willing to be unjust to him, but struggling in the best way that they can to express that in their industries. Sometimes it is a very tentative experiment; sometimes it is a very full one.

Chairman WALSH. And you feel there is a growth, not only of that spirit, but genuine activities along that direction?

Miss TARBELL. I think I may say I know that to be true. I was a long time in convincing myself that such a movement was going on in this country, such a movement or revolution, sufficiently general and sufficiently personal and independent to be dignified by the name of a revolution or a movement. Working as I do for what we call the Popular Magazine, it is impossible for us to take up a subject which is sporadic or temporary; we have to look for something that is general and concerns the whole people; we have to be careful before we decide upon a thing that takes perhaps three or four years in investigation.

Chairman WALSH. Would you please give us the examples in industry that stand out in your mind as the best expression of this idea which you have just submitted?

Miss TARBELL. How fully do you want me to go into these?

Chairman WALSH. Just as fully as you care to do it. You have been told generally what we want, and I am sure your judgment will indicate to you, and you may do it very fully if you please. Do not feel that you are hampered for time.

Miss TARBELL. One of the fundamental and most important of these developments, to my mind, is that which comes under the name of science of management or scientific management. I believe that in that system the workingman has an ally and an opportunity that he has not at all sensed as yet. This is largely because the science of management breaks entirely with the old ideas of management because it is a highly developed and thoroughly scientific system and the untrained mind does not grasp it easily. Again, we all of us object to breaking with what we have been doing, we do not like to try the new. Some of us feel that we have done just about as well as we could be expected to do. In industry the managers, the heads of business, generally feel that they have done as well as can be done, and they are unwilling to take up new systems. Wherever the system of scientific management has been worked out honestly and fairly, and I want to emphasize those words, for there has been a great deal of faking in scientific management, there have been attempts to apply it in a short time, which can not be done, as it is a revolution in itself, but where it is tried honestly it results first of all in better earnings for workmen, it means invariably shorter hours, it means what to me is the most important thing in the world and what is so difficult to get inside an industry, and that is the development of the man as he works. I think one of the rightful complaints of labor, one thing which they should always complain about, is this getting into a business and not being able to get out. Scientific management aims to push men out of settled positions, it creates new kinds of work. The understanding of that system is the most essential in my mind to the development of our industry. I have examined it in at least one-half a dozen different kinds of shops or factories and always where it had been put in with great care and where the work had been conscientiously done I never failed to find that the whole working body has been vastly improved, the conditions have been vastly improved by the application. There is nothing on which I base, myself, more hope for the development of our American industry than this science of management. One reason I feel it is most important is that it requires so high a degree of cooperation between all persons concerned in the industry. It requires a higher degree of collective action than has ever before been applied in industry. But you are not going to improve our industrial conditions without a complete form of cooperative action. You have to have your whole body concerned in the development of industry in constant communication and circulation, every man heard whether his claim is foolish or wise, every man considered whether he wants to discuss whether two times two makes four, every man, and he should be heard—as an individual or through his representative.

Now, scientific management—I am talking now about its thorough and honest application; I want to emphasize that—compels that cooperative action, and that is one of the great reasons that I feel that there is great hope for it in American industry. That is one thing that I have seen that has interested me and in which I thoroughly believe.

I have been greatly interested in the labor policy as it has been developing in the Steel Corporation. Ever since I was a young girl I have known the iron and steel industry; that is, as a child, I lived near Pittsburgh. I can remember the Homestead riots; I can remember the strike of 1870. My goings and comings took me for years up and down the Mahoning Valley, which all steel men know. They took me to Pittsburgh; they took me into the coke regions; and as I traveled back and forth I have always known steel workers; I have always known steel managers; I have known all of the bad conditions. Now, when the Steel Corporation was formed it inherited the most varied sort of labor policy. It probably inherited some of the worst labor policies that the world has ever seen. It also inherited some of the best labor policies—of the time. I should say that the attitude of Mr. Lynch, the head of the Frick Coke Co., toward labor was one of the most enlightened at the time that was in existence in the mines. I do not say it was a perfect policy. I have yet to find any perfect thing; for I am not talking about perfect things. But, Mr. Lynch was an enlightened man who only had the interests of his men at heart. One of the things that always has interested me with the Steel Corporation when it took over that company, was the beginning of the steel slogan "Safety first." Fifteen or twenty years ago, in the Frick mines, you would find in half a dozen languages the slogan "Safety, first consideration." That was all over those mines. I suppose that was the first mine in the country—I don't know that this is true, but I believe it is true—that it was the first mine that had the German safety lamps. I think that Mr. Lynch always did the best that he knew and that he was continually working to do better in his mines. I know that four years ago, was it?—the Westmoreland strike? I think it was that long—a dreadful strike in Westmoreland County, lasting 16 months. I know then I went through that country. It was very desperate. I went over with labor people, and I remember distinctly an intelligent laboring man who said to me, "If they would do in these mines as they do in the Frick Coal Co., we would never have a bit of trouble."

Chairman WALSH. What were the particular features that appeared commendable in that day, Miss Tarbell—those policies?

MISS TARBELL. That they were trying to do everything with safety, which I considered a very great thing. I know their hours—I have not the history of their shortening of the hours—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). I know, but what general policy did Mr. Lynch have toward labor and its claim as to right of organization and redress of grievances and such things as that, if you know?

Miss TARBELL. As I understand it, that mine was always an open mine. I went through those mines, I think it was possibly two years ago, and I asked them about union men, and they said, "There are a great many union men here, but it is an open mine." And they told me that it was a good many years—and I had that from a laboring man I talked with four years ago—since they had had any any trouble with that mine. Now, this I am giving you, not because I have investigated by the dates the history of the mine, but this is history I gathered at the time.

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Sort of a general running history?

Miss TARBELL. Sort of a general running history. I know I have never been in any mine—and I have been in a good many mines—I have known soft-coal mines in Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio a great many years—and I know I never have seen anything that compared with the provision for safety in those mines. I was tremendously impressed with what they were doing in housing and their efforts to make decent villages. I think that is one of the most interesting things that has been done in any mining community. They have—there is nothing in the world so bad as the coke villages around Pittsburgh—the old-fashioned ones; and the Frick Coke Co. literally elevated their villages out of the ash pits and made them over. They have the water in the houses and have given every man a garden and done everything to encourage the gardening. Out of about 8,000—I think I am right—8,000 houses with gardens, about—oh, something over 7,000 had beautiful gardens. That is, they have been doing everything to make their places worth living in. That was the kind of a man that the Steel Corporation took over.

Now, as I said, they took over some that were about as unenlightened as could be. Now, they took over the town of Vandergrift, the American Sheet & Plate Co.; and there another experiment had been going on for quite a long time, and certain things, 8-hour shifts had been 20 years in operation for the great body of the workmen; not, as I understand, for the open hearth. The 12-hour day, as I understand it, prevails in the steel plants now. In Vandergrift there is 11 per cent, and in some places may be a little more. I do not want to be quoted as exact on that, for I don't know; but I think it runs in different plants from 11 to 25 per cent probably. Now, that applies to that work with which everybody is familiar, where a man works intensely for 20 minutes or half an hour, and then is off for a time. The Steel Corporation still contends that they can not do away with that practice. It has been done away with in one independent plant which I know; that is the Commonwealth Steel plant at Granite City, Ill. The head of that plant refused the other day a contract for $2,000,000 for shrapnel, because he was not willing to make anything to kill men.

For half a dozen years—oh, I think more—they have had the 8-hour shifts at Granite City for furnace work. There is no 12-hour work at all in the Commonwealth Steel plant. And they claim that men, on an 8-hour shift, make more steel and iron than they do on a 12-hour shift. They started that because they did not think the 12-hour day was right socially or physically. They believed that short hours with intelligent men so increased efficiency that an 8-hour shift is better; and they have proved that, and they have made a full report of their findings—a very complete and scientific report.

Of course, one great development that they have in the steel plant is the safety work. I don't know whether you care for me to go into that or not.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; you might go into that, I think, with profit.

Miss TARBELL. Safety work in the steel plants started out several years ago. Of course, the industry is a very dangerous one. And in the olden days there was practically a contempt and indifference to accident, which I think everybody shared—I know in the days when I first knew Pittsburgh, in the Mahoning Valley, there was a feeling among men and managers that you could not prevent accidents. That it was one of those things that man had to take when it came, and, of course, the awful accidents are of a kind that one does not want to think of, or having once seen one of those accidents, you never forget it.

I was on a road near a great furnace in Youngstown at one time when a furnace burst and caught the men on the pig bed. Those are things that happen constantly in the steel industry, the iron and steel industry.

They undertook, when the corporation was forming, I think in the National Tube Works, to see what they could do to cut out accident. And the work that they have done certainly is the most thorough and suggestive to one interested in that subject that has been done in this country. Their safety publications, their safety movement, their safety museum, furnish an enormous amount of instruction, and all kinds of instruction are free to those that are interested in improving their safety. In my judgment, the best thing that they have done is their safety organization. You can not have safety simply by machine. There has been an idea that we could pass laws to put such and such a device on machines, and then we would have safety. Well, safety is helped by devices, there is no question about that. But that probably is not one-third of the matter. Safety is to be attained in any industry only by training men to safety habits. It is a great educational work that is carried on in any industry where they set themselves to gain complete safety. One of the finest things to my mind about this and one of the most important things is that—here again you have got a movement that requires a high degree of cooperative work between managers and men. You can not carry it on without this cooperation. And it is one of those things that teach men to cooperate. We do not have cooperation now anywhere, because we do not know how to do it. We, all of us, have some pet notion we hang onto that notion and we would not cooperate with the other fellow because we do not understand, or do not want to understand his ideas. And wherever you can get a group of men to cooperate on anything that concerns them and work together to do that in the best possible way, I think you have done something to push us all up to higher and higher improvement.

The results of the safety movement in the Steel Corporation are two-thirds of them due to cooperative work. Of course, they have spent an enormous amount of money and they are spending to-day I suppose three quarters of a million dollars on an average and have for many years. But it has paid them. The cost of accident—that is their compensation—is less than it was under the old system, not to speak of the satisfaction of saving human life and improving and making industry tolerable, and taking out all of that bitterness and misery that comes from killing men wholesale, because we think that is part of the business.

Chairman WALSH. Now, in the preliminary portion of your statement, Miss Tarbell, you said that you discovered a growing idea not to deny men rights in industry. To what rights do you refer? If I can put it more plainly, what rights were denied that the new thought, as you might say, was that they should be extended or should be allowed to have their expression and vigor. Miss Tarbell?

Miss TARBELL. Well, the country has gone on the theory that you must beat down wages to the lowest. Also, our old theory was you must work from sun to sun. All the old apprentice documents, I have seen them in many shops, compel the apprentice to work from sun to sun; his manager worked from sun to sun, and we were all brought up on that theory, that long hours were somehow a virtue, and that you could not get the work done unless you were working all of the time. It applies in many forms of industry to-day. I do not suppose it applies so general in any form of industry as the domestic life.

There is scarcely a woman in the country who does not think that her servants should commence work at daylight and work in the evening until the work is done. She absolutely refuses to organize her work. It applies practically everywhere. Labor has agitated continually for 100 years in this country on that subject. You go back as far as 1820—I do not know that my figures are exactly accurate, but it is pretty nearly 100 years ago at any rate—and we had labor people in this country complaining about hours, saying they were getting no life, that they could not do their work well, they were breaking down. The time came when our factories organized. We organized textile factories and took women and children out of their homes where they had been weaving and put them into factories, and they had, of their own volition, because of their New England conscience—they had worked from sun to sun in their own homes. And when the factory was formed they thought they ought to work the same way, from sun to sun, and they found, gradually, very gradually, that if you did that you were not able to do your best. Gradually they shortened hours. First they shortened them to 10, and then they shortened them to 8. We have our 8-hours laws for women up in Wisconsin as far back as 1867, I think. And they had it in New Hampshire, but they were not obeyed, because they had not efficient enough management. Nobody believed it possible.

Nobody believed that men should be working those short hours; they believed they would get into mischief and that the devil would get them.

Chairman WALSH. So that is one of the rights you say developed?

Miss TARBELL. Yes. I think, Mr. Walsh, that is developing all over the country.

Chairman WALSH. Any others?

Miss TARBELL. I think there is a growing feeling that the more a man can earn the better it is for the industry; the better it is for society. I do not mean to say that in general, but I mean to say that you will find that going on all over this country; people that believe that managers—that believe that managers should do that and preach it. It certainly is preached in scientific management.

Chairman WALSH. Would you please name any industrial plants in the country that you are familiar with where you think an application of scientific management has been installed?

Miss TARBELL. I think it has been installed in the Cloth Crafts Shop of Cleveland in a most interesting way. There is a shop in which all the questions involved in production and in all the interests of the worker are constantly taken into consideration with the idea of developing that worker to the highest possible degree.

Chairman WALSH. How many employees are in the concern, please?

Miss TARBELL. They have about eight or nine hundred.

Chairman WALSH. Eight or nine hundred?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, any others that you happen to have in mind?

Miss TARBELL. In the Pilgrim Laundry of Brooklyn there is a very remarkable application of scientific management. There it has been going on for a great many years.

Chairman WALSH. About how many employees do they have ordinarily?

Miss TARBELL. I think about three hundred. I would not be positive about that.

Chairman WALSH. Any other organizations that are approaching it even?

Miss TARBELL. I know how varied trade is.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; that you might speak of as examples where it is fair and honest, where they are working into it upon correct principles?

Miss TARBELL. I think the Link-Belt Co., of Philadelphia.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And Chicago?

Miss TARBELL. I do not know of the Chicago plant; I have never been in the Chicago plant. I have only been—I have been twice; I spent a day once in the Link-Belt Co., and I have seen a great many of their men and have been in correspondence for a long time with Mr. Dodge.

Chairman WALSH. You gave as one of the benefits of scientific management, one of the great benefits, necessary cooperation between the employer and employee. Would you kindly indicate of what that consists? For instance, what does the employee do? What does the employer do in common?

Miss TARBELL. Well, under scientific management, of course, the work is all planned. Instructions are carefully laid down. This work is planned in what is called the planning room. The great majority of the—I am talking now of the shops in which it has been thoroughly installed, we may say, a completed shop—all of the men that are in the planning room making instruction cards, taking time studies, are men that have been brought up from the shop itself. That is, in scientific management where it is properly installed, you have much less manual work and you have more head work. I know in a machine shop they will tell you they have one man in the management for two at the machines, and generally those men in the higher grades are men that have been pushed up from the lower.

Chairman WALSH. Are two of the high points of efficiency in management time studies ascertainment of the length of time that it takes to do a given task, or given operation, and the payment therefor?

Miss TARBELL. Certainly.

Chairman WALSH. That plan you have noticed?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. In the places you have investigated, what is the cooperation, if any, which exists between the employer and the employee with reference to these two items—that is, the time studies first?

Miss TARBELL. The management, I suppose you mean, by the employer?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; of course.

Miss TARBELL. Management; yes.

Chairman WALSH. The employer himself or his vice principal.

Miss TARBELL. Yes; the responsible person.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Miss TARBELL. You know how the time study is made?

Chairman WALSH. Of course, we all know in a general way.

Miss TARBELL. Yes. Well, the time study—studies are sometimes made in the shop. I more generally myself have seen them in an experimenting room. The time study man works with the operative in resolving this particular operation into its different parts.

Chairman WALSH. Who, finally, if anyone—or is it done by cooperation—how is the length of time fixed definitely?

Miss TARBELL. I have never seen it done myself except by cooperation. I have been in good shops where there was a thoroughly honest effort, and have seen time studies made where the operative and the time study man—

Chairman WALSH. That is the cooperation between the individual who undertakes the practice and the time study man, who fixes the time finally?

Miss TARBELL. Well, they decide in what length of time this operation should be done, and it is decided what is the best way to do it—of course, there is a great deal of motion study combined in this. A man may do a given operation who has been accustomed to do it in a way that takes it two or three times as long as is necessary. If that is a bad habit, the employer will aim to break that habit up.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Miss TARBELL. And teach him the easiest way of doing it, the quickest way of doing it. Sometimes it takes a short time and sometimes a month to get an operation properly studied and the proper time for its different operations and proper motions made out. And where people go in and make a time study in half an hour or a day it is an imposition. The man that has the instruction card has a right at any time to appeal to the office—

Chairman WALSH. Does that contain the length of time in which the operation is supposed to be covered?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. About the instruction card, now, who issues the instruction card?

Miss TARBELL. The instruction card is issued from what is called the planning room. In that planning room there are all the different officers that make up the force.

Chairman WALSH. They fix the operation in the planning room, the length of time of the operation?

Miss TARBELL. That is, the result of this study is brought to them, and their instruction cards are made out.

Chairman WALSH. Does the plan contemplate representation of all the employees in any particular part of the work, any agreement upon time studies?

Miss TARBELL. Suppose you have a body here that are all on one particular operation. One of those persons makes a time study with the time-study man. After that has been worked out so that it is believed it is accurate, all those persons are put on that operation. Most of the time cards in the good shops carry this instruction: "If at any point, if at any one of these operations the time is thought to be too fast, or too short, the operative is supposed to complain." And I have very often found they do complain. I have seen them complain. I have seen the manager, the floor manager, I have seen the man and the operator who had questioned a particular time.

Chairman WALSH. But in the plan, inherent in the plan, do you understand that there is no place for an organized representation of all the employees in the shop?

Miss TARBELL. The representative of this group who is studying that out, or the man who is studying that with the time-study man, with the manager and the other officers, of course, he is representative in a way of that body. If he does not work that out correctly, if he is not watchful, if he is not—if he is imposing upon his fellows they find that out very quickly.

Chairman WALSH. Does the plan properly organized preclude the idea of democratic organization among the employees to have a voice in the study of the length of time that an operation takes?

Miss TARBELL. No. As a matter of fact, it is the most democratic thing that you can think of, because these men are always complaining to the heads. And I have never been in a shop yet, and I have been a great many hours in the shop, that I did not find a man in overalls in the front office, sometimes making a great howl about things. It is the only kind of management that I have ever found where the man could go to the man that made the blue print, go to the man that was managing, where there was an entire circulation all the time in the office. I believe the system does not preclude any kind of democratic organization. I think it is the most democratic organization that I have ever found. I suppose the point at which you are driving, Mr. Walsh, is whether it precludes the representative of unionism—is that the idea?

Chairman WALSH. Exactly.

Miss TARBELL. Not at all. If there is good will on both sides—it may be a little difficult, but then there are many difficult things. I think most of the men that have had experience with scientific management have been so busy with the theory that they have not thought very much about anything else. I think that they are wrong in this. I think the unions are doing harm to the great body of people that they represent, who ought to have the best of any idea, that they don't go into the shops, they don't study and learn this thing, they do not let them study long enough. They ought to have an opportunity to let the men in the shops and let them study intelligently for a year or so. Just how a representative of a union is going to come in on these time studies I can't say. I think that anything that is good for a body of people if you come up against an objection there ought to be full cooperation in meeting that objection. You see, my point is, Mr. Walsh, that to say we do not see how that is going to be done, therefore it can not be done is wrong. It is the basis of most of our industrial unrest. There is nothing more detrimental, in my opinion, than refusing to consider a disputed point. It does not make any difference what they want. It may be a very foolish thing, the most foolish thing in the world, but get them around a table, and you will soon find out whether it is a foolish thing or not.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as to the fixing of the bonus that is to be paid for the work in the thoroughly efficient places of this kind, how is that done?

Miss TARBELL. That always has been fixed by the management. The theory they have gone on is very general, one-third of the extra product should go to the workman; one-third should go to the management, that is the planning room. There are a great many new positions and work created by this, and that has been overlooked, the amount of new work that is created by scientific management. You have to have all kinds of new tools and appliances. It is a thorough reconstruction and revolution. One-third—I think it generally goes one-third to the management, one-third to the labor, and one-third to the shop force.

Chairman WALSH. How generally do you believe this new idea of which you have spoken has taken hold of American industry?

Miss TARBELL. Well, that is very hard to say, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Could you approximate it? Generalize it? Is it general or rather confined to a few of the progressive ones out in front, as it were, or is it a sort of national development going on throughout all business?

Miss TARBELL. We have had in the last few years a good deal of upheaval, and my feeling is that the things behind that upheaval have taken stronger hold upon industry than any other walk of life. I think it is quite impossible to say just how general that is.

Chairman WALSH. You would not undertake to say what percentage of factories in the United States, in a general way, have taken adequate steps along that line?

Miss TARBELL. I do not know; but this I do know, that this is a kind of idea that, once started, can not be stopped. I know what brought me to this idea—to this particular study—was the fact that in doing entirely different kinds of work—that is, in investigating the effect upon industry of special privilege in other years—I kept constantly running on to things that I did not know existed. I found men doing things that seemed to me so intelligent, so much more humane, of so much larger view, that I began to say to myself, "There is a great deal going on I was not aware of," so I really think it constitutes what we call a "movement." I know that I never go into an industrial center that I do not run on something of this kind, and my mail brings me every day something I have not heard of. A great deal of this thing is done on the quiet, for there are many men who are working along such lines and doing good things who seem to be a little ashamed of it—they do not want to take any extra credit for it. I know of many men who have absolutely refused to let me name them.

Chairman WALSH. What percentage of the factories—or about how many factories or establishments did you investigate in your late studies?

Miss TARBELL. Well, I can not tell you that, Mr. Walsh,

Chairman WALSH. Could you approximate it?

Miss TARBELL. I do not believe I could approximate it.

Chairman WALSH. Did you undertake to go to what you might call the large corporations—the leading ones or progressive ones—or did you take them as they came?

Miss TARBELL. I have been going for a number of years to all kinds, and most of them were very unprogressive.

Chairman WALSH. And so your articles on the new rule in business covered the late investigations which you have made in particular places, added to your experience as you have gained it in other investigations?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; a great many good things I found years ago, when I was studying particularly large corporations, trying to write a history of one on the line of the relation between it and transportation. Tariff study led me for a number of years into the textile field and related industries, and a great many of my observations were made then. I have been fairly well through New England—Rhode Island, Lawrence, Fall River—and wherever I have stopped off of a train I have generally gone to visit a factory, so that it would really be impossible for me to say.

Chairman WALSH. It would really be impossible, then, for you to estimate for us the number of establishments you have visited, upon which your studies and conclusions are based?

Miss TARBELL. I would not want to guess it off.

Chairman WALSH. It would be impossible in an inquiry of this kind?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I would not want to do so.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make an effort, say, in these larger industries—such as the steel company—to investigate all phases of the activities of the company which affected the men working for it? That is, for instance, the extent and effect of the hours that they labored?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I have looked into that a good deal in other years. The old hours were very wrong. I have a most decided opinion on the seven-hour day—the seven days a week, I should say—and the 12-hour day; and those were things which I have been familiar with for a good many years.

Chairman WALSH. Did you observe, approximately, how many employees of the steel company still worked 12 hours per day?

Miss TARBELL. I mentioned that a little time ago. I think it differs in different places. I was in Vandergrift for a week or so about a year ago, and they told me then that there was about 11 per cent of the men working 12 hours.

Chairman WALSH. About 11 per cent of the men working 12 hours?

Miss TARBELL. Yes. They said they were gradually reducing that, and at Vandergrift they said they hoped to eliminate that. I do not know what the last report of the steel company is. The last report of the steel company mentioned the amount of 12-hour men still in operation.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know, Miss Tarbell, the number of employees in the United States Steel Corporation—the whole corporation—that still work 12 hours per day?

Miss TARBELL. I do not. I think the last report said about 25 per cent, but now I do not know that.

Chairman WALSH. I might say for your information that the report of the Commissioner of Labor for 1910 says that approximately 50 per cent of the employees of the Steel Corporation work 12 hours per day.

Miss TARBELL. I think that has been very much decreased.

Chairman WALSH. There have been certain investigations made. I was just going to ask for your observation as to the effect which those hours seemed to have upon the persons engaged in the industry that were still working 12 hours a day. Did you observe any effect?

Miss TARBELL. I do not believe a man can work 12 hours a day. Of course the kind of work the steel people are doing a 12-hour day is not 12 hours of steady work; that is understood. They will work 20 or 30 minutes and then they have a 20 or 30 minute rest. No man could live—I do not believe he could live very long and work six hours a day steadily under that intense heat. They have to have their rest spells. I think that almost invariably men that work for 12 hours a day are physically—well, they are pale and they are thin and they are a little worn. That is not because they are doing too much work, but they are shut up long hours and they do not have sufficient social life. The stockholders' report—you remember that a year ago a committee of stockholders examined all the steel plants. Their report, as I remember it, said they did not think the bad effect on the men—that the effect was not so bad physically as it was socially; that if a man must be 12 hours at his work he did not get a life.

Chairman WALSH. That was the report of the stockholders of the United States Steel Co.?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; the report of the stockholders of the company—that 12 hours' work, on social grounds alone, should be done away with.

Chairman WALSH. What is the escape for that? Suppose the men engaged in it held that same theory and that their apparent physical condition was due to exhaustion, for instance, overfatigue, how is the approach being made, if there is any, to escape from those conditions?

Miss TARBELL. The eight-hour shift is the solution.

Chairman WALSH. How can they get it?

Miss TARBELL. The eight-hour shift?

Chairman WALSH. Yes. If you say there were 50 per cent still working 12 hours a day in 1910, and we will assume it holds good to-day—

Miss TARBELL (interrupting). It does not, I think. I think you will find it is as low as 25 per cent in some of the plants and in others lower.

Chairman WALSH. In the preliminary report we have received I am told it runs about the same. We have not completely checked that, however.

Miss TARBELL. I think that is too high; I feel certain that it is.

Chairman WALSH. Assuming there is a large proportion that still work 12 hours a day, how is it being worked out, or how can it be worked out?

Miss TARBELL. I think it must be worked out on better management, more efficient cooperation with the men. The men, of course, object. I talked with 12-hour men in Vandegrift, for instance, and they said they did not want an eight-hour shop because they could not earn as much. In the Commonwealth plant, to which I have referred, this same class of work is done on the eight-hour shift, and the labor in the factory and the men are earning just as much and the output is just as much. That was done by a scientific study of the problem. That work is all piecework, I think, and the piece rate in all operations was raised a little. It was raised so that in 8 hours they would earn as much as in 12; the men were not told that in order to keep that advance in wages, so the company claims, that they must do more work, but as a matter of fact they did do more work in the 8 hours than most of them had been doing in 12 hours, because they came rested and refreshed and their minds had been renewed by a little pleasure. They found they can do that in the Commonwealth Co., and I hope the steel company will find they can do it. They have done away with the seven days a week, and that is a very great advance, and it was done away with over the objection of a great many of the men. I think in one case 3,000 men left a Steel Corporation's plant because the Sunday work was stopped and went to plants where Sunday work was going on. I think that is true.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think the wage received by the worker has any effect upon his desire to work upon Sundays; that is, if he deems his pay adequate, whether or not the whole question of wage would not have a very deep effect on a man's desire to work long hours or an extended number of days in a month?

Miss TARBELL. I think with a majority of men it would, but there are always men who have some reason or other—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Human selfishness.

Miss TARBELL. Well, a person may have some terrific demands on him that makes him anxious to earn every cent that he can. Men may have sick wives or children and they think it is important to earn every cent they can. We have a great many foreigners in this country who are living on practically nothing, so they can save up their money and go back to their own countries and buy farms and live on them. That is a bad condition for our industry, but there are great bodies of foreigners that have that feeling.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make any study of wages in these industries you examined?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I always did.

Chairman WALSH. Did you consider the increase of wages as compared with the increase of the cost of living during the same periods?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I always took figures on that.

Chairman WALSH. What did you observe in regard to the steel company in the Pittsburgh district in that respect?

Miss TARBELL. I think all over the country the cost of living has increased faster than wages have increased, and it always does. The cost of living goes up and the workmen have to have that behind them in order to get an increase of wages.

Chairman WALSH. To what extent did you observe that to be the condition in the Pittsburgh district? To what extent has it increased? It has been stated that the cost of living increased between 1901 and the present time to an extent perhaps of 100 per cent greater than the increase of wages; would that be correct?

Miss TARBELL. I think that is putting it pretty steep, but I do not know. I have those figures somewhere, but they are not fresh now in my mind. There has been an increase in the cost of living, that is the experience, greater than the increase of wages.

Chairman WALSH. Did you examine into the living conditions of the employees deeply and extensively in these cases?

Miss TARBELL. I have spent considerable time, in not looking at the worst, with which I was sufficiently familiar, but looking at those things which were great improvements to see what could be done. I wanted to get at things that had been done, because when you know what has been done you have something to go on and have a pressure to put on people who think conditions can not be improved.

Chairman WALSH. Did you study the effect of the maintenance of stores by these large companies where the employees buy supplies?

Miss TARBELL. I have been looking into that question for a number of years—I looked into it at—in the coke region, in the Frick Coke Co. In that region the mines are so far from the towns that there has to be a store of some kind. The question is whether the company or an individual shall keep that store. As it is going now in those towns I think there are about 20, each one had its store.

Chairman WALSH. Where is that?

Miss TARBELL. Near Pittsburgh in the Connellsville district. Each one of the 20 towns I went through have a store. I took the prices in the stores very carefully. I talked with a good many women that were buying. A great many of those women were foreigners and I could not talk with them, but I saw their baskets, I saw the food they were buying. They are excellent shops. I think you can not find better kept butcher shops anywhere. The prices of meat were 2 or 3 cents lower than the prices in the nearest towns. The people were not obliged to buy there. There were wagons going through all the time, beer wagons and butcher carts and grocery wagons, but there were no independent stores. I am thoroughly convinced that those stores are well managed and managed for the interest of the employees. That they always are is not true. You take it around—just a little ways off in other mines and the stores are deplorable. One cause of the strike in this district four years ago was that the stores were badly managed and the people were swindled on prices. Those stores vary a great deal.

Chairman WALSH. Did you inquire into the capitalization of the Union Supply Co., which, I believe, is the name of the corporation that operates the stores for the H. C. Frick Coal & Coke Co.?

Miss TARBELL. No; but I read their report and had that report in mind when I looked after these stores and was trying to convince myself whether in this particular location the stores were well conducted and whether the prices were higher or lower than the people could get the same goods for in adjoining towns. Now, as far as that company was concerned, I know those stores are good stores and they are not swindling the people.

Chairman WALSH. Did you observe any particular strength that those stores would have outside of the mere influence of its being operated by the owners of the enterprise?

Miss TARBELL. I do not get your question, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. Any economic strength, we might call it, by reason of the fact that the other stores were farther away and more difficult of access, or anything of that sort?

Miss TARBELL. In most of the cases the other stores, independent stores, were out of shopping distance. There was no other clientele for these shops than the miners themselves. The shops existed for the miners. If there had not been that shop they would have had to go to town or to deal with the traveling wagons. In that case they seemed to me to be doing a very good work—that is, a perfectly honest business proposition. There are many company stores that have for years swindled the miners, that I know, but I know that was not being done in this particular case. I do not know what is being done in the company's stores in other subsidiary companies of the steel company.

Chairman WALSH. You saw the report that was made on the conditions of employment in the iron-and-steel industry in the United States to the Fifty-second Congress?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And you saw the statement made there as to the Union Supply Co. of being capitalized for $75,000?

Miss TARBELL. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And did you have that in mind when you made these investigations?

Miss TARBELL. Yes, sir; I had read that, and I wanted to see what kind of shops they were running.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, from your observations, what would you say was the point of vantage or how could those stores make such an enormous profit as, assuming that report to Congress to be correct, they were making? What could they—

Miss TARBELL (interrupting). Well, I don't see how those stores could make an enormous profit; I don't know. I don't know at what they bought. All I know is just what I have told you, that those stores were selling to those miners a little cheaper on everything. I took the prices of shoes, I took the prices of dry goods, I took the prices of meat, I did not take the prices of green groceries, because those miners were, practically all of them, raising their own vegetables at that time; and I was very much interested in seeing that the store itself was buying cabbages, green groceries, and potatoes of various kinds from the miners themselves that had raised them, and were selling them outside.

Chairman WALSH. I recognize that. The reason I was trying to get at this, Miss Tarbell, is—

Miss TARBELL (interrupting). Yes?

Chairman WALSH (continuing). I recognize the fact that a company of that kind might have advantages other than charging excessive prices to its patrons.

Miss TARBELL. Yes; they would have.

Chairman WALSH. Such as buying in large quantities and being sure of what the demand was going to be.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And the character of the goods to be bought?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. I have heard and recognized that. But this report, now, states that the Union Supply Co. (Ltd.), during the 52 months for which records are available, paid dividends slightly over 1,617 per cent of its capitalization, which represents an average of 372 per cent per annum. They have now a nominal capitalization of $500,000, and have paid dividends thereon of 80.5 per cent per annum or 537 per cent on its original capitalization. Now, you say, so far as you observed it, that the prices have compared most favorably with those in the same locality; and you went into the question no deeper than to make that examination you speak of?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I knew, of course, that they have advantages. In the first place, they owned this ground—they owned the building—

Chairman WALSH. They do not pay rent, for instance?

Miss TARBELL. No. They must, of course, buy very intelligently, because they had a very good class of goods; but they keep a very fresh stock. It was rather interesting to see how the hats and styles compared. It was just as good as they were in Pittsburgh. It was a fresh stock—not old stock—that is, in those particular towns. I don't suppose, of course, they could sell their goods—

Chairman WALSH. The prices charged in the stores has a very definite effect on what might be termed real wages in a certain locality, meaning what a man retains from his wages?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; of course, it has. And the way to get around that in small communities, industrial communities, the real way is to carry on a co-operative store; but you can only carry on a cooperative store where the workmen own the store and are represented in its management, and, if there are profits, share in the profits, and must be represented on the management. That has been done in some places, but it is very difficult to do that in a fluctuating community like these mining camps and with foreigners. That is very difficult. But I think the ideal way in a small community, where it must keep up its own shop, is to have the cooperative store in which everybody has an interest. That has been done in some places. I know of one or two that are admirably managed and owned by the workmen—by the whole group—and where every man that has any interest in it gets a share of the sales, gets lower prices, and gets his dividends.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Miss Tarbell, I do not wish to divert you at this time, because we are all interested in this matter, but I feel that I ought to speak to you about this—these newspaper gentlemen are very pushing about getting snapshots of some of the witnesses, and they have asked me for—and so far as the commission is concerned, they may do that any time, but I do not like to have them do it at this time without mentioning that to you and ascertaining if that is all right with you?

MISS TARBELL. Well, if they don't explode anything it is all right with me.

Chairman WALSH. Referring to Vandergrift particularly, Miss Tarbell, is there a definite policy there with relation to the organization of labor?

MISS TARBELL. As I understand it, Vandergrift was what is called an open shop. There are in Vandergrift a great many members of unions, I think. I believe the union scale of wages prevails. That is my impression. There is the same opposition in Vandergrift as there is all through the Steel Trust, as I understand it, to a recognition of the union.

Chairman WALSH. The steel company has a definite policy against it, I believe?

MISS TARBELL. Well, I don't think they discriminate—so far as I know, I have never come across a case of what I call a discrimination against a union man. That is, I do not know of any subsidiary where they ask, "Do you belong to a union or not?" Now, that is as far as my inquiries go, and I always inquire about that point. I found all through the steel plants a good deal of touchiness on the subject of unions.

Chairman WALSH. Our attention has been called to an alleged resolution of the executive committee, which is said to be still in force, passed June 17, 1901, as follows: "We are unalterably opposed to any extension of union labor and advise the subsidiary companies to take a firm position when these questions come up and say they are not going to recognize it, namely, any extension of unions in the mills where they do not now exist."

Does that seem to be the general policy in all the places you have visited?

MISS TARBELL. Well, I should say that the managers wherever I have been would be a little loath to lay down their labor policy quite as strong as that. And I have asked a great many of them, and their reply has been: "There are union men in this shop. We never ask whether a man belongs to a union or not. We never discriminate against union men." I take that on their statement. I have asked in Vandergrift in various places where I have talked with laboring men, whether there had been any actual discrimination. They said it was one of those things that they did not talk about. Of course, the labor troubles have been very keen, and I think it seems gradually to be dying out, and the time may come when both sides will have a more reasonable attitude. It does not seem to me that it is an acute question in the steel plants. That is my impression. The invariable reply I got when I asked a manager about unionism was, "There are union men all through our shops. We never ask that question and never discriminate against them." The invariable answer, when I talked to a workman was, "The union men are here, but we are not active, and the management would not stand for activity. They insist on the open shop."

Chairman WALSH. Did you notice the affidavits that were filed with President Taft in 1910 with respect to Vandergrift and to the effect that they were unable to secure a hall in Vandergrift in which to hold a meeting; that the workmen in the mills were specifically forbidden any meetings?

MISS TARBELL. Union meetings?

Chairman WALSH. Union meetings; that the organizers were forcibly attacked by the watchmen led by the foreman of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., and that the organizers were forcibly compelled to leave the town.

MISS TARBELL. I inquired from two or three people, and they told me the same thing—that when the union organizers came into the town—there are in Vandergrift a good many Italians and a good many foreigners that do not speak English—the foreign workmen chased them out. That is what was told me by two or three different people. Whether it was true or not I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. Did you observe whether or not there was any political control exercised by the company in the town—any political organization of the community?

Miss TARBELL. The town council is made up entirely of men from the shops. I attend the town council meetings; I attended the meetings of the board of education, and it was made up entirely of shopmen. The men that ran the churches were all men that belonged in the shops. I hardly found one from the management. There was no member of the management on the council, and no member of the management on the school board, as I remember; of course, they were in the different churches.

Chairman WALSH. The mayor, or burgess as they called him, who was the mayor, regardless of his name, what was his position?

Miss TARBELL. The mayor kept a store in Vandergrift.

Chairman WALSH. An independent shopkeeper?

Miss TARBELL. He was an independent shopkeeper entirely. I went to two meetings of the town council. I went down once—they get a man in jail about once in three weeks in Vandergrift, and it is a great event when they have a man in jail, and I was invited to see the prisoner and hear the trial, which I did.

I asked about political parties, and I was told that they had been pretty strongly Republican. Of course that class of workmen nearly all are high-tariff men, but when the Progressive Party came along there was a great number of them that went over to the Progressive Party. I was shown their figures on the last election. The Democrats polled the largest vote and then the Republicans and then the Progressives and then the Socialists. There are quite a number of Socialists in Vandergrift, and they have their lively meetings on the public square. Now, if they forbid the union to meet on the public square I don't know it; but they have got in Vandergrift what would be an absolutely wonderful public forum, and the Socialists come and gather there, and I saw them grouped together, and there was no interference so far as I know. They have only one policeman on duty in Vandergrift, and as they have a pretty good surface to cover he might not have been chasing Socialists that particular moment; but I understood they were not chased, that they were allowed to hold their meetings freely.

Now, if they forbid union meetings I do not know; but of course it is very foolish if they do. They ought to say, "Come on, boys, here is the square, and talk all you want to."

Chairman WALSH. Our attention has been called to a proclamation issued by James H. Chambers, burgess, on the 31st day of August, 1909, at a time when it is claimed organizers of the American Federation of Labor undertook to hold meetings there. Did you see that resolution?

Miss TARBELL. No; I never saw that.

Chairman WALSH. It was a proclamation. It reads as follows:

"After congratulating the people of Vandergrift and the adjoining boroughs on the measure of peace and prosperity which now pervades the community, I know that I voice the sentiment of all good people in saying that we would deplore anything that would mar the peace and harmony which now pervades the entire community, and this is particularly so as regards Vandergrift Borough. It is therefore a matter of regret that outside influence seems to be at work, the accomplishment of which would only tend to disturb the peace and order of the Borough of Vandergrift. I refer to marches, parades, meetings, and demonstrations by persons, mostly nonresidents, and which would have no other effect than to engender ill feeling among our neighbors and citizens.

"As the corporate officer of the Borough of Vandergrift, Pa., charged with the maintenance of peace and order in the borough, I can not tolerate or permit any such conditions to exist.

"Now, know ye, that I, James H. Chambers, burgess of the Borough of Vandergrift, Pa., by and under authority and power in me vested by law, do hereby—until such time as may seem more expedient—forbid the assembling of persons in large crowds upon the streets, alleys, highways, or private properties, and all marches, parades, public meetings, or any other public demonstration within the borough limits, and all persons are commanded to follow their usual vocations in their usual quiet way.

"Given under my hand and seal this 31st day of August, 1909.

"JAMES H. CHAMBERS, Burgess."

You say your attention was not called to that?

Miss TARBELL. I never saw that; no. A very foolish order.

Chairman WALSH. What is that?

Miss TARBELL. A very foolish order.

Chairman WALSH. A very foolish order, and, of course, would be a serious interference with democracy there or elsewhere.

Mrs. Harriman would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Miss Tarbell, in the hands of unscrupulous employers, can scientific management work to the detriment of the employees?

Miss TARBELL. Well, it can not work very long, because scientific management depends absolutely upon the workmen. It can not be put over unless the worker agrees—absolutely can not. I think that has been proved again and again. Wherever the attempt has been made, as it has been made sometimes, to make the times too short—sometimes an employer will come along to the time study man and say, "Well, just shorten that up a little." Wherever they do that they have trouble. It won't work out unless you have the full cooperation of the workmen. It depends entirely on the workmen. I am perfectly convinced of that.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Where scientific management is installed, in your estimation, is or is not organized labor valuable?

Miss TARBELL. I think organized labor is always valuable—

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You do not consider it necessary though?

Miss TARBELL. You mean necessary to the installation of the system? To the working of the system.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes—to the employees.

Miss TARBELL. Individually?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes—

Miss TARBELL (interrupting). Well, that all depends upon how—upon what ideas the employees have; how much they believe in cooperation among themselves; how much they believe that they can do through a united effort. The union is an organization that ought to concern itself with everything that concerns the best interests and development of the body of people in it. Wherever you can get a body of men working together for their own interests it is a good thing. I think it is a great mistake not to foster the unions. I think many intelligent employers see that and would rather have their men unionized. I have had many employers tell me they would not under any circumstances do away with the union; that they thought it was a fine thing all the way around.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. But from the point of view of the employee, you do not consider it as a protection, where there is scientific management, that there should be unionizing?

Miss TARBELL. You mean do I consider it essential to the honest management?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Yes.

Miss TARBELL. No; I do not. I don't think it is essential. Where you have scientific management properly installed it is because you have very intelligent workmen and where you have employers and managers of a very high grade and where they know that any imposition, any unfairness, any injustice that is worked on the operative rebounds on themselves—where they understand that perfectly, and where their great idea is to do full justice and develop that employee to the fullest extent. It is primarily a system, just as Mr. Taylor has said again and again, to develop men. Only those men who are enlightened enough, who are big enough to see that they can not any more have injustice done or any more impose upon an operative than a union would. Now, where the system is misunderstood and there is a tendency to abuse it, the union ought to be sufficiently familiar with the system, and with how and when it is properly installed, to put a check to it; but it will only ball things up unless they really understand the system.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Miss Tarbell, to what extent do women share the burdens of men in industries, in your study—have you found out?

Miss TARBELL. Just what do you mean by "the burdens," Mrs. Harriman?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, I mean as to hours and poor wages and amount of work they have to do?

Miss TARBELL. The wages of women are ordinarily lower. There are, of course, reasons for that. They are not as stable a quantity in industry as men; and then there are fewer of them that are trained. Of course, the great body of women that go into factories go in without any knowledge at all, utterly untrained, and they have to learn their work and that militates against their wages. If we could have some kind of training—if we once could get all our operation, all our tasks, made worthy; a standard for every task—now, that is one thing I see in scientific management which makes it appeal to me. It says there is no such thing as a menial task; that you should study every task and set a standard for it. And it does not matter what a man or woman does, it ought to be worth doing and you ought to find out the worthy way of doing it.

There are poor girls thrown into these big factories and none of them knowing anything about their work and perhaps never have seen a machine. And they take them and put them at machines without any instruction except what a driven manager will give, or foreman. That is a great handicap. The woman is not worth much. Poor thing, how can she be? She has had no training. I believe people ought not to be allowed to go to work until they know the job. We ought to have some system of training for everything.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. And you think that is the reason for the lower wages women receive?

Miss TARBELL. I say that is one.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. One reason?

Miss TARBELL. Another reason is that they are not as stable a quantity. Another reason is that they are not eager to push themselves up in a particular trade; that is, the period of service is rather a short one with them; they marry. I think that all these things militates against their wages. Then, of course, a great many of the operations are low-grade operations, and they are very cheap operations.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Miss Tarbell, do you feel that suffrage would improve, or the reverse, the condition of women in industry?

Miss TARBELL. Well, I think that is very hard to say. I think sometimes it might improve it.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You think it might improve it?

Miss TARBELL. I think it might improve it sometimes; and—it would depend on the conditions. I do not like to see women in politics because, of course, our public life is merely partisan politics as it goes now, and I would rather see them doing less self-interested things.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, to what extent do the financial powers which control industry aid or hamper suffrage?

Miss TARBELL. Oh, I don't think they have anything to do with it.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. You do not—

Miss TARBELL. Oh, I don't think they would bother themselves about suffrage. Most of the men I know believe in suffrage. It is not the men that are keeping suffrage away from the women; it is the women.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Miss Tarbell, has women's suffrage, so far as you know, helped to secure and enforce laws minimizing vice or has it not?

Miss TARBELL. I don't know. I don't think that suffrage has had fair enough test on that point. Probably the best laws we have had in regard to women and children have been made in States where there is no woman suffrage.

Of course, some of the Western States have adopted a body of laws that are very good. They have gone around to different States and found the best laws and voted them. But no law is worth much which does not grow out of actual condition. You copy a law from Massachusetts over in Colorado or Utah, and that is not much good. What you want is a law born in Utah and a law born in Colorado. The conditions always differ in different places. I think the age of consent has been raised in all the suffrage States, which of course is a good thing; I think that wherever we have women suffrage we will get legislation against liquor. Whether you will get its enforcement, I don't know. That is up to the women and depends on how active they are and how intelligent and how much interested they are. You will get a vote against liquor—you will always get that where you have suffrage. I think, though, they did not get it in California.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. No; I believe not in California. Did you, Mr. Weinstock?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In a good many local districts; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon says he would like to ask you a question or two.

Commissioner LENNON. Miss Tarbell, in your work on the magazines, would you permit the application of the Taylor system to your work as to the time you should write a sentence in, as to the particular adjective you should use in a particular case if there were several having nearly the same meaning? Would you permit them to govern your time and your motions and where your ink should stand and how your pen should be held?

Miss TARBELL. Well, if they could show me a better way of holding my pen and a better way of placing my ink bottle why shouldn't I permit it? However, you must remember that the Taylor system, so far as it has been applied, applied to mechanical operations. It does not apply and has not been applied to writing. I think it might be a very good thing for most of us if we had something strenuous over us. We are a pretty sloppy people.

Commissioner LENNON. Is there any such thing in a machine shop, for instance, as a mechanical operation without mental activity?

Miss TARBELL. Oh, no; oh, no; and one of the good things about scientific management is that it is a great stimulus to mental activity—a great stimulus. That is, it teaches you the right way to do things. You have to learn it. You have to think whether you are doing it right or wrong all the time. Your mind must be on that. This old mechanical unthinking operation, rule-of-thumb operation, is very bad for the brain. It don't keep you lively enough; don't jack you up enough.

Commissioner LENNON. If there was an attempt by those who purchase the writing of people who write to introduce some system of so-called scientific management, would the writers insist upon cooperation in every detail as to its introduction?

Miss TARBELL. Well, of course, we have over us something that corresponds to that; we have the people that set our standards for literature; we have our critics; we have our editors who are always driving us to greater efficiency. There probably is no class of people that are harder driven for greater output than the journalist by those people over them that are always seeking to make their periodicals more efficient and more productive.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, those general principles apply to the mechanics, too, do they not?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; those principles are very much the principles—they are not nearly so—not worked out so well as for mechanical operation, but they are analogous. That is, I think the more nearly that I can apply the principles of scientific management in my own work the better workman I will be. The trouble with me is I am not an efficient enough person.

Commissioner LENNON. In those places, some of which you mentioned the name, does the bonus system, or the increased wage, that you speak of, apply to all workmen in the shop or industry or only to a small proportion of them?

Miss TARBELL. In some shops that I have been in I think that everybody had the increased wage. In certain other shops not. There are some operations that are very difficult to put under scientific management. You must remember that it is a science that is in its infancy. The workmen come slowly under it. That is, they are slowly educated. It is a system of education.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you found that the unions are opposed to real scientific management?

Miss TARBELL. Well, I can only judge from their expression. I have read all the testimony before this commission, and I certainly got the idea that they did not know very much about it, for one thing; and then another thing, that they were not taking any very active steps to find out. That makes me feel badly, because I believe in unions, and I think there are no people in the country with greater responsibility on their shoulders than the unions; and that they should pass lightly and without thorough investigation on anything in the world that promises to help the men and women under them seems to me very bad.

Commissioner LENNON. You are aware of the fact that the unions most vitally interested have been studying the matter carefully for years, since Mr. Taylor first introduced his system—continuously?

Miss TARBELL. I am very glad to know that, but I have seen no reports that would show it.

Commissioner LENNON. I just wanted to ask you one or two questions regarding the coke industry. Do you remember the time when in the coke fields of Pennsylvania women were to be seen firing the ovens practically stripped to their waists?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I have seen them doing that.

Commissioner LENNON. Was that under the administration of Mr. Lynch?

Miss TARBELL. I do not know. I never saw any great amount of it—

Commissioner LENNON. Well, I have seen hundreds.

MISS TARBELL. Yes? I never saw a great amount of it.

Commissioner LENNON. Has that entirely been removed?

MISS TARBELL. It is many years since I have seen a woman working around a coke oven. I do not know; I would not say. I think some of the conditions in those coke villages now—in those coke ovens—are as bad as they were. I must judge from the exterior, but it has been many years since I have seen a woman around a coke oven.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you ascribe the changes in such conditions as those that have taken place to the activity and initiative of the steel company or to the agitation of the common people throughout the United States?

MISS TARBELL. Well, I think advancement is always the result of enlightenment on the part of our people that affects everybody. Public opinion on these subjects is enlarging all around. We all of us see this thing much larger than we did 10 years ago. All of us are learning. The steel company has been learning very fast.

Commissioner LENNON. You think that is true?

MISS TARBELL. Yes; I think that is true. The steel company had learned a good deal when it stopped Sunday work. I think you will concede that it learned a big thing then.

Commissioner LENNON. But they have not stopped it.

MISS TARBELL. Well, then, I am misinformed. How much Sunday work do they have?

Commissioner LENNON. I could not say the percentage, but there are quite a number of their plants—

MISS TARBELL (interrupting). Well, I suppose there is always a certain amount of Sunday work in everything; anything that goes on. I know in my house the cook has to cook Sunday dinner. Now, the Sunday work I have seen in the Steel Corporation plants has been this—there are always watchmen. There must be watchmen in those plants. I think we would concede that. The furnace ovens have to be taken care of, and I think that in most of the open hearths there will be a shift come on toward night on Sunday because the furnaces can not be allowed to get cold without great loss. I really believe they are making an effort to stop Sunday work, and that they have cut off a great deal of it. I would not want to say that the Steel Corporation has the largest views of labor in the world, but I think they have done some mighty good things in the last year. They have been willing to say this: "We have been doing things that were not right and we have put our whole force to correcting what is wrong." Now, I say that is acting like a man. They have not stopped by any means. They are going on at this very time. Then, this safety work of theirs—that is the best that there has been in any country. If the union would take the code that they have laid down for their places and say, "We are going to insist upon this in all plants," they would do a great thing for themselves. Their sanitation work is a great work. They are enlarging all the time. They are learning. Let us give them a chance. We all have lots to learn about these things.

Commissioner LENNON. We admit that, but hasn't the workingman in an industry as much right to initiate reforms as the employer?

MISS TARBELL. Oh, yes.

Commissioner LENNON. And have the say as to whose ideas shall be tried out?

MISS TARBELL. He certainly ought to have.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, where has that been done by the steel company or any of the other great corporations?

MISS TARBELL. Well, take this safety work. I think if you will examine the records of the safety work that you will find a great many things suggested by the workers that are being tried.

Commissioner LENNON. By the individual workmen themselves?

MISS TARBELL. I know that to be true. Isn't that true?

Commissioner LENNON. By the individual workman, yes.

MISS TARBELL. By the individual workman.

Commissioner LENNON. But by cooperation of all the workmen in the plant or industry?

MISS TARBELL. Well, that whole safety work is cooperative work. There is no steel company that does not have a safety committee made up of the men, and they are cooperative in their tendency, which is always a good thing.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock would like to ask a few questions, please.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If, as you pointed out, Miss Tarbell, the eight-hour day is practicable and profitable in the Illinois steel mill, why could it not be made practicable and profitable generally?

Miss TARBELL. I think it could, myself. I am perfectly convinced of that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you know of no good reason why it ought not to be a common condition?

Miss TARBELL. The only reason why it is not a common condition is of course the matter of efficiency and of intelligence in installing it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, now, is there any corporation that you know of that has at its command higher brains—better brains and higher ability than this steel company, for example?

Miss TARBELL. No; I think not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. They have the best that money can employ anywhere?

Miss TARBELL. Yes. They ought to have anywhere, at least.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why should it not be possible for them to establish it if that has been established in smaller concerns?

Miss TARBELL. I believe it is possible for them to establish it. I believe they ought to do it. I know they are contemplating it. At least I think if you read their public statements—and that is what I depend upon—you will find that there is much talk of this. They feel, I suppose, that changes of that kind in corporations as big as theirs and as unwieldy with so many different influences, are slowly made. We can all understand that it is a pretty big undertaking in its operation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I remember reading recently a copy of the last annual report to the stockholders of the United States Steel Co., and as I now recall it there was a statement made therein to the effect that it was not possible to operate the mills on an eight-hour basis, and yet that is what you say you saw with your own eyes in Illinois is a fact, then it would indicate that the writer of that statement was in error.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that it is possible to establish an eight-hour shift.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In that industry?

Miss TARBELL. I believe it is possible from what I have seen.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. From the study that you have made of scientific shop management, you believe, Miss Tarbell, scientific shop management is compatible with collective bargaining?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the two can go hand in hand?

Miss TARBELL. I believe so. That is, you can in most shops; the basic wage in many of them of course, is the result of collective bargaining. They start there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Miss TARBELL. And I do not see why the bonus or the premium or the additional wage, whatever form it may take, should not be fixed collectively. I do not for myself just see how it can be done, but if that is the point at which labor sticks, then I think that is the point that ought to be considered. I do not see why it should not be worked out. I think there are a great many scientific experts that feel that it can be worked out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, scientific management—as you have just explained—is based upon the standard wage and a plus in the form of a bonus.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Therefore, collective bargaining is essential to establishing the standard wage—the basis?

Miss TARBELL. I think myself it is a good thing, collective bargaining for the basic wage, and collective bargaining is good for anything, that all of these things ought to be done collectively, cooperatively—everything.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And as I recall it, we have had scientific management experts on the witness stand who have given it as their opinion that where scientific management prevailed unions were needless. And I think we have had some even go so far as to say that they would not cooperate with organized labor in scientific management because they had found that organized labor was hostile to the introduction of scientific management and would hinder it wherever possible, and therefore they regarded organized labor as a disadvantage in shops where scientific management was introduced. Now, is there a sound basis for the position of these experts?

MISS TARBELL. Of course, I do not know the particular experience on which they are basing that statement. Of course, the installation of scientific management in shops is a very difficult problem. It is a long problem. There are a great many factors involved in it. A man has his hands pretty full, and as I understand it in going into a shop these engineers demand—they are superior to the employer. They will allow no interference with their method. They have what they believe to be a scientific formula to be installed where people have to be persuaded to do that; they have to be taught that. You have got to teach the man generally at the head. He does not know what it is about and generally he goes at it, he is making an experiment for the time he is fooling away, and it is a waste of money, and all of the managers must be converted and all of the workmen must be converted, everybody throughout the shop has to be converted, and they have to learn. It is like sitting down to learn a new science, to learn a new calculus. It takes a long time.

I think what they fear is they fear the interference of a man who don't know what it is all about. They think they have trouble enough, and they say they would have more trouble if they had the union. He feels that the union is going to object to scientific management because it has not taken in its representative, can't take him in. Why, then, I think it is the part of intelligence and wisdom on the part of scientific employees to take them in as far as he can and explain it to them as he does the manager, because he has got to convert everybody to it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you believe, Miss Tarbell, that workers should have a voice in fixing the bonus given for high efficiency?

MISS TARBELL. Yes; I think the worker should have a voice in everything that concerns him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You believe, then, in industrial democracy?

MISS TARBELL. I do, absolutely.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me repeat a statement made by Mr. Brandeis before the Industrial Commission in Washington some months ago in connection with scientific management, and let me ask, if I may, in how far you concur with his point of view. He made the statement that he thought organized labor was making a great error in fighting scientific management; that he believed it was organized labor's greatest opportunity to cooperate and to do and to aid in its installation because he believed it was in the interest ultimately of the worker, and that if organized labor continued hostile to scientific management it could lose its usefulness, because scientific management had come to be—come to stay and would be introduced regardless of the attitude of organized labor, and therefore it was wise, in his judgment, for organized labor to welcome it rather than to fight it.

Now, in how far do your observations and your investigations lead you to concur in that opinion of Mr. Brandeis?

MISS TARBELL. I concur absolutely in that. My interest in scientific management is because I believe when properly installed it makes for industrial democracy, and the one that it serves most is the workman. Of course, you can't blame labor leaders or workmen for being suspicious of what they don't understand, but no man has a right to allow his suspicions to interfere with that which may possibly serve those that he leads. We should try all things.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; they ought to have the open mind.

MISS TARBELL. They ought to have the open mind, and they ought to do a tremendous amount of good hard work on the subject. It is a hard thing to understand. I do not pretend to understand a science that it took 25 years to develop. And it has had some of the best brains in this country at work on it.

Now, it can not be dismissed this way, because we do not understand it. We must put our minds to it. I think Mr. Brandeis is perfectly right in saying that this thing will go on any way. Another reason for the thorough study of it by labor men is that, like all things it may be abused.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would that abuse not be kept in check, in restraint, if labor had a voice.

MISS TARBELL. That abuse always destroys the system, but it could be prevented if you had an intelligent voice.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Ballard would like to ask some questions.

Commissioner BALLARD. Just one question regarding scientific management. Does this scientific management encourage the eight-hour day?

MISS TARBELL. Well, wherever I have found a shop under scientific management the hours have been greatly reduced. The hours in this Pilgrim Laundry to which I referred to have been reduced to 46½ a week. Scientific management means that you have got to keep a body of people in good condition; their minds active and fingers nimble, feeling like work, and you can not do that if you have got too long hours.

Commissioner BALLARD. You spoke awhile ago of the increase in the cost of living being more rapid than the increase in wages. By that do you mean the increase in the cost of so-called necessities of life, food and the cheaper grades of clothing, or do you mean in the increased demand on the part of the world that everybody almost in this country has for some articles which some years ago were called luxuries and are not called necessities. Is that where the cost of living comes in?

Miss TARBELL. Of course, that comes in. But if you take what we call necessities—bread, meat, rents, common clothing—the statistics of the Bureau of Labor show that the cost of living in the last 20 or 25 years has kept a little ahead of the rise in wage. I think that nearly always happens. It has happened, I think, quite markedly in the last 20 years.

Commissioner BALLARD. While I am not prepared to argue the question of the high cost of living—you spoke first of flour and that the flour up to last July was cheaper than it had been, except once or twice in the last 20 years.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner BALLARD. And for corn meal and other articles of food?

Miss TARBELL. Did they get it in the loaf of bread that we buy?

Commissioner BALLARD. If it became so much of a luxury that they did not make their own bread and bought fancy cakes, that is getting back to the form of luxury, that is the very point I want to ask if you have studied.

Miss TARBELL. Well, I believe, Mr. Ballard, that a great many things that 20 years ago were called luxuries rightly have become necessities. I believe the workman ought to have as necessities more of the things that once were luxuries. All of the good things of this world ought to be more evenly divided, and that the means by which they get them ought to keep pace with that increased demand. I think that is the right thing.

Commissioner BALLARD. The reason why we should not all enjoy some of the so-called luxuries?

Miss TARBELL. Certainly. Everybody ought to enjoy all the reasonable luxuries.

Commissioner BALLARD. Just one more question. Have you made a study at all where any factory or any plant has gone from the 12 to the 10 hour day, and from the 10 to the 8 hour system, as to what the workmen do with that added four or five hours of leisure?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner BALLARD. Has it had a tendency with the shorter hours to reduce the amount of drinking and reduce the amount of gambling, so called?

Miss TARBELL. I suppose we could all of us pick up a man who, when he had only eight hours to work, spent that two extra hours in a saloon. But the shorter hours reduce the amount of liquor consumed by the working people. The liquor is often taken by people who are overworked to whip up their jaded energy. That is what makes—it is the 12-hour day that makes the drinking—because if you work 12 hours a day you are worked out, and you have got to get something to whip you up, and probably liquor is the thing to do it. I believe shorter hours makes for sobriety. I believe it makes for health. In most places where I have seen the eight-hour day in operation sports were increasing enormously. That is one thing that has increased in the Steel Corporation enormously. With the putting in of the eight-hour day—nearly three-fourths of the men are on the eight-hour day—you will find in all the steel plants big ball games, people, the men, all playing ball. You will find that the libraries on the shorter day are better patronized. That is a matter of statistics. I can give you statistics from Vandergrift and Homestead on that point. I do not have them here. I was out in Wisconsin a year ago and one result of the shorter-hour day out there was the number of men in night school. The men go to night school. They were using their time to improve themselves.

And Mr. James Duncan, the head of the granite-cutters' association, who was before this commission, states that with the shortening of the hours of the granite cutters the number of men who went to night school and that went in for sports was pronouncedly increased. The men are decent, and the shortening of the hours naturally makes them want to do that.

Commissioner BALLARD. Perhaps you might give us those figures some time, in a tabulated form, so that we may have them in our files.

Miss TARBELL. I will be very glad to do that.

(The following communication was subsequently received from Miss Tarbell:)

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE,
New York, April 23, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. BROWN: Will you pardon my delay in replying to your letter of some time back? I have been much occupied. You ask me for figures in a tabulated form of the increase in the number of granite cutters attending night school since they have had an eight-hour day. I have no tabulated figures; the information comes to me from Mr. James Duncan, the president of the Granite Cutters' Union. You will find this statement from Mr. Duncan in an article in the American Magazine for April in an article of mine on "Hours":

"The granite cutters seek new entertainment; they are in evidence in drawing and modeling schools in the evenings of the winter season and conspicuous in athletics in summer. Some of our members have developed into great baseball stars in major leagues. Boating, swimming, long rural walks, bicycle riding, and occasionally a week of vacation are in evidence. Homes are happier, and our members and those dependent upon them and associated with them are better fed and better clad than at any time in our trade history."

I think I also mentioned the increase in the use of books in the Homestead library in the last few years. There are no tabulated statistics; but the increase has been since Sunday hours were stopped and conditions improved. At Vandergrift, Pa., there is a steady increase in the number of books read by the men, noted by the librarian, who has been there for a number of years.

They have been steadily adding technical books to the library. There is an increased use of these among the mill workers. The librarian also tells me that the quality of the fiction read by the mill men is much higher. I think that you will find that wherever the management takes pains to encourage night schools there is a good response. At Beloit, Wis., there is a night school where the foreigners are particularly keen to learn English. Wherever I have been where there were libraries in factories or where there were night schools and classes I have found the mill and factory workers using them freely. I am sorry that these statements are so general, but I have not had an opportunity to put in tabulated form the information I have gathered.

I find I have a copy of a section of the report of the commission belonging to you—No. 6; I am returning it to-day by express.

Sincerely, yours,

IDA M. TARBELL.

Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,
703 World Building, New York City.

Commissioner BALLARD. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Garretson would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Going back, Miss Tarbell, to a question that was asked you by another commissioner a moment ago, in which you aligned yourself with Mr. Brandeis's opinion, is your opinion on the relation of the labor unions, or a great many of them, to efficiency as wide as Mr. Brandeis's or as complete?

Miss TARBELL. I do not know how broad that is. I do not pretend to be an authority. I only know what I have seen.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr. Brandeis makes his remarks, I believe, through his record of efficiency in connection with the operation of railroads.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And when Mr. Brandeis appeared before this commission he was not even aware of the fact that all the train and engine service organizations, labor unions, have been on time and bonus systems for 30 years. Were you aware of that fact?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Then, is your conclusion still the same—that the unions work against it?

Miss TARBELL. Well—

Commissioner GARRETSON. It was devised by them, wasn't it, by the unions themselves?

MISS TARBELL. Oh, but the time and bonus are only one element in scientific management.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Does not Mr. Emerson claim that he founded his whole system on the system that is in effect in train and engine movement?

MISS TARBELL. I do not know what Mr.—

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON (interrupting). Harrison Emerson's declaration.

MISS TARBELL. I know very little of Mr. Emerson's work.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Is not Emerson one of the leading efficiency engineers of the country?

MISS TARBELL. I believe he is called so. I have never been in an Emerson shop, but the bonus is only one element in scientific management; it includes the standardization of tasks—teaching the tasks.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Isn't it associated with every one of those systems in one form or another?

MISS TARBELL. The task and bonus?

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Either bonus, time bonus or cash bonus.

MISS TARBELL. Oh, yes. There is some form of giving of an increased wage for increased efficiency.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. What has been the experience of workmen, not necessarily union men at all, with bonus systems, covering four or five years back?

MISS TARBELL. It has been pretty bad, Mr. Garretson.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Hasn't it been invariably used as a means of increasing the output, under ostensibly increasing earnings, and then being used to lower wage? I use earnings and wage in a directly opposite sense.

MISS TARBELL. Not invariably; no, sir.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Has there been any variation from it, except with the occasionally humane employer?

MISS TARBELL. Well, of course, the man that is inhuman is inhuman with his employees. The human man is fair.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. And I am drawing that exception, that there is the occasional humane employer who does not do it, but the general class, it has, at least, that way they did not.

MISS TARBELL. I think there has been an immense amount of cutting of rates.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Isn't it a fact that the opposition lies with the laboring man and not necessarily with the union man only?

MISS TARBELL. I think there is a great suspicion of that, Mr. Garretson; that is exactly what labor ought to see, that this is a different kind of thing.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. When labor draws on its experience is it not, in a certain degree, justified in desiring to be shown?

MISS TARBELL. It certainly should desire to be shown. What I am complaining of is they are not working hard enough to be shown.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. You spoke of the betterment of conditions in certain places which you had investigated in the coke and coal industries where they had been giving the—the company had furnished the men with decent homes and with desirable gardens. Should not the wage, as an equitable proposition, be high enough to allow every man to furnish those things for himself?

MISS TARBELL. The wage down there, Mr. Garretson, was good. It was the union scale. You must remember that these particular people were almost invariably foreigners, few of them spoke English; they were in an industry where the houses had to be built by the company or there would have been no place for them to live. That may be a deplorable thing, but there are such situations. The houses had to be built for them, and a piece of ground was added. I think myself everybody ought to have a piece of ground to play with.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Would they not want to let the men acquire title to the ground, or is it—

MISS TARBELL. I do not think anybody—I do not think any sane workman would want to acquire a piece of ground for a home over a coal mine which may be exhausted at any time.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. Is not a very large proportion of the property in Pennsylvania, for instance, owned by the average citizen over a coal mine?

MISS TARBELL. There is a great deal of it.

COMMISSIONER GARRETSON. There is the tendency on the part of men to acquire land even over coal mines if the opportunity is there.

MISS TARBELL. Unquestionably.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Should not safety legislation, to which you gave some prominence, go hand in hand with the wage that makes life worth living or furnish an incentive to safety?

Miss TARBELL. Unquestionably.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you ever heard of safety coming into any prominence until after the enactment of laws that make it a good investment—liability laws and compensation laws? Did it ever gain any prominence until then?

Miss TARBELL. I know one concern; 25 years ago safety experts were put on the plant and a compensation policy enacted in that particular shop which is much more liberal than the compensation provided by the safety laws which have recently been enacted in that particular State.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There comes again the humane exception. Do you know of any other case?

Miss TARBELL. Yes; I do. I know of one big shop in New England where for years the most advanced safety appliances have been constantly worked out, and where they have been applied, and where it has been a continuous study to improve the safety.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is true. How many manufacturing plants are there on the continent?

Miss TARBELL. Well, I don't know.

Commissioner GARRETSON. If there are 600,000, for instance, and there were, say, 10 instances where this had been done, would it prove anything except that there was the occasional exception to a rule? Did you or anybody ever hear publicity given to the slogan "Safety first" until following the enactment of the laws of the kind I have named?

Miss TARBELL. The safety slogan in the steel company in Pennsylvania, for instance, was used 15 years ago, and that was at a time when there was practically no safety laws on the books.

Commissioner GARRETSON. No safety laws back of 15 years?

Miss TARBELL. Not to amount to anything. Of course, we have had safety laws, and we have had safety experience, but not highly developed.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Where did the initiative come for the enactment of the present code, even as weak as it is, of social legislation?

Miss TARBELL. Where did it come from?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Where did the power to enact it and the influence come from? Where did it have its initiative?

Miss TARBELL. Well, I think it has come from all along the line.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Where has the general opposition to such legislation lain?

Miss TARBELL. The improvement in the world has come largely from the men at the bottom pushing up—always comes from that.

Commissioner GARRETSON. How do you reconcile your conclusions that the union has its place and its mission in connection with efficiency, in the face of the declaration of not only the high priests of efficiency and movement, but of the men, the most prominent men who are handling the plants where it has been put in? I am talking of a particular declaration before this commission only.

Miss TARBELL. I am not trying to reconcile my notions with it. These are simply my notions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, then, in the face of their declarations and attitude, your conclusions would be absolutely inoperative that they should go hand in hand?

Miss TARBELL. I think you have had two safety experts before this commission.

Commissioner GARRETSON. One or two.

Miss TARBELL. Who have said that they believed that labor should be recognized, organized labor.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes; two of them.

Miss TARBELL. I think if you will examine—

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). To what extent? What were the qualifications that accompanied that declaration of it.

Miss TARBELL. I think they would have to qualify them in the same way that I qualify them, by saying that they did not know how it was going to be done. I do not think they know how it is going to be done, but there are lots of things we think must be done that we do not know how to do.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You described the attempt of the scientific expert when he came into a place—you stated you believed in industrial democracy.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is not the efficiency expert nothing but a form of individual despotism, as you describe them?

Miss TARBELL. No; I would not say so.

Commissioner GARRETSON. He is absolute.

Miss TARBELL. Well, my dear Mr. Garretson, then we may say the teacher is an absolute despotism in the school. We may say anybody that is teaching a thing, trying to install a thing, is an absolute despotism.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The efficiency system would restore to the employer the absolutism that he possessed until the banding together of his employees had taken a part of that absolutism away from him, would it not?

Miss TARBELL. Oh, I do not think so, Mr. Garretson. If I believed that for one moment I would not be saying what I am, not for a moment.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will take a recess until 2 o'clock. Will you kindly return at that time, Miss Tarbell?

(At 12.30 o'clock p. m. of this Tuesday, January 19, 1915, a recess was taken until 2 o'clock in afternoon of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. The house will be in perfect order, please.

Miss Tarbell, prior to luncheon I was asked to call your attention to a statement in a report of the committee of stockholders of the United States Steel Corporation of 1912 upon the question of the 12-hour day, which reads as follows:

"To ascertain the number of employees of the Steel Corporation working on a 12-hour schedule, exclusive of officials, managers, and clerical force, we have examined the records of 175,715 men. Of this number we found 42,208, or 25½ per cent are at present working 12 hours a day." Dated April 15, 1912.

And also a statement as to wages, hours, and other conditions of labor among the employees of the United States Steel Corporation and subsidiary companies, and dated February 20, 1914, which reads as follows:

"Leaving out of consideration employees engaged on railroad trains, ships, and general administrative work, only 22.5 per cent of our employees work 12 hours a day, and we are making efforts to further improve conditions."

I was asked to call your attention to those figures. Commissioner O'Connell has a few questions to submit to you.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Miss Tarbell, do I understand you speak on the efficiency question as one having had personal experience with it or as an expert in the matter of putting it into effect?

Miss TARBELL. Oh, no; not as an expert.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you had any personal practical experience in the matter of its management or putting it into operation?

Miss TARBELL. I have not; I distinctly said I am an observer, a journalist.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Either from the employers' or the workmen's standpoint?

Miss TARBELL. This has been my experience: I have visited several plants in which the system was being put in operation and also several plants in which the system had been installed for a considerable period. I have gone through the shops carefully and have talked with a good many of the workmen under the system, and I have observed the general conditions, looked into the hours and the wages and the general atmosphere of the shop; informed myself, not as well as I might, perhaps, but as well as my time permitted. I have also read a good many books and talked with various experts.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you known of instances where scientific management has been put into operation and then discontinued?

Miss TARBELL. I have never examined a plant where it has been discontinued. I have known of plants where it has been discontinued; I have known of several. I know that in some it was discontinued because the system had been abused; I know of others where it was discontinued because there was not the full cooperation of management it requires. I have known of others where it had been installed by so-called experts who were charlatans and did not know the business.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you observed the effect that the introduction of the so-called scientific management, or other things akin to it, have had upon the management as to the workers, either favorable or otherwise?

Miss TARBELL. I have never known of its breaking up the organization in any shape. I do not see why it should.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I believe you said in the beginning that the effect of the introduction of a true system of scientific management, or words to that effect, that it would have the effect of increasing wages and reducing the hours of labor?

Miss TARBELL. I think that has been the effect.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Can you point to any institution where that effect has occurred?

Miss TARBELL. Oh, yes; in this town there is a laundry that is under scientific management. It has been installed very carefully and over a long period of years. I suppose you know something about what laundry hours are. The hours have been reduced to 46½ and they are regular; that is, there is no night work. That has been done by the application of efficiency principles and nothing else.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No application to State laws?

Miss TARBELL. They are much below the State laws, which are 54 in this State and 46½ in this laundry. They have been gradually reducing hours for a number of years under scientific management.

In the cloth craft in Cleveland they have reduced their hours to something like—I was going to say 43½, but I think that is too low—it is nearer 45, but it is much below the legal number of hours.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, going into the manufacturing where scientific application has tried to have been employed, the machine shop is a common place for all scientific experts, as a prey, you probably know—

Miss TARBELL. I should not use the word "prey"—pardon me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I have spent the greater portion of my life in machine shops, that being my trade, and I know something when I say "prey." For instance, the steel company—Mr. Taylor.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was originally employed in the introduction of the so-called Taylor system, in the Bethlehem Steel Works, and if you know anything of the Bethlehem Steel Works, you know the hours have not been reduced.

Miss TARBELL. I have never been at the Bethlehem Steel Works.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The Midvale Steel Co., of Philadelphia, if you have read his books you will note his application to the Midvale Steel Co.?

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And outside of a portion of the work performed in that institution under Government contract, which requires eight hours by law, I think you will find there has been no reduction of hours. The Link Belt Co., which you referred to, their plant at Philadelphia is operated under the usual basis, and their plant in Chicago, which is a larger plant, is operated on a different basis, and both of these managers of these plants are the same, but I think you will find in both cases the hours have not been reduced.

Miss TARBELL. The hours in the Link Belt Co. are the legal hours of the State. I spent a day in the shops not so very long ago talking to any man that I wanted to. In the middle of the afternoon I talked to one elderly man and apologized for taking his time—I knew that he was working on piecework—and he said, "My day's work is finished. It was finished a half an hour ago. What I do now—this was at 3 o'clock in the afternoon—what I do now is pure velvet, and if I want to talk, I feel I have a right to talk, because I have finished my day's work."

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The scientific management is not in effect there?

Miss TARBELL. Oh, yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. With the man's time being wasted in that manner?

Miss TARBELL. In the Link Belt Co. the man had finished what he called his task. He was at liberty to do whatever he wished. In the Taylor Co.—I am speaking for the Taylor Co.—I know it to be true there, the men finish what is called their task. Of course, you understand the term—that they rarely occupy in that task their full eight hours—no; it is a nine-hour day—yes; it is a nine-hour day.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Fifty-four-hour week?

Miss TARBELL. Fifty-four-hour week. Yes. They rarely occupy their full time. The day that I was in the Link Belt Co., but I should say I saw a half a dozen men leave about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. They had earned their bonus.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Under that system how would you provide, Miss Tarbell, for the man who is aging, whose sight is failing, whose activities are falling, to keep up the pace after the task is once set?

Miss TARBELL. Well, I think that man should always have special consideration.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is there any provision under the present method of scientific management of taking care of that man?

Miss TARBELL. There is the provision any intelligent man would make, any man who is intelligent enough to honestly install scientific management will be a man of sufficient intelligence to take care of such cases as you mention. I feel quite convinced about that—under the absolute unqualified installation of the system—the weak and the old and the incompetent go out.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And would you hold that the introduction of scientific management, as you see it, would minimize industrial unrest?

Miss TARBELL. I think anything that gives men more hope, anything that makes them feel that a way has been opened for them to advance, anything that gives them a fairer wage, more fitted to their abilities, which gives them more reasonable hours and better conditions, ought to take away industrial unrest. If I understand industrial unrest, it comes from the fact that men are not being treated with justice; that they feel that they have no hope; that they feel the conditions under which they live are cruel, and that keeps them down. Anything that opens life to men, as I believe scientific management does open, ought to decrease industrial unrest.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As a woman of great experience, of travel and opportunity, of seeing industrial life—this commission is created to ascertain what are the underlying causes of industrial unrest, and I am sure the commission would appreciate an expression from you as what you consider the causes of industrial unrest, real downright cause, something that we might recommend to Congress, as the reason for this industrial unrest.

Miss TARBELL. I think it arises from the desire of men to better themselves. I believe that it is inherent in every normal intelligent man to want to better himself. He finds himself frequently in an industrial impasse; he can not better himself. He is tied down by the conditions of his labor and the obligations that he has upon him. Now, whenever a man feels that there is nothing open for him, that there is nothing but one eternal hopeless grind, and out of that grind he is not getting what he wants to develop himself, to educate his family, to give his wife the comforts of life—that he is not getting life—you are going to have unrest, I think our ideas of what makes life worth while are all the time expanding. They are expanding because of the diffusion of education, the freer circulation of men and women in this great country, this fact that every idea that is afloat is put before everybody—I think our industrial unrest comes from feeling that we have a right to more life than we are getting. Industrial unrest is a wonderful expression of the desire of men for more life. Men are going to get it, and they have a right to get it. They have a right to struggle to get it, and in that struggle they should have the help of the best brains. There is nothing which is right or just or sound which should not be brought to their help. Nothing which is right and just and sound should be kept away from them. All those things will prevail, and those are the things that the great rank and file of men have a right to have brought to them. That is what leaders should bring them—the best that there is.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. From your observation what influence or concern or form of organization or association in our time has done the greatest work in the matter of uplift, bringing those opportunities to live you speak of, what influence has been at work?

Miss TARBELL. There have been many influences at work. Probably our great educational system is chief. It is probably the basic cause of unrest. If you do not want people to be restless, do not let them know anything. The more they know the more restless and ambitious they are going to be.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Their industrial life—as to their industrial life?

Miss TARBELL. Education, the workman knows, wins. He is determined to help himself by anything that he can get hold of. He will help himself by unionism, and he has helped himself enormously by unionism. What he wants and what he needs is a bigger union that has more knowledge in it, a union that has more breadth of mind—a union that is as big as the world, as big as life. That is what he ought to have.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You think he ought to have a greater opportunity, a fairer opportunity to deal with his employer as to the conditions under which he should be employed, sell his labor?

Miss TARBELL. I think the workingman ought to have the fullest opportunity to deal with his employer; an employer who refuses to deal with the individual workman or who refuses to deal with any body of workmen makes a terrible mistake.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think the individual worker, even though he may get an opportunity of presenting his grievance, that he has a fair chance single handed to take care of his grievance with the large employers to-day as they are?

Miss TARBELL. Individually?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes.

Miss TARBELL. Well, I think that will depend a good deal upon the individual, how intelligent he is. I think in some cases the individual has a very fair chance; in others he has not a fair chance. Of course, things in different corporations, in different companies, differ, the practice differs greatly. I think it is a great mistake not to hear everybody, and a great mistake not to listen, whether they come to us as individuals or whether they come to us as a union.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How would it be possible for the individual workman, the man, woman, or child as case might be, to bring about the reduction of his or her hours of labor, individually?

Miss TARBELL. Well, it would depend upon how strong a plea he could make. I think it sometimes is done. There are individuals—perhaps the old man of whom you spoke, the man that is not well equipped, might get some concession. I know in this town of a department store in which—of course, the labor in the department store is not organized at all—one very good shop in the town in which it has been the practice to hear different cases and to adjust the wage and adjust the hours frequently. I do not think that is a good practice, because, of course, there should be just as great a uniformity of wage for the same work and uniformity of hours, if possible.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you given thought to the question of remedial legislation as to why these—at least, what appear to the workmen of the persistent opposition on the part of employers against the putting into law of remedial legislation for labor.

Miss TARBELL. The opposition of employers to remedial legislation has always seemed to me to be due to unintelligence and stupidity and greed. Of course, I am granting that it is good legislation. A great deal of the remedial legislation we have offered has not been carefully enough thought of. We have a good deal of legislation that is presented by people who don't know anything about industry.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am speaking of such as child labor—child labor and laws to protect women and laws to protect children, and compensation.

Miss TARBELL. Of course.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Reduction of hours—those laws that are really beneficial.

Miss TARBELL. The opposition of that kind is wrong. It is due to unintelligence.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As, for instance, in the great State of Pennsylvania, where all these large, immense industrial plants are, with all its wealth of coal in the earth; yet there has not been upon the statute books of Pennsylvania a compensation law in that State.

Miss TARBELL. Of course, that is all wrong.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is an opposition there?

Miss TARBELL. Certainly there is an opposition. There is opposition—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Two-thirds, or, at least, more than half of our States have agreed that compensation laws are a good thing and have put them on the statute books, and yet the great industrial State of Pennsylvania has not. What is the opposition there?

Miss TARBELL. I think it is stand-pat, high-tariff minds; that is what I think it is. There is a bad case of that in Pennsylvania.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. I have been asked to ask you one other question which has been submitted. Do you believe that the cause of the trade-unions failing to recognize the principles of scientific management is due to the fact that they fear a steady increase in the output of manufacture, thereby causing the dismissal of many of their members, and that scientific management might be the entering wedge for dissolution of their organizations and eventually bringing about intense competition and a reduction in wages?

MISS TARBELL. Take the first part of that question.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; it is rather long.

MISS TARBELL. There is a fear of increase in production? I think that that is one cause. I think the fear of abundant production is very great. We have been brought to that kind of an economic policy. We have been trained to believe that we must always produce a little less than the world will take in order to keep prices high. That has been the policy of our great trusts, and they wanted to underproduce a little, in order that they might keep the price high. When they saw the market being flooded and prices going down, they would shut off production if they could—shut down—in order to keep prices high.

I was in a western State in October, and there was a tremendous apple crop through Missouri and Illinois last year. In one of the great cities of one of those States, 1,000 barrels of apples, so I was told by a commission merchant—and he is a perfectly honest man—he said, "A terrible thing has just happened in this town, 1,000 barrels of apples—hundreds of barrels of apples—have been thrown into the Mississippi River in order to keep up the price of apples." Now, this keeping down of the production in order to keep prices up is supposed to make prosperity.

I think it is perfectly natural that the workingmen, living under that influence, believe that they must always keep their product down a little if they are going to keep their wages up. That is like all the rest of us, we have been laboring under what I believe myself to be an utterly false idea, that you could not have too much—that too much was to pull us all down—was going to destroy us. I believe myself that there is nothing that makes work so much as work. That the more you do the more you have to do; that you must produce just as abundantly as nature will let you produce in order that all the world may have all it wants.

In our own country we are not giving all our people all they need, let alone all they might legitimately want. There are millions of people the world over that we might be feeding if it was not for this fear of abundance on our part. I think it is one of the most pernicious things. It catches us all. We get scared, a little more scared, and we want to stop working. Everybody wants to stop manufacturing. No, I think the workman must revise his political economy, really. I think it is up to him to see that it is for the good of his own people that he wants to have everything abundantly and that we can not produce too much.

Commissioner LENNON. Would you be so kind as to give me the names of any trade-unionists that are known to their next-door neighbor and not known any farther.

MISS TARBELL. Known to their neighbors? I do not quite understand.

Commissioner LENNON. I mean any trade-unionist that has had membership in the union, not men that are known all over the United States, that hold to the theory that you speak of that they are afraid of scientific management because of increased production—any one of them?

MISS TARBELL. No; I can not give you the names of any one.

Commissioner LENNON. I would like to meet them and show them the error of their ways.

MISS TARBELL. My impression has been obtained from reading the testimony before this commission, before Congress, and testimony that was taken out in Wisconsin. That has been the impression that I have got.

Commissioner LENNON. I want to show you that you are mistaken.

MISS TARBELL. That is perfectly logical—

Commissioner LENNON. You are entirely mistaken.

MISS TARBELL. Very well; I am delighted to know it.

Commissioner LENNON. We hold to the very opposite theory, that increased production betters conditions.

MISS TARBELL. Well, that is what I believe to be sound.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson would like to ask a question.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Assuming for the moment that the workman did do what you are recommending, revise the political economy, or his theory thereof?

MISS TARBELL. I am just informed that I was not correct in my idea.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Assuming for the moment that it is, and that he revises it.

Miss TARBELL. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That he increases the production, and that he adds to production, if the employer did not revise his, and when the amount that had formerly been produced was produced, the experiment of throwing apples in the river would be repeated, and the employer stop production, what good would the revising of the workman's politics be?

Miss TARBELL. Would not do any good at all. We have all got to work together.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you.

Miss TARBELL. There is one thing. This paper was handed to me by a gentleman—

Chairman WALSH. One minute. If there is any statement you would like to make, voluntarily by way of explanation or amplification or any suggestion you desire to make that has not been brought out by the questions, we would be pleased to have you do so.

Miss TARBELL. I do not know. But there is this statement which was handed me by a gentleman in reply to a statement made this morning that there were not a very large percentage of manufacturers in this country or in the country where the workmen were interested in the improvements, that there were not any great numbers where these new orders were at work, and that the workmen themselves were taking—here is the statement that was handed me with regard to the workmen's compensation law. I have not read this over. It says:

"For the purpose of bettering industrial conditions an analytical rating board was organized, consisting of representatives from mutual liability companies, stock insurance companies, and the State insurance boards fund."

Now, this statement claims that inspections have been made in 15,000 manufacturing plants in the State of New York; 15,000 have been inspected. And in this inspection the workmen have all been interested. It has been what we might call joint work.

Chairman WALSH. That is all; thank you. You may be excused.

Mr. Basil M. Manly.

TESTIMONY OF MR. BASIL M. MANLY.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you stated you desired to analyze a statement as to the number of employees in the United States Steel Corporation that were working 12 hours per day in 1910, down to the present time.

Mr. MANLY. Yes; I would like to make that situation clear. The discrepancy is due to the fact that the statement which was last read, that approximately 25 per cent of the employees of the Steel Corporation are working only 12 hours a day is due to the fact that that includes all employees, men in the iron mines, in the wire mills, and men in the coal mines, and all other outlying properties, of which the Steel Corporation has a tremendous number. The statement that 50 per cent of the employees were actually in the steel-producing department of the corporation, which work 12 hours a day, is the result of very careful analysis that was made in the Bureau of Labor in 1910. That statement I know is correct.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What percentage, Mr. Manly, approximately?

Mr. MANLY. Fifty per cent, approximately.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Approximately 50 per cent?

Mr. MANLY. Approximately 50 per cent in the blast furnaces, the steel works, the men working in the open hearth and Bessemer steel plants, and the rolling mills. That is where the steel is actually produced. The rest of the plants operate works where the steel is fabricated. The wire works and the different works. In other words, that is simply factory operation. But in the actual steel-producing plant, where steel is produced in working the raw material, 50 per cent of the employees work 12 hours a day—worked 12 hours a day in 1910. I have not gone over the figures for the Steel Corporation since that time.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How many days a week do they work, Mr. Manly?

Mr. MANLY. In the Steel Corporation practically every employee in the Steel Corporation now is limited to six days per week under shifts of employees. That was true in 1912. I presume it is still true. I have not examined it since. Now the figures are not considerably changed. I wish to quote from the annual report of the Steel Corporation for 1912, December 31, as follows (p. 28):

"So far, however, as it has been possible to reduce the so-called 12-hour term it has been done, although no considerable reduction has been made in the number of employees working 12 hours a day."

In other words, no change has been made up to December 31, 1912.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders, held April 20, 1914, Judge Gary, speaking for the corporation, said:

"In considering the questions relating to the 12 hours per day we have reduced the number of hours so far as practicable."

This is in April, 1914, and does not seem to constitute any expression beyond the previous statement in which it had been said that they had been reduced as far as possible in 1912, and he simply says in 1914 they had been reduced as far as practicable, which is a much weaker statement and does not imply any existed.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In that 6-hour day you say—I mean 6 days a week—is the work continuously 7 days?

Mr. MANLY. The work in the places authorized is continuous 7 days a week for practically the entire plant.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that gives them work 7 days a week?

Mr. MANLY. No; the individual man does not work 7 days a week. The individual man works 6 days a week. The seventh day is taken care of by what is known as a number of relief men. In other words, I get Monday off this week. My place is taken by a man who works Mondays and gets a day off some other time during the week. They shift the men around. Next week I will get Tuesday off and my place will be taken by an entirely different man. In other words, they have one-seventh more employees than they actually need on any given day, and those men are shifted around to take the places of the men who are absent.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Broken shifts instead of regular shifts?

Mr. MANLY. Yes, sir. That is, no man gets Sunday off all the time. That is, in the case of any seven men, one man will take the place of another man on a given day, and he will take the place of the next man the next day in the week, and so on around. It is virtually all unskilled labor around a blast furnace and very quickly learned, and that arrangement is therefore entirely feasible.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did your investigation lead you to learn the wages earned by these employees?

Mr. MANLY. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What did you learn as to that?

Mr. MANLY. I can give it to you, but it would take some time.

Chairman WALSH. That is all at this time, Mr. Manly. We will take the other matters up later.

Please take the stand, Mr. Lewis.

TESTIMONY OF HON. DAVID J. LEWIS.

Chairman WALSH. Your name, please.

Congressman LEWIS. David J. Lewis.

Chairman WALSH. You are at the present time a Member of the House of Representatives?

Congressman LEWIS. Yes, sir; from Maryland.

Chairman WALSH. And you are chairman of the House Committee on Labor, I believe?

Congressman LEWIS. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been a member of the Congress of the United States?

Congressman LEWIS. I am just elected to my third term.

Chairman WALSH. Prior to that time what had been your business?

Congressman LEWIS. Well, I had practiced law about 20 years and worked in the coal mines about 14 years.

Chairman WALSH. Whereabouts in mining?

Congressman LEWIS. In Pennsylvania and Maryland, in the anthracite and bituminous fields of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and also somewhat in clay mining in Maryland.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made a particular study of the telephone and telegraph industries in the United States with reference generally to the application of labor problems to it, etc.?

Congressman LEWIS. I have made a general study of the telephone and telegraph functions in this country in all its relations, more especially with reference to the rate and the effect of postalizing the instrumentalities.

Chairman WALSH. I wish, Mr. Lewis, that if you are prepared to do so you would give us the result of your study on that subject.

Congressman LEWIS. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, before entering into a discussion of the telephone subject, I have thought that perhaps it was a duty to give the commission some conclusions I have reached with regard to the coal mining sociology, if I may take a few minutes for that purpose.

Chairman WALSH. I will be very glad to have you do so.

Congressman LEWIS. I will do so.

Chairman WALSH. I had intended, Mr. Lewis, to also ask you some questions after you get through with the topic of telephones on the general industrial subject, but take it up in your own way now.

Congressman LEWIS. I have come rather reluctantly to the conclusion that the whole theory of private property as applied to coal mining under certain conditions in the United States has broken down. I mean by that the theory as it is applied, say, to a man's garden and to his home. He has a fee simple title to those, and if he falls out with the most respected member of the community he can lock the gate and lock the door and exclude him from the premises, and all the harm that is done is the loss of the pleasure of the companionship that comes to both. But when you come to apply the same idea of absolute ownership to coal-mining properties the consequences of the disturbances of relations are very different indeed without respect to who may be blamable for the disturbance.

A friend of mine discovered that out in West Virginia in the woods are 10,000 acres of coal. It is our opportunity to serve society and serve ourselves to exploit that coal land. In order to do so we have got to have miners and take them out, but we can not take their homes with them, and so we have to build them homes. We first sustain the relation of employer and employee toward them, a very potent and important relation, as both parties know. But when we have to build their houses we also sustain the relation of landlord and tenant to them. In the meanwhile, of course, it is a new venture in a new community, and they can not carry their own commissary with them, so the employer starts a commissary or a company store. There is the third relation of great importance to the parties, especially the employees, the commissary relations. The relations have frequently become even more numerous, extending to the doctor, and I believe in some recent instances to the saloon facilities.

Now, we are living in the United States. The members of that community are citizens of the United States. They sustain a relation to it different from that of 50 or 100 years ago, or from that of other countries. When the employee in that instance has trouble with the employer, whether it be the employer's mistake or his own mistake, or whether it arises from that fruitful field, a failure to understand one another and ignorance of governing facts, the result to the employee is drastic indeed, because all his relations to life, except perhaps his wife and children and the duty of their support, are broken down. He loses his employment, that relation is broken; he loses his landlord, that relation is broken; he loses his commissary supply at the store, and the relation of the commissary is broken; and it is inevitable as long as human beings preserve the instinct of the animal for self-preservation that when the employer under those circumstances, whether rightfully or wrongfully, proceeds to push the workman off of the raft, there is going to be violence and there is going to be struggle. Meanwhile, the employer is not wholly to blame. Society has said to him that this coal mine is his property in the same sense his cottage and his garden are his property. His whole view of the complex situation when trouble arises is placed in that psychology that he thinks it is his. The other party owns nothing there and of course under the present State of the law has not even a right to his job.

Now, that situation is an impossible one in our country, it makes a feudalism greater than any English history has ever shown. If the whole country were in that plight—if all our industries presented the same conditions we should either cease to own private property in a short time or the Republic itself would perish. So much for the analysis. That the employer in those instances is sincere, is honest frequently, is illustrated by an incident that took place in the investigation of the Colorado operators recently in Congress.

It was suggested that the difficulties be arbitrated, and a very bright and doubtless very competent manager of that industry took his purse out of his pocket in this fashion [indicating] and said, "That is mine, there is nothing there to arbitrate."
